Dr. James Greig, delegate of the League of Nations for the repatriation of Russians, sends us from Kirin a very pressing appeal on behalf of the refugees in Manchuria. "There is acute distress among the Russian refugees in the Chinese Eastern Railway zone," he writes. "Appeals for help without intermission are being made in Harbin. Concerts, lotteries, and many other devices for raising money have been so long continued that the people there are pretty well tired of them. The League of Nations has so far no appropriation to meet this need. It is pitiable to see small Russian children with pallid faces, in ragged clothing, begging at the railway stations. A colonel's wife with four children said to me the day I was leaving Harbin, "For the sake of God give me some money, we haven't a kopeck in the house." To-day, a woman with tuberculosis said to me in my hospital, "My husband is out of work owing to the breaking up of the river, we have no bread to eat." Bishop Iona, who is carrying on a splendid work for orphans at Manchuria Station, told me with tears in his eyes that he did not know how to feed them any longer. With the end of the winter the lumber work in the wood-cutting concessions of the C.E.R. is much curtailed and many of the refugees employed there are pretty nearly starving. The hate and bitterness still existing between Reds and Whites closes the purses of many better-class Russian merchants who are unwilling to be involved in political strife. The future of the C.E.R. still being uncertain they consider it the best policy to stand aloof. The political situation also restrains Chinese officials and many foreigners in official positions from organizing help as they might otherwise do. Rumours of women spies of the Soviet Government and of secret enrolment of White ex-soldiers for a counter revolution in Siberia damp the ardour of the kind-hearted. These rumours, by the way, I myself do not believe. The fact remains, however, that the situation is pretty desperate. My full report and proposals were to be brought before the Council of the League of Nations last month but it is too early yet to hear what has been decided. Negotiations between the League of Nations and the Soviet Government regarding repatriation have been in progress for a month and a half. For the last three months I have been trying to secure financial help privately from likely sources to meet the more immediate needs, but have been unsuccessful. What am I to do? Thinking people know that time is required to bring any final solution." We very willingly place this appeal before our readers, even though we have a local Russian problem also. But any assistance will be most gratefully welcomed.

The Mexican Rebellion

After more than four months of struggle the Mexican rebellion is now said to be at an end, and presumably President Obregon is once more firmly established in power. After the whirlwind fashion in which it was launched, the outbreak has fizzled out in a more or less inglorious way, in fact most people probably came to the conclusion long ago that it was dead. This was not so, for small bands of insurgents have been holding out in the remoter districts, and so long as they remained in being there was always a chance of other malcontents joining them and the insurrection flaring up again. As a matter of fact, however, except during the first few weeks the rebellion exercised little influence on the outside world, for although to start with a certain amount of anxiety prevailed among silver interests with reference to the possibility of curtailed supplies, even these soon settled down to their normal line of operation. Now that the whole thing is at an end, the position of President Obregon may be regarded as very greatly strengthened, and it seems tolerable proof that the man best fitted to govern such a country as Mexico is one who knows the ins and outs of rebellions thoroughly. Obregon is such a man, for ever since 1910 he has been in the thick of them, sometimes as rebel, at others as leader of the Government troops. Obviously in the present case it is another application of the principle of setting a thief to catch a thief.

ACCORDING to reports from Canton, it has been decided to engage three German and two Japanese gunners to direct the bombardment of Waichow city when that place is besieged by Dr. Sun Yat-sen's troops. This step is said to be necessary because when the city was bombarded last year by Chinese gunners, their aim was usually very poor.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

THE ASSAULT ON MR. CAMPBELL

Denial of Any Punishment of Assailant by the Legation Police

Peking, Apr. 19.

The Chinese soldier who was arrested last Sunday on the section of the Wall under Legation control was handed over to-day to the Chinese police, who will pass him on to the Procurate Court for trial on the charge of assaulting foreigners. The trial will be attended by an observer appointed by the Diplomatic Body.

Reuter's Agency is authorised by the President of the Administrative Commission of the Diplomatic Quarter to say that the statement that has appeared in the Chinese Press to the effect that the soldier who assaulted Mr. Campbell and other foreigners on Sunday last had previously been punished by the Legation Police with 40 strokes of the bamboo for trespassing on the City Wall is absolutely without foundation in fact.

On the occasion of this man's first arrest by the Legation Police he was at once handed over to the Chinese authorities: when he was arrested the second time on a charge of assault he was detained in the police station pending instructions from the Dean of the Diplomatic Body as to his disposal. On neither occasion did he receive any punishment whatsoever at the hands of the Legation Police.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DEMONSTRATION BY SOLDIER'S SYMPATHIZERS.

Peking, Apr. 23.

A meeting of 300 persons at the Central Park yesterday, including some pro-Bolshevik Members of Parliament, regarding the arrest of the soldier who assaulted Mr. Campbell on April 13, passed eight resolutions some of which were pure nonsense while others revealed astonishing ignorance of the circumstances. The main points of the resolutions were that the members attending the meeting should telegraph to the British Government asking for the recall of Sir Ronald Macleay and urging the Chinese Government not to punish the soldier severely.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ANTI-POISON BUREAU IN KIANGSI

Indignation of the Gentry and Petition for Suppression

Peking, Apr. 19.

A telegram has been sent by the Cabinet to Gen. Tsai Cheng-hsun stating that a petition from Kiangsi gentry in Peking states that the Kiangsi authorities have established an antipoison bureau which issues licences to merchants to deal in morphia, white pills and other noxious drugs. The petition requests the Central Government to suppress this institution. In furtherance of their object Kiangsi gentry made demonstrations before the Presidential Palace and the Cabinet Office. At these meetings great indignation was shown.

The Cabinet points out that traffic in noxious drugs is prohibited by law, while several special proclamations have been issued emphasizing the necessity for the citizens of the Republic to observe these laws.

If the facts are as reported, not only will serious harm be done to residents of Kiangsi, but the circumstances will create international protests. The Cabinet, therefore, requests the Kiangsi Provincial authorities to abolish the bureau forthwith, in compliance with the law and the wishes of the people.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

"GENERAL POST" IN SZECHUAN

An Interchange of Forces: The Siege and Capture of Chengtu by Federal Troops

Chêngtu, Mar. 31.

On December 14 the Confederate (Szechuanese) Army were driven out of Chungking, which was occupied by the Federal (Northern) Army. The latter remained there for more than a month making plans for the final defeat of Gen. Hsiong Keh-wu.

Meanwhile the Confederate Army, under Gen. Lai Hsin-huei, retreated unmolested along the Great East Road to Neikiang. In the middle of January a conference of chiefs was held at Nanchingyi, which resulted in their splitting up into three forces, one under Gen. Liu Yu-chiu at Chêngtu, one under Gen. Lai Hsi-huei on the Great East Road, and one under Gen. Hsiong at Tungch'uan in the north-east of the province.

It was the plan of the Federal Generals to make a combined attack on Gen. Hsiong from the north, south, wast and west.

THE CAPTURE OF CHENGTU.

Gen. Yuan Tsu-ming, the Kueichou General and Commander-in-Chief, with Gen. Yang Sen as his Second-in-Command, advanced rapidly on Chêngtu by a route parallel to the Great East Road, held by Gen. Lai Hsin-huei, thus avoiding him. Within a day's march of Chêngtu, they suddenly wheeled round to the east against Gen. Hsiong, covering the distance to Tungch'uan by forced marches in two days. They arrived to find that the city had just been taken by the column from the north and that Gen. Hsiong's forces were scattered. The two Federal forces then united and were later joined by the force from the south, which had come up by the Suining River. They all pursued Gen. Hsiong to Chêngtu, which was then still in the possession of Gen. Liu Yu-chiu, supported halfheartedly by Gen. Lai Hsin-huei.

Chêngtu was occupied on February 8, and after perfunctory siege operations Generals Liu, Lai and Hsiong were all allowed to depart untouched. Gen. Liu fled to the Kiungchow district, sending in his submission and handing over the charge of the Third Army to Gen. Liu Hsiong. Gen. Lai Hsin-huei then entered into negotiations with the idea of turning over to the side of the Federals, but Gen. Hsiong with the other "die-hards" of the Kuomintang retreated in no great haste, viâ Luchow, towards the Kueichow frontier, followed at a considerable distance by troops sent by Gen. Yuan and Gen. Liu Hsiang. These two proceeded to Tzeliutsing, presumably to tap this main source of revenue of the province, leaving Gen. Yang Sen to administer the government at Chêngtu.

TIBETAN AFFAIRS.

The brigand attack on Batang in last November was finally repulsed after two battles. This was chiefly due to a popular rising inspired by the Rana (Nankang) Lama's cruelty to the people of Yakalo, and resulted in the Lama being driven out to take refuge on the Yunnan border.

On the North Road and at Tachienlu all is quiet.

The Third Army, after retiring from Chêngtu to Kiungchou, invaded the territory under the jurisdiction of the Border Commissioner, Gen. Chao Hsia-ling, whom they defeated at Mingshan, afterwards occupying Yachow and compelling him to retreat along the Tachienlu Road.

At the present time Yachow remains in the hands of the Third Army (still loyal to Gen. Liu Yu-chiu), but the Federal Commanders have taken no active steps to dislodge them.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

IMPROVED FINANCE IN KIAOCHOU

New Bank Established and Temporary Stringency Now Relieved

Tsingtao, Apr. 17.

Sanction has been secured from the Central Government by the Kiaochou Territorial Administration for the organization of a bank to issue its own currency in the regular denominations. Mr. T. C. Kuo, the Director of General Affairs, made the announcement to-day, stating that the bank would open for business on May 1 and on that day would put its new notes into circulation. A distinctive design will be employed for the new currency and arrangements for printing are now being made.

The assets of the bank will amount to $3,000,000, and with these funds available for transfer, as needed, to the Territorial Treasury, the present financial stringency will be relieved and the territory's financial status put on a strong and permanent footing.

The wretched financial condition in which the former régime allowed itself to become involved, has reacted severely against the new administration and has been a serious handicap. Obligations, which the Hsiung régime failed to meet, have been presented to the new administration for payment and, although the latter has made a manful attempt to liquidate these and restore confidence in territorial affairs, it has been totally unable to cope with the situation.

FORMER LIABILITIES.

Besides these old debts, including materials and supplies purchased, salaries and wages, some of which were months in arrears, and other obligations, for which the old régime should take full responsibility, the new administration is faced with the problem of finding funds for the efficient carrying on of all departments and the financing of new improvements and undertakings.

Possession of $3,000,000 will put an entirely new aspect on the matter and will place the administration on a firm financial basis.

SOURCE OF CURRENCY.

The new currency will be issued against the revenue payable to the territorial administration from all sources in the current fiscal year. This revenue is expected to go well over that figure.

Special ceremonies will mark the opening of the bank and the Governor will give an address. For the present the offices of the bank will be in the Administration Building.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

No Financial Support for Admiral Wen's Squadron

Tsingtao, Apr. 19.

"The Tsingtao Administration will positively not support Admiral Wen's squadron," Governor Kao En-hung declared to-day through his private secretary.

The Governor strongly denied reports that the Administration would advance sums to Admiral Wen Shu-teh for the up-keep of his squadron here. He said that he felt in no sense under an obligation to furnish financial support to a naval detachment, which was part of the strength of the nation. Any navy was a national affair and no territory or province should be compelled to stand the entire burden. The surplus revenue of the Kiaochou Administration would be forwarded to Peking, and if the Central Government saw fit to use all or part of it for the support of the squadron, that was their affair.

The Administration has granted a charter to the newly formed International Recreation Club to operate the old race course of Huichuan, which has been abandoned since 1922.

THE DRUG TRAFFIC.

A dozen large packages of morphine and heroin, valued at $15,000, were publicly burned in front of the yamên on Monday afternoon. The drugs were confiscated from a Japanese, who was attempting to smuggle them ashore. They bore the seal of a Japanese pharmaceutical firm.

AN INFORMATION BUREAU.

The Governor is forming an Information Bureau for the purpose of disseminating information about the city and Kiaochou Territory. This will be supplied upon application to business men and tourists. Special efforts will be made to ascertain business conditions and other special subjects of interest to business men will be dealt with.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

GEN. YANG SEN EMPLOYING BANDITS?

Mienchow Report

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mienchow, Sze., Apr. 7.

On March 22 the new Mission hospital which Dr. J. H. Lechler, of the C.M.S., has been building, was formally opened. It is a fine building and will stand, we hope for many years, a monumente of the good will of foreigners towards China.

Standing as it does in the centre of the district where the two missionaries were murdered last year, it is admirably placed for preaching a lesson of brotherhood. Dr. Lechler is to be congratulated on having achieved a piece of work which the Great War set back for a time. He will have the assistance of Dr. Hsiao, a young medical graduate of the West China Christian University.

Brigands in the Hanchow district have been falling out; two bands of them put up a great fight and then military officers in Hanchow went out and helped them come to terms. In Mienchow recently while one band of soldiers were guarding the city some of the regiment looted houses near the South Gate!

A persistent report says that Yang Sen is employing the bandits to help him clear up Szechuan, and reform the province generally.

A friend writing from Chungking says that the Lokiang magistrate, whom I reported recently as killed, met his fate for demanding the taxes for the 19th year of the Republic, so the Shuen Tien Chiao rose up and killed him.

THE NANKING TUCHUN'S BIRTHDAY

Marshal Chi's Refusal to Accept Presents or Receive Callers

Nanking, Apr. 20.

Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, Governor-General of Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui, having, as has already been reported, refused to accept the suggestion of his councillors for an elaborate celebration of his 40th birthday last Friday, the occasion was observed in a most simple manner.

Apart from rejecting all presents which were sent to him by his subordinates and admirers in all parts of the country, Marshal Chi decided to avoid all pomp and ceremony by not appearing in public and by refusing to see his closest friends and representatives of high officials, of whom there were several thousand present. Not a single person was received by the Governor-General on Friday, but a simple dinner was given on the following day.

SIR R. TAGORE AT NANKING.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore, the celebrated Indian poet and philosopher, called on the Governor-General this morning and had a long conversation with him, urging him to promote peace in order that the old civilization of the East might be preserved. Marshal Chi explained to the famous poet that, although he was a soldier, he was one who loved peace and order which he meant to maintain to the best of his ability. He thanked Sir Rabindranath for his kind advice and assured him that he would always observe his words.

CAPTIVE JAPANESE OFFICERS

Peking, Apr. 18.

The sudden withdrawal of Gen. Tan Tze-mu from Hokiang has caused a further complication over the release of the two Japanese officers of the Yihyang Maru, who have been in captivity in Szechuan for seven months. After arrangements had been completed by Mr. Chou Tze-chun, representative of the Waichiaopu, and the Japanese Consul at Chungking, for the ransom of the Japanese officers on payment of $100,000., difficulty arose over the matter of providing that amount in ready cash. The local authorities asserted that they could not do so, and the question was referred to Peking. Eventually the Government and the Japanese Legation made arrangements whereby the money was made available at Chungking.

The agreement with Gen. Tan was that the money should be handed over to him or his agent at Hokiang. The prisoners were in a village near that town. The Japanese Consul returned to Chungking, while Mr. Chou and an official of the Japanese Consulate remained at Hokiang. On April 10 Gen. Tan left Hokiang for an unknown destination. On April 12, Mr. Chou and the Japanese official left Hokiang with the intention of returning to Chungking. Shortly afterwards, on the same day, the Consul arrived at Hokiang and was informed that Gen. Tan had moved away and taken the prisoners with him. The Consul is remaining at Hokiang in the hope of getting into touch with Gen. Tan.

It is believed that military operations on the part of the Northern forces made it necessary for Gen. Tan to move his forces hurriedly, and it is hoped that the release of the prisoners will be effected soon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Apr. 24.

The whereabouts of the officers of the Yiyang Maru is still a mystery. The Japanese Council at Hokiang left for Luchow on April 15, where he requested Gen. Tan Hsi-mou's chief, Gen. Lai Hsin-huei, to communicate with Gen. Tan with a view to the release of the captives. Gen. Lai promised to do his best. The ransom of $100,000 will be taken back to Chongking.—Reuter's Pacific Sesvice.

EDUCATION IN CHINA ON FOREIGN LINES

Peking, Apr. 14.

The scarcity of funds for education in China, which has been one of the most difficult problems of Chinese Governments in recent years, appears likely to be followed by embarrassment of quite another kind in the future, if all the Powers follow the example of the United States Government in allocating their shares of the Boxer Indemnity to education in China.

There is no doubt that the Russians have a plan for education of Chinese on modern Russian lines, with the Russian indemnity. Britain is considering the allocation of the British indemnity for education of Chinese, and the Minister of Education apparently hopes that the Japanese indemnity will be made available for education by means of a scheme of co-operation between Japan and China based on "Oriental Civilization."

With this object in view, it is reported that Mr. Chang Kuo-kan has appointed a committee to draft proposals for "Sino-Japanese Co-operation in developing Oriental Civilization." The committee consists of Messrs. Tang Chung, Tang Tsuai-ying, Chin Fan, Cheng Jen-chung, Fan Hung-tai and Chu Nien-tsu.

It is proposed to establish great libraries of Oriental works in Peking and Tokio, which will be available for students in both countries by frequent exchanges. It has been suggested that the "Four-Volume Library" should be the basis of the Chinese library.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TIENTSIN'S HANDS OUT TO THE SEA

The Long Struggle for Water-borne Trade and to Keep Direct Touch with Salt Water

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, Apr. 19.

The promise held out in M. Perrier's report on the plans of the Haiho River Conservancy's Chief Engineer, that it will be possible in the near future for ocean-going vessels of 26-foot draught to berth at Tangku and for ships drawing 20-feet to berth at the Tientsin Bund, brings to mind the 60-years' struggle of shippers to maintain waterborne commerce and a direct access to the sea. To those who have come here in recent years and remained or passed on their way, and to perhaps the majority of traders enjoying the facilities of this port, to which 1,500 ships now come and go annually, very little is known of the trials and fights of the early pioneers, who made those facilities possible. By a "griffin" merchant, who daily sees strings of one and two thousand ton steamers arriving and departing in this muddy narrow water-alleyway, now bearing the once ironic name, "Sea River," little credence would be given to a statement that the same stream was once condemned by a Customs Commissioner to be "almost useless as a waterway," and that for six months of one year the depth of water was scarcely more than five feet. The fact, nevertheless, remains recorded in the history of the port and the present and future possibilities of Tientsin shipping are a fruition of years of not unromantic struggle against the elements by men who were handicapped both by lack of funds and by the aids of modern engineering science.

1858 THE FIRST RECORD.

The earliest record of foreign ships entering Tientsin, which give us any definite idea as regards the depth of water in the river, is the invasion of the Peiho, which name included what is now known as the Haiho, by a fleet of six British and French auxiliary gunboats and small frigates in 1858. They brought the British and French Ambassadors, Lord Elgin and Baron du Gros, on a wartime mission that resulted in the Treaties of Tientsin. These ships, drawing, as far as can be reckoned, about 12 feet, came up to the Chinese city and anchored just below the Cathedral Nôtre Dames des Victoires where the recent Cathedral Cutting was made in the Peiho. Only one of them grounded on the way up, but it was towed off by about 400 coolies. A similar fleet entered the river by force in 1860, to obtain ratification of the Treaties, in which Tientsin was added as a Treaty port.

The following year, 1861, 111 ships, totalling a tonnage of 27,161, or an average of 244 tons each, entered and left the port carrying the first year's trade of five and a half million taels value. Thirty-nine were British, 18 were American, 13 were Danish, 13 were from the free city of Hamburg and three were from Prussian ports. No record is available to show what proportion were sailing and auxiliary vessels, although from subsequent records sailing ships must have been predominant. Customs figures made no differentiation until 1880. There is here again no means of telling what was the draught of these ships. They all came up to the Tientsin bund, for there were no lighters in those days to effect transhipment at Taku. It is considered that ships of 244 tons could not have drawn much more than 12 to 15 feet, not even the deep-keeled sailing vessels. In any case history does not mention them meeting with any navigation difficulties in the river, in spite of the fact that it then wound a tortuous course of 50 miles between two points, Tientsin and Taku, that are 28 miles apart by direct line.

YEARLY TONNAGE RISING.

By 1870 the number of ships had increased to 268, with total tonnage of 109,226 and an average of 408. Ten years later, 1880, the numbers increased to 407 ships, total tonnage 245,765, and an average of 600 tons. Thus, in 20 years the average tonnage of each ship more than doubled. Whether the rise in average tonnage, with consequent increase in draught, or the gradual silting up of the river, created the first difficulties in Haiho navigation is not clear. Doubtless both causes contributed equally, for in 1886 the river had become so shallow and ships experienced such great trouble reaching Tientsin Bund, that the Customs Commissioner, Mr. Detring, said in his annual report that the Haiho had become "the bugbear of the ports." Dredging had been tried but the river had shown no signs of improvement and the Commissioner's report suggested "cutting through the necks of several of the bends to make an almost straight channel to the sea," and that "the expense of the scheme was not held to be too great in proportion to the benefits which would be derived from it."

Again in 1888 the same source says "Navigation of the river was very difficult. Northwest gales blew water out of the Gulf of Pechili, leaving frequently a succession of seven and eight foot tides on the bar. At one time even lighters could not make the passage from Taku to Tientsin and 24 vessels were counted at one time lying tide-bound on or at the Taku Bar. In summer the river silted up so badly in the upper reaches that they could not be navigated and on July 12 a temporary anchorage was made 12 miles down river from Tientsin, where all vessels loaded and unloaded cargo. The river became worse later and by December 13 there was only five feet of water on the Bar."

TRADE INCREASES.

However, in spite of these difficulties the trade of Tientsin continued to increase. Ships came in ever increasing numbers, and with the assistance of lighters at Tientsin when the river was low, managed to keep the commerce on the ascendent. Several experimental steamers were built with a view to navigating the shallow parts of the river and Bar. One of them had its hull so shaped that two concave tunnels, one on each side of the keel, were formed when it ran aground. The theory was to force water through these tunnels, by the action of the propeller when set full speed astern, in order to wash away a hollow underneath to permit the vessel to float off. Other coasting vessels were made especially shallow, by building them with broad beam and other special constructions. The river appeared to give less trouble for a few years following 1890, although shippers and shipping companies continued to wage a fight to overcome its vagaries. In 1894 one of the many big floods which have devastated North China caused freshets to deposit much silt in the river, with the result that where there existed 20 feet in the river channel at high tide it decreased to 12 feet. All steamers, except one, the Lienshing, transferred cargo outside the Bar. Ships entering the port in 1890 numbered 585, with total tonnage of 449,617, or an average of 768 tons, an increase of 168 tons over those 10 years before. By 1899 the figures went up to 846 vessels of total tonnage of 791,879, an average of 934 tons each.

A CRISIS IN 1897.

In 1897 matters came to a head when "for more than six months," says the Commissioner of Customs, "the depth of water ranged between five and eight feet. Only one steamer reached the Bund and all cargo was transferred in lighters, with consequent great delay, damage and pilferage."

The previous year, 1896, the Tientsin Chamber of Commerce had appointed Mr. A. de Linde to make a survey of the river and bar channels, but it was not until 1890 that Viceroy Li Hung-chang was induced to permit the task to be carried out. Even then the Chinese officials opposed it so strongly that it had to be abandoned. The Chinese were won over eventually by the successor to Li Hung-chang, Viceroy Wang Wen-shao, who agreed with the British and French Consulate-General, Mr. H. B. Bristow and Count de Chaylard, and the Chairman of the British Municipal Council, Mr. Cousins, with Mr. de Linde, as Adviser, to undertake the beginning of conservancy work at a cost of Tls. 250,000. This constituted the first Haiho Commission, a representative mixed body, including the Customs Taotai, two Chinese officials, the Customs Commissioner and representatives of the different shipping and lighter companies, foreign concessions and General Chamber of Commerce. The new Commission got as far as erecting three locks at points down the river, but the Boxer trouble put an end to it. However, Mr. de Linde carried on under the British Military in 1901, until the Tientsin Provisional Government appointed a committee to prosecute the work. This scheme, with the passing of that temporary administration, resulted in the work being taken under the authority of a committee composed of the British Consul-General, the Customs Commissioner and the Customs Taotai. Changes have been made in this Commission but the work has gone on continuously ever since.

"Our chronic local trouble" as the river was called in 1897, has been conquered by the remarkable ingenuity of the Engineers of the Haiho Conservancy Board, which has, in spite of a limited supply of funds, shortened the river from 50 to 35 miles, by numerous cuttings, deepened it from "five to eight feet" to nearly 20, and thus made it possible for 1,447 ships, of an average tonnage of 1,350, to trade with this port in 1923.

NEW BRITISH CONSULATE AT TIENTSIN

Treasury Approves "in Principle" of Purchase of Major Nathan's Residence

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, Apr. 17.

The British Consulate-General will, in the course of the next two years, move from its old site in Consular Road to the house and grounds at 1 Racecourse Road, formerly the residence of Major Nathan while he was General Manager of the Kailan Mining Administration. When the sale transaction with the Kailan Mining Administration is completed by final sanction of the British Government, which is expected shortly, the Consul-General, Mr. W. P. Ker, C.M.G., will immediately take up his residence in the house. The supplementary offices, court and safe, will be transferred from their old site as soon as new buildings can be erected on the grounds at 1 Racecourse Road.

Figures and details of sale were cabled home to the Treasury some time ago and a cable reply has just been received approving the sale "in principle." The price and terms of purchase have not yet been disclosed.

While the new Consular Offices are being built, the house Mr. Ker now occupies will be given over to Consular uses to relieve congestion in the present inadequate offices. What will become of the present land and buildings, cannot be ascertained, but their disposal is said to have no bearing on the matter of the present transaction. At one time a Japanese shipping company wished to purchase the river frontage, for offices and godowns, while another firm wished to buy the Victoria Road frontage for an office and residential building. There are, however, several likely purchasers in the market for such a valuable business location, and it will not surprise many if the old site should be sold almost immediately.

PEKING, Apr. 15. The Tuli of Chihli, Marshal Wang Chan-p'ing, left Peking at half past eight this morning. A large number of civil and military officials were present to see him off.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA'S JUDICIAL ATROCITIES

Honan Magistrate's Crimes: Innocent Prisoner Tortured to Death

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kuciteh, Ho., Apr. 15.

Two barbarous instances of Chinese criminal jurisprudence have just come to my notice.

It seems that about four years ago a man living in the country was visited by a band of robbers who killed his son's wife and wounded his son in the course of their operations in cleaning up all valuables in the house.

The victim suspected three local good-for-nothings in the crowd and sent in a petition informing against them, whereupon they were arrested. The local military leader examined one of the prisoners with the aid of a bamboo according to the usual procedure. When two beatings failed to force a confession, the wretched man was strung up and heated irons were applied to his bare flesh, so his uncle informed me. As they were careless in watching him, thinking no doubt he had not enough life left in him to need very careful guarding, he escaped. He was taken ill, however, and brought back to his home where the people were naturally afraid of the consequences to themselves should he die on their premises. He was taken to the prison again where he soon expired, his uncle, one of the most respected townspeople, in the meanwhile supplying him with food.

The victim of the robbery next sent in a petition to the magistrate accusing the uncle of arranging the escape. When the nephew was brought back and died the uncle was further charged with having poisoned him to get rid of evidence.

It seems that as this prosecutor was a victim to the robbers in the first place he is at liberty to send in accusations against whom he will, if they have no influence, as having been concerned in the original robbery.

DEATH OF THREE MORE.

The magistrate himself, who seems to be a very able and intelligent man, told me that seven arrests had been made on the word of this man and not one confession had yet been made. Three of these men have died in confinement and the others are still in gaol. There is no evidence against them so they cannot be tried and condemned, and they cannot be released or the magistrate himself would be reported to the Civil Governor by the original victim for having released malefactors. Naturally a magistrate is not anxious for this to happen. Even so, however, this particular official is not escaping trouble, for a few months ago the original victim (one feels capital letters should be used) added a new name to his list of accused. Only then did the magistrate refuse to arrest any more men so long after the event, unless some evidence was forthcoming.

This seemed a very unreasonable stand to take to the original victim and could only be explained by the fact that undue influence had been used so he has now sent in a petition to the Civil Governor against three members of the community accusing them of influencing the magistrate so that he should not grant the warrants. It is not yet apparent what the further outcome will be, but in the meantime several untried and uncondemned men (without friends of influence, of course) are languishing in prison, while accusations are being broadcast against absolutely innocent men because it seems that sentiment demands that a man who was wronged as this man was in the first place, must be allowed a little latitude in working off his injured feelings.

A SECOND HORROR.

In my last letter I mentioned about the little fracas here in which the military took part. It seems that the attackers on Mr. Mee's house were men who had billeted themselves in neighbouring dwellings and were known to him from the fact that they had previously tried without success to "borrow" money from him.

On this night when Gen. Wang's yamên troops set fire to the buildings there they thought the real time had come for them to work off their spleen and at the same time make a little for themselves. They therefore scaled the wall of Mee's house from a lane at the back and having first shot him they helped themselves.

When the mutiny spluttered out they went back to their quarters ready to be good soldiers again until the next opportunity. Unfortunately for them their victim had not died as they supposed and on recovering a little at the hospital was able to accuse four of his assailants by name. Thus they were picked out by the officer commanding, but then the problem was how to punish them since their comrades would probably resent anything drastic being done, a fellow-feeling doubtless making them wondrous kind. The question was solved by informing the four men that since they had been recognized and formally accused they would have to return home and lie low for a little while. They were given $3 each and escorted to the railway station, four miles north of the city, and word was sent to the troops there, who were not of their company, to arrest and shoot them.

This sentence was carried out. These four men were guilty of attempted murder, but one cannot help feeling some sympathy for the poor wretches going off more or less thankfully to their homes with $3 each in their pockets whilst certain death was waiting for them up the road. Details of their killing were given me which may or may not be true. When they got to the station they were taken into one of the military compounds, I was told, and ordered to change into civilian clothes, as it would not be convenient for them to go off in uniforms. They started to make the exchange and when stripped, one of them was shot dwn. The others, seeing what was coming, started to bolt for it naked and were shot down as they ran. Thus four good uniforms were saved for the army.

A NEW ORGANIZATION IN SZECHUAN

Anti-Militarists Claiming to Be Invulnerable

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mienchow, Sze., Mar. 29.

There is a much unrest about the district, and it is not easy to be definite in the way of information. The broad facts seem to be that the people are heartily sick of the troubles that surround them through the soldiers and the brigands, whom they class together: also there is a body of people going about said to be strong. They go by various names such as Lien-ho Tuan 連合團 Shuen Tien Kiao 順天教 and are loosely alluded to by the people as Boxers. There is apparently, though, nothing about them like the Boxers of 1900.

They do not appear to be specially anti-republican or anti-militarist. It is said that certain of their number are from Honan and are exhorting the people to remember that it is the people who should rule. They dress in red knickers, and wear nothing above their waist. They suppose themselves to be impervious to bullets as they are followers of Heaven, they have no guns and are armed only with long knives and spears.

Not long ago brigands attacked a small village near Mienchu, and did a great deal of damage. The people invited some of the Shuen Tien Kiao to punish them. They came and took possession of the village. The soldiers at Mienchu then went against them and the gruesome story is that the soldiers took many heads back to Mienchu in baskets. Another story is of Lokiang, a city 90 li from Mienchow. These people are said to have killed the city magistrate, and then come on to Jinshanba, a market 30 li nearer Mienchow. It is reported that the Mienchow people had a narrow escape about 20 li away from Jinshanba. Last night the walls of Mienchow were lighted and watchers were on the look out for the most part of the night. Sentries were posted round the city during yesterday, and would allow no one to leave the city for some hours.

BIG NEW HOSPITAL IN SHANSI

American Mission Outlay of $80,000 Gold: An Up-to-Date Equipment

From Our Own Correspondent.

Taiku, Sha., April 15.

On April 10, the American Board Mission Hospital in Fenchow, Shansi, was formally opened. A very large audience was in attendance upon the exercises of the day. The opening address was given by the head physician of the hospital, Dr. Percy T. Watson. He was followed by the principal speaker, Dr. C. E. Lim of the Peking Union Medical College. Other speakers were the Fenyang District Magistrate, Mr. Kwo, and Colonel Yin of the Chinese army, who represented His Excellency Governor Yen. A large number of congratulatory messages were received from various parts of the Far East. Visitors were present from Peking, Paotingfu, Tientsin, Tenchow, and from a number of cities in Shansi. At the conclusion of the exercises a dinner was served to about seven hundred guests. The hospital was thrown open for inspection by the public through the day, and in the evening motion pictures representing various phases of medical progress were shown. Doctors J. H. Ingram of Peking and C. E. Lim of the P. U. M. C. giving the explanatory speeches.

The new hospital, which has been several years in building, represtnts an outlay of G. $80,000. This sum includes the cost of site and equipment. Wards for men and women are under one roof, with the offices and administrative quarters of the staff between. A complete heating system has been installed, and the hospital is also equipped with electric lights, telephones, and running water. The equipment of sterilizers is one of the most complete to be found in a mission hospital in the Far East. The capacity of the hospital is 105 beds, though at present but 70 beds are ready for use.

The present staff includes two American and two Chinese physicians, one foreign nurse and a full complement of Chinese nurses, and a foreign engineer. The hospital also has an American business manager who has recently arrived and has now taken over the duties of that office.

The difficulties attendant upon the construction and equipment of so modern a hospital plant in the interior of China have been enormous. The one item of transportation, especially as regards heavy machinery, to a point seventy miles inland from a railway station has been a real problem. That these difficulties have one by one been met and overcome is largely due to the indomitable energy, optimism and preseverance of the head physician, Dr. Watson. His reward is being found in the steadily increasing stream of patients that is flowing through the doors of the hospital to-day.

A NEW CHURCH.

On April 9 the corner stone of a new institutional church was laid in this city. The building is expected to be completed by September. The cost when complete will be something over $20,000. This is, I believe, the first church of its type to be projected in Shansi. It will be open seven days in the week and engaged in efforts to meet the varied social and educational needs of the community. The auditorium, which will be the largest in the city, will be open to use for any object not inconsistent with the Christian spirit. At the exercises on April 9, the stone was placed by Mr. W. C. Fairfield, Vice-Principal of the Oberlin-Shansi Schools, and a brief speech was made by the district magistrate, Mr. An.

EXCESSIVE DROUGHT.

Dry weather prevails over central Shansi and a good deal of apprehension is felt for the wheat crop. In some neighbourhoods the wheat is already dead and the fields are being ploughed over. This condition is reflected in the rising price of flour.

BESSEL'S ASSAILANT TO BE RETRIED

Peking, Apr. 18.

At an interview which the British Minister had this afternoon with Dr. Wellington Koo on the latter's recovery from his recent illness, Dr. Koo gave Sir Ronald Maclay an assurance that Mr. Bessel's assailants would be retried in the presence of a British Assessor.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HONAN MAGISTRATES' IMPROVEMENTS

Tree-planting and Raids on Gamblers: The Influence of Wu Pei Fu

From Our Own Correspondent.

Huaiking, Ho., Apr. 14.

Recently the district officials in Chin, Wen, Meng and Tsiyuan hsiens have been changed and now all four hsiens have magistrates appointed from Loyang. These new officials are taking a great interest in tree planting. All the main roads now have trees planted along both sides. Some vacant or unused pieces of land have been set out with trees and also small parks have been planted in the cities and market towns. Most of the trees are willow and some of them are very small but if cared for will soon help to take away the bare appearance of the land.

POLICE RAIDS.

Many raids have been made on gambling and opium dens recently by the police. Such action would seem to commend itself to the best citizens, but for the most part little mention is made of the good work; one mostly hears the criticism that this is only another way of bringing money into the coffers of the officials.

During the past month bad characters have been less active than formerly although the bandit menace is by no means cleared up. Great anxiety is felt because of the long continued drought, and crime follows closely in the trail of poverty. Whole stretches of wheat fields may be seen turned brown and scorched by the dry weather. Only the fields that can be watered show signs of a coming harvest. Some of the grain dealers are shipping in grain but prices are increasing daily on all cereals.

ONE WAY OF SAVING MONEY.

In Tsiyuan city the Seventh Day Adventists have been trying to increase in grace by fasting. Several have fasted for various periods of time some seven days, some 10 days, some even 20 days. However, one Adventist by the name of Lu greatly wished to fast 40 days and had fasted for that period although very weak at the end of 40 days. When his time of fasting was over a friend treated him to some peanuts; afterwards he suddenly took ill and died. Some others who were fasting, it is said, have now broken their fast.

REVIVAL OF BUDDHISM.

A change in method has brought Buddhism to the forefront. At all the country fairs and theatricals either by having a special tent or from the theatrical platform Buddhism is being preached, the main burden of the message given to the uneducated and the women especially is vegetarianism and good works. Last week was the annual Lao Chun Ting pilgrimage. This high mountain has a temple erected on one of its high and dangerous peaks. Several hundred steps have to be climbed before reaching the top. Most women with bound feet made this ascent on all fours. This year at all the little temple resting places along the way leading to the Temple peak Buddhist preachers arrested the passing crowds and preached to them. On account of the present drought more than in former years climbed the dizzy height of Lao Chun Ting.

TAGORE AT HANGCHOW

Lecture on Unity of Nations as Swaraj Might See It

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Apr. 16.

The Indian of reputation whom I mentioned in my last communication is Rabindranath Tagore. He addressed a meeting of several thousands of students in the Educational Association Auditorium this afternoon, in beautiful English.

He emphasized the unity of nations, and brotherohood of man. We are pathmakers, not for profit or power, but for brotherhood. Improved communications made it easy to get together, but tourists only saw the surface of life, and had no time for mentality to come close to humanity.

Many come near to each other by geographical excursions, but do not establish spiritual relationships. A crowd is not a community. He said the channel of communication between the Indians and the Chinese was overgrown with weeds, but the line could still be seen. If there was the real love for man all the mischief in the world would be removed. Natural bias and prejudice must be overcome. We are blind to the realities of life, and good in others, because we see them through the mists and do not really know man.

Let us come together as brothers, joining hands, guests and friends doing it naturally and simply, and the race problem will be solved. Not uniformity, which is dead and external, but unity, which is living and profound, is what is needed.

In closing, he said that we are all the children of the immortal, and we dwell in the Kingdom of Heaven and when we realize this through some illumination of the soul we shall work for the elevation of humanity.

He told the audience that he hoped to tell them of the object of his mission to another occasion.

WUSIH CHURCH WORK

Training for Chinese Nurses: A Memorial Chapel: Chinese Gentry's Assistance

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wusih, Ku., Apr. 19.

The American Church Mission has had two interesting events during the past week. On Friday, the 11th, work was begun on the home for Chinese women nurses at St. Andrew's Hospital. The money for the nurses' home was entirely donated by Chinese gentry of Wusih.

On Sunday, April 12, St. Andrew's Hospital Memorial Chapel was consecrated by Bishop Graves. The chapel was presented in memory of Mrs. R. T. W. Duke of Virginia, the Holy Table in memory of Mrs. Yang, mother of the hospital chaplain, and the cross in memory of Willoughby Lee. The service of consecration was very simple and impressive and included a short address by the Bishop, in which he brought out the relation of the religious to the material work of hospital as being like the relation of the soul to the body.

The Door of Hope, established by local gentry, held a meeting at the home of Dr. Lee on Saturday, April 12. Two girls have already been received and are now undergoing treatment in St. Andrew's Hospital. The opening of this much needed institution is made possible by the kind cooperation and assistance of Miss Abercrombie of the Shanghai Door of Hope.

JAPANESE SUBMARINE TRAGEDY

Tokio, Apr. 23.

The funeral of the victims of the submarine disaster, when Submarine 43 sank after a collision with the warship Tatsuta during manoeuvres off Sasebo, took place yesterday with naval honours at Sasebo. The submarine was recently raised and the bodies recovered.

The newspapers this morning publish articles eulogizing the bravery of those killed, and also print their full diaries.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MURDERER'S FEARFUL PUNISHMENT

A Son Who Shot His Father: The Greatest Crime in the Chinese Code

From Our Own Correspondent.

Haichow, Ku., Apr. 12.

Shortly before China New Year I learned of the burning in a region frequently visited of a man who had murdered his father, but as such severe punishments are not uncommon, it was not regarded as worthy of reporting. But a late visit brings to light some particulars that are rather unique—at least in the writer's experience.

The victim was a young man who had been known to be living the life of a robber and his father had taken occasion to warn him of his danger and exhort him to reform. The son, enraged at his father's exhortations and rebukes, deliberately shot and killed the latter.

His older brother and uncles immediately effected the capture of the murderer and at a conclave of the family clan it was determined that he should receive as terrible a punishment as they could invent. Naturally they felt themselves unskilled in the art of torture and took their victim over to the nearest camp of soldiers and requested the commanding officer to execute him in the most spectacular way he could invent. The soldiers who were no longer entertained by the daily executions at the hands of a firing squad naturally took a great interest in the affair and did their best to satisfy the demands of the enraged family.

Market day just before New Year was selected at the best date and many thousands were present to witness the scene. The murderer was suspended by his feet, only his trousers being left on him. These were soaked with kerosene and fired from the top, and a bundle of reeds was also fixed so that his feet and legs would be slowly consumed. Chinese observers are not always accurate in their estimate of time but they claim that this slow burning continued for fully two hours.

The victim was throughout determined to show his courage and in spite of his awful sufferings kept up a constant flow of reviling against his family. To put a stop to this abuse one of the soldiers ripped open his cheeks with a knife but this was absolutely ineffectual in checking the flow of curses. Finally when the white-hot lava of his maledictions became utterly unendurable to the watching family, one of them piled a heap of straw beneath the victim's head and fired it, bringing to an everlasting silence the tongue that nothing had ever before tamed.

I was not able to hear one word of commiseration for the victim. To my query whether anyone felt that such tortures were unjustifiable there was an emphatic denial. It was pointed out that his own family were the directors of the affair and that he got only his just deserts. He had committed the greatest crime in the Chinese Code and no possible punishment could be too severe.

15,000 MORE TROOPS FOR MARSHAL WU

Popular General Secedes from Southern Cause in Szechuan

From Our Own Correspondent.

Luchow, Sze., Mar. 27.

The conference between the 1st and 2nd Armies has resulted in some sort of an agreement as far as Lai Hsin-huei is concerned. He has had enough fighting and is willing, with his 10,000 or 15,000 men, to throw in his lot with the northern faction, for the present at least.

He has been given charge of one of the central districts of the province, including the cities of Fushun, Lungchang and Neichang, but rumour has it that Wu Peh-fu proposes to give him charge of a district in north-eastern Szechuan, adjoining Hupeh province, presumably in order that he can keep a closer watch on him.

Lai is one of the most popular generals in Szechuan. His troops are usually well-behaved and he has a name for robber-suppression. His troops are now passing through the outskirts of Luchow on their way north. The other first army chiefs, with the exception of Hsiong and Dan, who have probably left the province entirely, are still somewhere around Yungning. They must still be in charge of a considerable body of troops but, since they have little or no ammunition, they are not likely to renew the war for the present.

ANOTHER CASUALTY ON UPPER YANGTZE.

The weather still continues very dry here and the river, which was rising a little, has been falling again. No steamer has appeared yet, as the Kiang Yuan, which left Chungking about ten days ago, ran on the rocks. Considerable loss of cargo and some loss of life are reported. Apparently no foreigners were on board. The Kiang Yuan was owned by the Ho Kiang merchants and was one of the small boats flying the Chinese flag which ply between Chungking and Suifu in low water.

Mr. Barrie's boats have not ventured out of Chungking yet.

TWO MARKET TOWNS LOOTED

Fresh Bandit Outrages in Tsaoshih Area: Band 500 Strong

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, Hup., Apr. 12.

Having just met one who was in Teian last week, I am able to supplement from a reliable source that the details which I sent yesterday about the band of robbers who have recently moved from Tsaoshih to the Suichow region.

Teian is a city about 100 miles north from Hankow and 50 miles east of Tsaoshih, and so lay more or less on the line of movement of the robbers. Penglingshih, a large market town 40 li north of Teian was looted and burned on Saturday, April 4.—(This is one of the towns which was plundered last year, and about 40 of the inhabitants were carried away as hostages and kept for several months wandering about with the robbers and suffering great hardships).

On Saturday evening the missionaries in Teinan were warned by the city magistrate that it was necessary for them to leave the place immediately. A personal visit to the yamên procured a few hours' respite, and most of the night was spent in collecting together what necessities could be taken in a hurried flight. But fortunately, in the morning came news that the situation was less dangerous, and the city was no longer threatened. An engagement had taken place between the military and the robbers, in which 17 soldiers were killed, though the robbers had the worst of it and were beaten back. The band is supposed to have been 400 or 500 strong, but their losses are unknown. They retreated, as I reported yesterday, in a north easterly direction to the region near Suichow.

DIFFICULTIES OF THE UPPER RIVER

Pakiang Stranded and Other Vessels Held Up Owing to Lack of Water

Ichang, Apr. 16.

The str. Pakiang, flying the Italian flag, struck the rocks below Yehtan and is badly holed with her engine-room and forehold flooded. She has been beached and salvage gear is being forwarded. The passengers are safe.

Later.

The Pakiang, which met with a very bad accident just below Yehtan, is reported to be lying with her stern in the air and her bows low in the water. If the river should rise rapidly, it would be a very difficult matter to salvage her.

The river remains at an extraordinary low mark. It rose about three feet a week ago, and it was expected that the spring rise had come. But, instead of continuing to rise, it has fallen again and the water-mark to-day is 0.2. The result is that the whole fleet of larger steamers, which expected to be able to travel on April 10, are still lying in harbour, unable to move up stream. Twenty-four steamers can now be counted in the Harbour, including three gunboats.

KUEICHOW TROOP'S RECRUITS.

There are interesting things to be learned from a visit to Itu, only 20 miles down river from Ichang. The city has been given to the Kueichow Army as a training headquarters for recruits. There are now about four or five thousand men there, some of them the merest boys. Further new recruits have recently come from a distance, and close inquiry elicited the fact that many of them are brigands, formerly members of the band of the late Lao Yang-jen, who played such havoc in another part of this province last year.

AN OLD, OLD STORY.

Itu has also started a branch of the "Save Ichang Opium Prohibition Office," which, it will be remembered, is for the collection of revenue for the payment of the troops. A proclamation issued by this department, decrying the evils of opium, says that the office is there for its complete suppression. It is hard to see how face can be saved by such nonsense, legalizing the trade under pretence of suppressing it.

In connexion with the growing of opium, the Taoyin has been absent from Ichang for about two months, on a visit to the prefecture of Shinan and the western cities of this prefecture. These are all hilly districts and it is learned that the Taoyin has been visiting the magistrates of these districts to make arrangements for annual payments for the privilege of collecting taxes on poppy. Patung is to be allowed to cultivate the weed for a payment by the magistrate of $140,000 per annum: Tsikuei (formerly Kueichow) is to pay $150,000. No figures can yet be ascertained for the other districts. It appears likely that all the mountain districts will be covered with poppy this year.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Mysterious Earthquake

Manila, Apr. 19.

Apr. 20.

Rumours of volcanic activity in the Bubuyan Islands have been confirmed by a visit of inspection of the northern islands by Governor-General Wood to-day.

A crater five kilometres northwest of Sandionisio, a village of 75 inhabitants, is violently erupting. Stones, ashes and devastating clouds of gases are rolling down the mountain side, which appears like No Man's Land in France, according to a wireless message from the despatch-boat Apo on which the Governor-General is travelling.

The inhabitants of the village are taking refuge in temporary shelters near the water's edge. They are terrorized and yet loth to leave their homes. Food and medical supplies have been furnished by the Apo and steps have been taken for the removal of the people to places of safety.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ANOTHER FOREIGNER ATTACKED?

Foreign Engineer at Mukden Arsenal Wounded—Chinese Press Report

Peking telegrams to the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" report that a chief foreign engineer in the employ of Marshal Chang Tso-lin's Mukden Arsenal, was shot at and wounded in three places by a Chinese in the Manchurian capital on Monday last.

He is expected, however, shortly to recover, as his wounds are not of a serious nature. The would-be assassin, meanwhile, has been arrested and detained. It is believed that the attempt was in connexion with internal politics.

MOTOR-CARS TO SMUGGLE CONTRABAND

Large Consignment of Opium and Arms Found in Car from Shanghai

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, Apr. 15.

Illustrating how traffic in drugs and firearms finds unusual mediums, an automobile was recently shipped from Shanghai to Tientsin, duly passed by the Customs and landed on the Bund. The car drove away to a local garage for some small repairs. The garage manager, recognizing the type of car as one specially designed in Shanghai, became interested in it and began a close examination. Casually pressing the spare tyre attached to the rear he felt something that resisted his pressure differently from an inflated tube. When close to it he smelt opium. The Chinese, driver, who seemed to be in charge of the car, at once objected, saying in Chinese, "Please don't touch that." The manager laughed and paid no attention. He further examined the car and upon pounding the rear seat to see how the springs reacted, he hurt his knuckles against solid matter. Lifting the seat, to the intense chagrin of the driver, he saw several cases of ammunition and a dozen or more automatic revolvers.

Now properly excited, the driver asked for the bill for repairs, saying quickly," Oh, maskee, I pay you one thousand dollars, finish." The account came to about $5, and the manager said in reply," You pay that five dollars and vamoose, pronto."

This is said to be the fifth car in two months that has made the trip by boat to Tientsin. All of them are alleged to have carried the same shipments.

BOYCOTTERS BUSY IN THE YANGTZE

Preparations for Demonstration Against Japan on "National Shame" Day

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, Apr. 11.

Last Thursday, a number of leading Chinese from Hankow and Wuchang were entertained on board the Japanese cruiser, which has been here with the squadrons of destroyers visiting the port. Among the guests were representatives of the schools, merchants and press, some 30 in all. They were shown over the warship, which carries eight 50 cm. guns and four torpedoes, and can steam at 33 knots per hour. The Chinese guests were further entertained to a concert, followed by a dinner, after which a number of speeches were made. The Japanese Admiral laid emphasis on the fact that this visit is purely pacific in its object, and that by intercourse of this kind there might be laid the foundations of lasting amity between the two greatest nations of the East. The Japanese ships left again on Friday for down river.

In contrast to the above may be recorded the meeting which took place two days previously of the People's Foreign Relations Society, (which is still busy arranging for a big demonstration to be made on the coming "Day of National Disgrace," May 7 next). It is felt that the boycott of Japanese goods, which has never been carried out in more than a half-hearted kind of way must be enforced more stringently, and that the refusal of Japan to restore Dairen offers occasion for once more urging the boycotting policy upon the people of China. On the "disgraceful" day which is about to come round once more, these patriots intend to "humiliate" themselves more than ever. Special cakes are to be made, with Chinese characters imprinted upon them meaning "One Year's Remembrance" and the devotees who eat these cakes will pledge themselves for one year more to remember Japan with proper feelings of hatred and revenge.

BRIGANDS IN N. HUPEH.

Bands of robbers have reappeared in the north of this province. A fairly large band was near Tsaoshih last week. After burning several villages they passed over in the direction of Suichow. Their leader is Lin Hsin-fuei, who for several years has been one of the bandit-leaders in Hupeh. There are plenty of military stationed in all the towns of this region, but their attitude as usual is one of passivity. It is only too probable that the coming summer will see atrocities committed quite as bad as the burning of Tsaoshih last year.

MR. TAKAHASHI'S SUPPORTERS ARRESTED

Japanese Election Comedy: Informed Against by Govt. Party for Entertaining Press

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Apr. 8.

Can a tiffin costing Y. 2, given to the Press by candidates for the Diet, be construed as a bribe and therefore a violation of the election laws?

This is the question at present agitating the minds of the judiciary and Home Department, following upon the arrest of supporters of Mr. Takahashi, contesting Morioka, a sleepy country village, where was given recently a Press luncheon in support of his candidature. The police were called in at the instance of Government supporters, who are also running a candidate in this village, the native place of the late Premier Hara. The event has caused quite a sensation, for it is well-known that as Morioka votes so will the election tend to develop. Consequently the sleepy place is to-day the scene of considerable electioneering heat.

The organizers of the function were informed against when the guests had sat down and had advanced some way through the menu, Mr. Takahashi's political opponents then inviting the police to decide whether the hosts were guilty of a breach of the law in question.

HOSTS IN CUSTODY.

The police decided that Y.2 per head for a lunch was expensive even for a big town, and much more so for a sleepy little place like Morioka and secured warrants against all responsible for organizing the function. The men arrested are in police custody and will remain so until a definite ruling has been delivered as to whether a Y.2-lunch is a violation of the election law tantamount to bribery or not. If it is, the men will be prosecuted.

COLLISION NEAR HONGKONG

Passenger Ship in Danger

Hongkong, Apr. 20.

An unknown steamer collided with the Chinese-owned vessel Paul Beau last night, while the later was on her way from Canton to Hongkong with over 600 passengers, including three foreigners.

The Paul Beau was struck amidships and her bunker hold flooded. Answering the signals for assistance the steamers Kwangtung and Wing On came alongside and to these were transferred the passengers. There was no panic. When the last passenger had left the Paul Beau her cargo deck became submerged.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SIBERIAN AGRICULTURAL CORPORATION

Cossack Bank Intervening in Case in Tientsin Court Involving $28,000

Tientsin News Service

Tientsin, April 15.

A case involving $28,000 was heard this morning at the British Consular Court. It arose out of a claim by M. Raoul Fermus, as endorsee for several promissory notes for Stephen N. Shendrikoff, against the Siberian Agricultural Corporation, of which Mr. Andrew A. Balakshin is manager.

An interpleader summons was filed last February by the defendant, who said he had received notice from Jacob A. Malygin, representing the Semirestchensk Cossack Troops and the Semirestchensk Cossack Bank, disputing the right of the Siberian Agricultural Corporation to pay the monies claimed by M. Fermus on the promissory notes. The defendant denied collusion, claimed interest only in the charges and costs and was willing to pay into court the subject matter of the claim or to dispose of it as the court may direct.

M. Fermus applied this morning for an order directing payment to himself of monies paid into the court by the Siberian Agricultural Corporation, pursuant to an order of Provincial Court on March 6, basing his claim on the contention that Malygin had taken no steps within reasonable time to establish the claim of his principals as against that of Stephen Shendrikoff to any portion of the fund.

In the hearing this morning, Mr. R. T. Evans represented M. Fermus and Mr. Alexander Fishman, of Shanghai, represented Mr. Malygin. The latter claimed that delay in taking action was due to not having received until recently his credentials from the Semirestchensk Troops and Bank. He said he had not taken any action against M. Fermus but had begun one against Mr. Shendrikoff.

After hearing argument on both sides the Court adjourned sine die.

THE Japanese Minister, Mr. K. Yoshizawa, is expected to visit Shanghai about the middle of next month, when he will open the new building of the Yokohama Specie Bank.

International Association's Indictment of Scandal and Waichiaopu's Reply

Peking, Apr. 15.

The International Anti-Opium Association, Peking, has issued the following:—

The following foreign report having come from the Jehol Administrative District concerning the present cultivation of opium, the International Anti-Opium Association, finding it difficult to realize that the Presidential mandate, drawn up by the newly-formed Opium Suppression Board, had not yet reached the Jehol District, so close to Peking, sent a copy of the report to the Waichiaopu.

"So far, no notices at all have been put out by the authorities here and so the people take it they will be allowed to grow poppies again. The people are busy everywhere preparing the ground. Many wells have been dug and suitable land prepared.

"The officials seem to encourage them to grow it, and do not say anything about the tax till they have gone round and measured the land to find out how much has been planted. Then they tell the people the amount of the tax and begin to collect it. Then it does not matter whether the crop promises to be a good one or a total failure, they have to pay the tax. Last year a lot of people had their whole crop ruined by hail, but they had to pay the tax all the same. The people who met with this disaster are planting double the amount this year to make up for last year's loss.

"I hear the amount of the tax is to be double what it was last year. Of course, the excuse for allowing it to be grown is that they want the money to pay the soldiers. But you know how much the soldiers received from it last year. All the officers seem to deal in opium and the soldiers escort it about the country for them.

"The planting here will begin in about 10 days, but the land could well be used for growing wheat, and this would pay well, as flour is very dear. I heard from Jehol that the people there were planting poppy some days ago."

THE REPLY.

The Waichiaopu, Peking,
April 9, 1924.

International Anti-Opium Association,
Peking.

SIRS:—In reply to your letter dated March 12, 1924, and the request concerning opium suppression in the eastern section of Jehol District, this Ministry accordingly requested the Inspector-General for Jehol, Chahar and Suiyuan Districts to put in force rigid suppression in the district concerned, and this Ministry has lately been informed by a reply from Inspector-General Wang, which stated that "opium was formerly cultivated in secret, but since I took up the post of Inspector-General of this district I despatched persons to various hsiens to make strict investigation and have employed rigid measures to suppress opium-growing. For the same purpose it is on our records that the President despatched an Opium Investigating Commissioner to this district to make investigation. In response to your instructions, I will, however, again issue notice to enforce the prohibition measures, and despatch persons to various hsiens to make real investigations with a view to clearing out the poisonous plant." In reply to yours we forward the above information for your reference.

THE JAPANESE EXCLUSION ACT

New York, Apr. 16.

The New York Times describes the Senate's action in excluding Japanese immigrants as intemperate, hasty and unthinkingly jumping to the conclusion that Japan was trying to dictate to the United States on a matter of internal politics, which was far from the facts. "It merely serves to re-kindle the fires of race hatred and undo the work of a quarter of a century of diplomacy."

The "New York World" also asserts that Mr. Hanihara's words were in no way a threat, but a candid statement of fact. "The Senate has been animated by the basest passion of a mere mob."

Washington, Apr. 16.

As certain Members desired to have their position formally recorded by roll call, the Senate by 71 votes to four again approved the Japanese Exclusion amendment of the Immigration Bill.—Reuter's American Service.

Tokio, Apr. 17.

The utmost surprise and bitter disappointment, rather than an outburst of indignation, characterise the reception of the news of the United States Senate's immigration decisions. In the hope that something may be done to prevent the pending legislation from passing into the statute book, those bodies and publicists interested in Japan-American relations are conferring with a view to appealing to similar organizations in the United States in an effort to remedy the situation.

The suggestion that Japan will attempt to retaliate is authoritatively declared to be without foundation, though it is conceded that certain sections, stirred by the excitement of the approaching elections, may be expected to make capital out of the situation by launching attacks against the politicians who are alleged to be responsible. In fact, the extremist morning newspapers are already pointing the way.

SURPRISE, NOT BITTERNESS.

As typical of the best-considered opinion here, the President of the Imperial University, in the course of an interview, declared that he failed to understand the prejudice against Japan, which had long been doing its best for the progress of civilization. He was convinced that in such work there were no national boundaries. He said that he was unable to understand the reason for America's abrupt change, and regretted that a keener sense of racial distinction was likely to result from the American action.

JAPANESE PREMIER DISHEARTENED.

Later.

Expressing regret at the drastic action of the United States Congress against Japan, the Premier, Viscount Kiyoura, interviewed to-day, said: "It seems to us hardly to have been necessary in view of the fact that our whole history has shown us willing to be reasonable. We are willing to accept only a reasonable privilege. If we have not made it clear in the language of foreign use, we at any rate have shown it by a long record of actions of friendship, which may now be impaired but which cannot be broken."

He said that Japan did not dispute America's right to arrange her immigration. She asked only for a concession, which, if denied, caused regret because she hoped for a further act of consideration, in addition to several which America had shown before.

Viscount Kiyoura declared that Japan would never forget America's moral and financial support in the greatest crisis in her history and the latter's impressive sympathy in Japan's greatest disaster.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

VISCOUNT GOTO'S SANG FROID.

The Japanese should face the exclusion situation calmly and not resentfully, in accordance with their ideals, which prohibit a blow for a blow, stated Viscount Goto in the course of an interview to-day.

"Let us proceed with a clear conscience, regardless of the attitude of others, on our way to national prosperity," he declared.

AMENDMENT VETOED.

Washington, Apr. 17.

The Senate has voted down an amendment to the Immigration Bill, prohibiting immigration for five years.—Reuter.

Washington, Apr. 17.

The Senate to-day passed a resolution by 53 votes to 25 to restrict the quotas in the Immigration Bill to one per cent. only. Several Senators explained that they did so because they expected the census of 1910 to be adopted as a basis, saying that the two per cent. quotas could be restored if the census of 1890 were adopted.

The Senate has adopted the 1890 census as the quota basis under the Immigration Bill, the quota being two per cent. of the nationals then resident in the United States.—Reuter's American Service.

The Senate to-day adopted an amendment to the Immigration Bill, giving farmers preference among would-be immigrants when any State certifies that it is short of farm labour.

PREFERENCE FOR FARM LABOUR.

The Senate by 62 votes to 6 passed the Immigration Bill, which now goes to the House of Representatives for discussion of the Senate amendments.

Italy will suffer almost as badly as Japan under the Immigration Bill, only 3,224 immigrants being eligible as compared with 45,057 under the existing law. The Italian Ambassador has protested without avail.—Reuter's American Service.

Kiyoura Cabinet Denounced

Tokio, Apr. 18.

As anticipated, the resentment aroused by the Senate's Immigration action is partly finding its vent in scathing criticism of the Kiyoura Cabinet, the vernacular papers asserting that the Privy Council will demand the Government's explanation, while the party leaders are holding a conference with a view to similar action.

In the meantime the Tokio Chamber of Commerce has taken the first definite step, in drawing up a resolution for submission to the Chambers of Commerce of New York, Chicago and elsewhere in the United States, appealing to American business men for assistance to remedy the act, which, according to general opinion, must impair and impede the friendship and trade relations between the American nation and the Japanese people. At the same time the Tokio Chamber will memorialize the Government in connexion with the matter.

The drafts of these resolutions will be submitted to a meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce at Kyoto on April 22.

Noteworthy among the varied comments published is that attributed to Lieut.-Gen. Tsuno, the Vice-Minister of War, who is reported to ridicule the idea of extreme retaliatory measures by Japan because "Congress acted in accordance with the national statutes and Constitution, and therefore no outsider can interfere." Though deploring the damaging blow to Japan's prestige, which is bitter to swallow, the Vice-Minister says that it must be used to remedy her internal ills and to emphasize the necessity for united efforts.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

INTERVIEW WITH U. S. AMBASSADOR.

Tokio, Apr. 19.

Interviewed by a representative of the Eastern News Agency to-day, Mr. Cyrus Woods, American Ambassador to Japan said briefly as follows:—

Since my arrival here as Ambassador for the United States, I have done my best to further the friendship between the two countries. When I returned home on leave last year, I had an interview with the President and the Ministers of the State and called their attention to the importance of the friendship of the two countries. The fact, therefore, that the anti-Japanese Bill has passed the Senate is a great surprise and disappointment to me. I have never had such a grave and significant disappointment as the present one in my life. I am determined to despatch a lengthy telegram to the President, advising him not to sign the anti-Japanese Bill.—Eastern News Agency.

∴ Considering the Ambassador's position, there would appear to be some misunderstanding in respect of this interview which must be taken with reserve.—Ed.

JAPANESE ORGANIZATION ACTIVE.

Tokio, Apr. 20.

The American Ambassador, Mr. Woods, had a long conference with the Foreign Minister, Baron Matsui, yesterday afternoon.

The Japanese Ambassador in Washington has sent a second Note to the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, with a view to clarifying Japan's attitude in regard to immigration.

Leading political parties are holding conferences and resolutions have been adopted urging America's reconsideration of the situation for the preservation of friendly relations between America and Japan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, Apr. 20.

A Washington despatch dated April 19 reports that Mr. Hanihara, Japanese Ambassador to the United States, on April 19 addressed Mr. Hughes, the Secretary of State, a letter, explaining the words, "grave consequences," which were made a topic for discussion in the Senate, and that this explanation may, perhaps, give the President a chance to ask the Senate to reconsider the anti-Japanese Immigration Bill.—Eastern News Agency.

TOKIO PRESS PROTEST.

Tokio, Apr. 20.

The American Immigration Bill was the topic of a joint meeting of the Tokio press yesterday evening, which registered through a resolution its belief that the Bill did not represent the wide majority of Americans. The resolution drew attention to the attitude of a large section of the American press and public towards the measure, which threatened the traditional friendship between the two nations, strengthened by co-operation at the Naval Conference and enhanced by America's practical sympathy towards Japan in September, 1923, and which, if it became law, must seriously retard those joint undertakings, which are essential to the welfare, not only of America and Japan, but of the rest of the world.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Supposed "Veiled Threat" Misconstrued: A Frank Explanation

Washington, Apr. 20.

The Japanese Ambassador, Mr. Hanihara, has written to Secretary of State Hughes, disclaiming intent to convey a "veiled threat" in the use of the phrase "grave consequences" in his recent letter on the immigration question.

Mr. Hughes, replying, characterizes the letter as "a frank and friendly explanation." He adds that he is quite sure that it was far from Mr. Hanihara's thought to express or imply any threat.

It is understood that Mr. Hanihara's explanation is approved by the Japanese Foreign Office.—Reuter's American Service.

Resolutions of Protest by Chambers of Commerce Throughout Japan

Kioto, Apr. 22.

The Federation of Chambers of Commerce throughout Japan at its annual meeting to-day adopted the following resolution: "We deeply regret the passing of the Japanese Exclusion Immigration Bill by the United States Congress, thereby seriously interfering with the traditional friendship and trade between America and Japan. We earnestly desire a satisfactory solution of this question for the sake of maintenance of peace in the Pacific Ocean and of the promotion of trade between the two countries." The resolution will be sent to the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, as well as to American Chambers of Commerce.

The Federation is also telegraphing another resolution to the International Chamber of Commerce in Paris, as follows: "Operation of the American Merchant Marine Act would disturb international trade relations and therefore we hope that you will use your best endeavours in abolishing this Act, based on the principle of equal treatment of members of the International Chamber of Commerce.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FURTHER PROTESTS FROM PUBLIC BODIES IN JAPAN.

Osaka, Apr. 23.

Under the auspices of the newspapers and the Federation of Mercantile Guilds, a mass-meeting was held at the Public Hall to-day, attended by several thousand persons, at which a resolution was passed appealing to President Coolidge to veto the Immigration Bill.

The speakers, who were mostly journalists, emphatically argued that the legislation did not represent real American public opinion. They voiced sincere gratitude for the stand taken by influential newspapers in America and appealed to American sense of justice and fair-play to prevent the Bill from becoming law.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

APPEAL TO LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Tokio, Apr. 23.

Japan's stand with regard to the American immigration legislation is finding constant expression in a series of meetings, organized by political, commercial, student and labour interests at which resolutions of protest are being adopted. The dominant note of these meetings is one of intense regard at the action, which threatens injury to the friendly relations between the two countries, and of very earnest appeal for reconsideration of the measure, which is described as unjust and not reflecting the true wishes of the American people.

A meeting of the League of Nations Association this evening, attended by Baron Shibusawa and other well-known personages, passed a resolution to appeal its case to the League of Nations Union at Brussels and to non-partisan associations in America, urging their influence in preventing the bill from being put into operation. The resolution declares that the bill is a direct infringement of the American-Japanese Treaty of Commerce and a violation of the fundamental principles of the League of Nations.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WHOLE NATION FURIOUS.

Tokio, Apr. 24.

That the situation is as grave as that with which Japan was confronted by the three-power intervention after the Japan-China War, sums up to-day's opinion on the immigration issue, which, it is acknowledged, demands the utmost prudence and self-control, but, says the "Nichi Nichi," Japan must prefer justice to peace if the two are found incompatible. The "Jiji" deplores the serious setback to the cultural relations between the United States and Japan which is certain if the immigration law is enacted.

The Premier is credited by this morning's papers with a statement to the Privy Council to the effect that the Government is convinced that the question can be solved by direct appeal to the American people to which it is directing its efforts.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICA'S AFFRONT TO JAPAN

Press Comment on Exclusion Sobering Down: Mr. Hanihara's Fatal Phrase Deplored by Thoughtful Opinion: Mistake on Both Sides

By Alfred E. Piéres

Tokio, April 17.

The attention of all Japan, official and unofficial, is to-day focussed on the decision of the United States Senate to exclude Oriental immigrants, by legislative means. The feeling in this country, as mirrored in the statements of high Government officials, political leaders, merchant princes and the Press, is one of extreme disappointment, and the hope that the President will veto the measure is entertained by all sections.

It is becoming gradually understood here that the communication made to Mr. Hughes, Secretary of State, by Masanao Hanihara, Japan's accredited representative to Washington, was very untimely and far from diplomatic. Ambassador Hanihara, it is believed, staked the question on one throw of the dice. He overreached himself, caused Senators friendly to Japan to prick up their backs and go rejoicing in the anti-Japanese camp. It will become clearer, in course of time, that Mr. Hanihara did as much, or even more, than the most rabid adherent of the American exclusionism, to secure the legislation that Japan rightly construes as uncalled for. Mr. Hanihara's career as a diplomat may be supposed to have ended. It is a foregone conclusion that he will be recalled to Tokio.

THAT UNFORTUNATE CHOICE OF WORDS.

The phrase that caused the heart-burnings in the Senate—namely that "grave consequences" might result—rendered into Japanese is judai naru eikyo. It can be translated "grave consequences," but what Japanese officials here meant to convey was that the suggested legislation would cause a "painful impression" here, which judai naru eikyo also means. Thus an important chapter in the history of American-Japanese relations, perhaps in the history of the Pacific, revolved on selecting the proper verbiage when translating. It was felt here that the House would pass the measure, but not for a moment was it thought that the Senate would do so. On the contrary, it was confidently expected that the Senate would indefinitely pigeon-hole the matter, if not throw it out altogether. The quick and dramatic developments in Washington struck Japan like a bolt from the blue. Officialdom gasped; the press became thunder-struck.

In the first flush of excitement there was wild talk bandied about, but the press, generally, has kept very cool about the matter and has conducted its arguments against the measure on a comparatively lofty plane. Only one paper, so far, has chosen to specialize in wild gestures, this being the "Yorodzu" which has periodical nightmares of a racial war and believes that Der Tag has now definitely arrived.

"Japan will find more profit in opposing America even at the risk of her national existence," runs a part of its tirade. "A racial war seems inevitable sooner or later. America seems to want it now and all the the coloured peoples of the world should rise against the whites. There is no longer any necessity for Japan to remain patient when she is being thus tormented and her honour dragged in the mire."

"RETASIATE BLOW FOR BLOW."

The "Asahi," generally one of the soberest journals in the Empire, also seems to have got unduly stirred and, in the course of an editorial declaring that behind Mr. Hanihara's note stand a united Japanese people, calls on the Government to retaliate blow for blow, to meet discrimination against Japanese in America by proportionate discrimination against Americans in Japan and the boycotting American goods and American ports.

The first flush of excitement has now subsided into a species of calmness that is reflected by the greatest dignity on the majority of the papers in the country. It is borne in mind that behind the affront to Japan, there lurks partisanship and domestic politics, that a Presidential election is on, that the scramble for votes at any cost so dear to the heart of some of America's politicians is playing an active part. Beneath the cooling down of emotion, however, there runs an under-current, more felt than expressed, that the two nations are perhaps on the fringe of dangerous possibilities if the situation is permitted to change from sanity to super-sentimentality.

AMERICAN IN JAPAN DESPONDENT.

How do Americans in Japan regard the measure that has caused so much fluttering in every section of Japanese life? There is hardly one that does not regret the absolute folly of shutting the doors of the United States to the Japanese nation by means of legislative statutes. This, they say, could have been done by the more dignified and honourable means of an understanding between the two nations which could be embodied in the form of a treaty. The indiscreet step taken by Mr. Hanihara, however, is seen even here. Americans who consistently and for years opposed anything like affronting this country now begin to realize that Mr. Hanihara, unintentionally without doubt, did much the same thing when the note hinting "grave consequences" was sent to Mr. Hughes.

Typical of the feeling of American residents in this country is the following extract from the "Japan Advertiser," owned and edited by Americans but run on international lines:

"Exclusion of Japanese immigrants from the United States by legislation is a mistake. It is no more of a mistake than was the attitude shown in Mr. Hapibara's note. Mistakes are costly and must be paid for. Japan, it would seem, is about to pay for her mistake. Justified though it may be, the Senate will also lay up in the future a debt that must be met if it, too, err in this instance."

"ASSESSMENT ON EVERYTHING"

Man's Wife, Cattle and Everything that is His Taxed by Honan Hilitary

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kueiteh, Ho., Apr. 15.

An engrossing topic of conversation just now is the Peh Ho Chuan, or Assessment on Everything. This is a tax which seems to be all that its name implies and caused a riot in Kueiteh last year which resulted in the death of one of the tax-gatherers. The merchants were to pay three coppers on every hundred they took in, but claimed they could not do this as their profits did not come to more than this amount.

The failure of the attempt to impose this tax in Kueiteh for the time being has led the military authorities who are after this money to try some of the smaller places like Mamuchi. Proclamations are now up there and an office has been established, but the opposition is intense, of course. It it evidently a very comprehensive tax, but let us hope not quite so much as the country people think. Some of them have told me that a man taking unto himself a wife would be taxed a thousand cash and every horse, cow, nay everything down to the very dogs and chickens come under assessment. These moneys are to go into Marshal Wu Pei-fu's exchequer.

MR. D. P. Griffith, of the Shanghai-Nanking Railway, has returned from Tsingtao, where he has been serving on the Kiao-Tsi Railway Commission.

ACCIDENT ON LUNGHAI RAILWAY

Foreign Nurse's Good Work

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kueiteh, Ho., Apr. 15.

There was a very sad accident yesterday on the Lunghai Railway between here and Hsuchowfu.

One of the Chinese railway officials on the train slipped between the cars in some way and got his legs terribly mangled. Miss Simpson, head of the Nurses' Association in China, was on the train, coming to pay a visit to the Canadian Church Mission Hospital here, and gave first sid with the help of the admirable outfit carried on the trains in case of such accidents.

Mr. S. Woods, secretary of the Honan Famine Relief Committee, was also on the train and able to render valuable assistance. The sufferer was carried on a litter from the train to the hospital on arrival at Kueiteh and Dr. Andreassen operated at once, removing both legs. The shock and loss of blood proved to have been too great and the man died very shortly after the operation.—One of the sad aspects of a doctor's life, working desperately in a hopeless struggle with only the consciousnes of duty done to the utmost as a reward.

TIENTSIN MUNICIPAL FINANCES

French Concession's Prosperous Year

Tientsin News Service

Tientsin, Apr. 16.

Municipal government of the seven different Concessions of Tientsin, including the First Special Area (Ex-German Concessions), cost the entire community nearly $3 million in 1923. Ordinary revenue from all forms of taxation, licenses and dues totalled $2,709,139, while expenditure was $2,814,831., leaving a debit balancee of $105, 692.

The British Concession leads with $781,931 income and $804,145 expenditure, a small debit of $22,-214. These figures, of course, are for ordinary income and expenditure and do not take into account extraordinary income and expenditure, in the form of loans, capital expenditure and similar finances.

The French Concession comes next with an income of $662,809 and an expenditure of $823,652. A debit balance of $160,833 makes the entire accounts show a debit. This by no means represents an actual debit, however, for practically half of the French Concession's expenditure was for matters which come under extraordinary expenses, such as new road building schemes and similar works. The French Concession had a credit balance of $215,000 from 1922, and therefore, the amount expended in 1923 in excess of income was already covered by a credit balance. Consequently, omitting the French debit balance, the Concession areas were operated at a considerable profit for the year 1923.

The following figures compiled exclusively by the Tientsin News Service shew the position of each Municipal area in the year's ordinary working accounts:

	Income	Expenditure	Credit Bal.	Debit Bal.
	$	$	$	$
British	781,931	804.145	—	22,214
French	662,809	823,642	—	160,833
Japanese	589,823	549,823	40,000	—
Russian	219,810	268.516	—	48,706
1st. Spec. Area	213,266	234,805	—	21,539
Italian	240,000	132,400	107,600	—
Belgian*	1,500	1,500	—	—
Total	$2,709,139	$2,814,831	$147,600	$253,292

*The Belgian Concession is just beginning to develop. The figures given merely represent small operating expenses in connexion with the taxation of a few Chinese houses at present on its territory.

BEAN OIL MILLS OF N. KIANGSU

The Old Method and How It Scored: Now Giving Way to Up-to-date Machinery: Chinese Mechanical Instinct and Indifference

From Our Own Correspondent.

Haichow, Ku., April 12.

The last year and a half has seen a complete revolution in what is practically the only manufacturing industry here—the making of bean oil and cake. No one knows how far back runs the history of the old-fashioned bean-oil mill but it must have existed for many centuries as there had been evolved a standard form of machinery that differed very slightly in widely separated districts.

One cannot hide his respect for, and admiration of the energy and determination and labour at which the old mills were erected. The principal feature, which would be spectacular anywhere, was the enormous stone wheels that were used for crushing the beans in the initial process. These wheels are as much as six feet in diameter and a foot and a half in thickness and so nicely trimmed that the entire weight was concentrated on a narrow band at the circumference, enabling the enormous weight to come down practically on a single bean at a time. They were generally run in pairs, one behind the other and were kept in the narrow track by a heavy horizontal axle that was pivoted in the centre of a twenty-foot circle or larger. At least two husky mules were required to keep the wheels in motion and it was the expense of keeping up this animal power plant that finally put the old mills out of business. A fair sized plant would consist of three or four of these sets of rollers and require a force of 30 or 40 mules, as the labour was hard and required frequent shifts.

CHINESE INVENTIVENESS.

The method in which the beans were fed into the path of the crushing rollers illustrates Chinese inventiveness at its best. The supply of beans was piled in the middle of the circle, around the central post, in the shape of a truncated cone. A rope hung loosely along the length of the long axle and drooped so that it barely touched the edge of the pile of beans as it passed, causing a faint trickle of beans down the incline. In spite of the observer's feeling that this rope would require perpetual adjustments it functioned beautifully. Now and then a coolie with a big wooden shovel would walk carelessly around the pile of beans and with a pat or two keep it in just the shape it should be. Hanging just in front of the first wheel was a small board that caught the rolling beans and stopped them in exactly the right spot and another dragging behind shoveled the crushed beans out of the track.

The press gave the Chinese inventor his hardest task. The best solution was to get a short, large tree trunk, leaving the butt section and the first limb knots intact so as to provide great resistance against splitting and hew out the centre, leaving enough on each side to provide sufficient strength for the longitudinal strains and stresses. The crushed beans were first scalded by steaming for a few moments and then wrapped in grass mats with a strong bamboo rim. They were then placed in the press, six or eight at a time and the pressure was applied by strong wedges driven in with a huge hammer of iron or stone.

Almost any one at all familiar with foreign machinery could have said that machine methods would invariably drive these clumsy mills out of existence, but it is worth remembering that the first efforts in adopting foreign methods were utterly unsuccessful and for a time received a most decided setback. For whether the originator of the old bean press knew it or not he hit upon the exact requirement of this particular bean and that was slow, sustained pressure, which is the only means yet discovered in persuading the bean to give up its quota of oil. A large foreign mill was built here many years ago, that on paper had the old mills beaten to a frazzle, but it was never operated. The big hydraulic presses were too powerful and too rapid in their action. They exerted so much power and with such rapidity that the beans were partially powdered and formed a dreggy and utterly unusable oil.

It was many years before a strong screw press was introduced that really solved the problem. These are set up in batteries. They are very compact and can be placed only a foot or two apart. A squad of coolies runs the screw down till it will go no further and goes on to the next press. By the time they have made their rounds the first press will go down another half turn and the precious oil is thus slowly but surely squeezed out.

WILL THE NEW LAST?

The weak point in the old system was the inability to shut down in times of bad markets. The 30 or 40 mules had to be fed practically the same as when busy. So paradoxically, the mills were forced to run all the time, whether they made or lost because of the much greater loss attending a shut-down. The introduction of the kerosene engine has completely solved this difficulty—for the time!—for it remains to be seen how these new mills will wear. The writer has seen quite a few of them and has been impressed with several features. They are nearly all of Chinese manufacture, and certainly lack refinement of finish. They are rarely set up with sufficient foundations to hold them steady and the tendency is to knock themselves to pieces. But the Chinese mania for the cheapest will prevent for a long time the introduction of a really successful machine that will stand the wear and tear and abuse which will be its invariable lot. Some day we hope to see arrive a machine, whose agent will refuse to sell it unless it be erected under his own observation, thus insuring it a proper start on life at least.

NEGLECT OF COMMON CARE.

And speaking of Chinese and machinery there are two things that are a constant surprise: first, how readily even an ignorant coolie learns to run a large piece of machinery: second, the utter indifference of the owner to the care that his costly machine receives. A good electric light plant was installed here a year or so ago and a brand new building was set up for it. I visited it a few weeks ago and was so impressed with the lack of care, the dirt and disorder that I discouraged the idea of any one going to the trouble of putting in lights that were certain to be unsatisfactory. In a week the plant was shut down!

ALONE IN 23FT. BOAT

Manila, Apr. 19.

Mr. Ira Sparks, who arrived at Tandig, Mindanao, on March 22 in a 23-foot boat singlehanded from Honolulu, has been detained by constabulary, charged with carrying weapons without a permit, as his effects included a gun and a bayonet.

Mr. Sparks said that as soon as he was released he would continue his voyage, his next port being Singapore. He declared that he had not sighted land although he had attempted to touch at Guam and the Marshal Islands, but he was too poor a navigator.

The boat, which is named Dauntless, is apparently in good condition.

Mr. Sparks attained much notoriety previously, having stowed away in a packing box at San Francisco and at Honolulu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE NEW RACE CLUB OF TSINGTAO

International Organization to Take Over Old Race Course and Run it Properly: Big Profits Expected

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, April 17.

The new Administration has confirmed the sanction granted by the former government for the formation of the International Recreation Club, which is to take over the management of the Race Course at Hui Chuan, a special charter fee of $15,000 having already been paid by the temporary committee of the club, together with the first half-yearly rental of $250.00. The organizers of the Club are both foreign and Chinese, being composed of the following:—Messrs. Y. W. Chun, S. Zimmerman, K. P. T. Chang, B. J. Stansfield, Li Yun-shen, T. Herlihy, Liu Tso-san, S. Siebold, Hou Chin-tang and K. Kitasato (promoters), and Messrs. Walter A. Adams, U. S. Consul, H. Newbill, U. S. Vice-Consul, N. W. Gatrell, H. M. Webb, P. Jernigan, R. A. Russell, Th. Simmons, K. Bohme, W. S. Phillips, S. M. Bernstam, C. R. Rice, Dr. Weischer and some others (patrons).

A petition was presented to the former Administration in December last year for permission to establish the Club, when it was stated that the purpose of the Club was to encourage athletics and conduct racing in accordance with the principles, rules and regulations governing the operation of similar clubs in Peking, Tientsin, Shanghai and Hankow. There will be 2,000 members' shares and 200 promoters' shares of $50.00 each, the latter to receive double dividends.

On March 21, the Administration received from Mr. Chen Yuhao, Mr. Chang Chun-pah and Mr. S. Zimmerman, on behalf of the Club, the special charter fee above mentioned, and three days later the temporary committee paid over the half-yearly rental of $250, from March 21, to September 20.

EVERYONE PLEASED.

The formation of the Club is hailed with delight as it is calculated not only to stimulate interest in sports but will prove financially successful to investors. Hitherto some Japanese attempted to manage the race course but through lack of experience and organization the project was not continued.

At the time of the retrocession of the former leased territory, the race course, together with the grand-stand, club house and stables, was taken over by the Administration and according to the agreement on detailed arrangements for the settlement of outstanding questions relative to Shantung, it was to be managed impartially by the Administration. A petition was submitted to the former Director of General Affairs on December 20 last year for permission to form the club on a 20-year leasehold with all rights on the course. A provisional Committee has been formed for the purpose of making complete arrangements such as a [illegible] this nature would call for.

OBJECTS OF THE CLUB.

The petition reads in part:—

"The object of the Club is to enlist men of good moral standing, both Chinese and foreign, to become members, to invite them to become shareholders of the club if they so desire, and to use the money subscribed by the members and shareholders necessary for providing the course with all recreational facilities. The Club will have organized competitive athletics, pony-racing and other forms of recreation and outdoor sports, but such will not be encouraged unless they are planned to give an opportunity to the local community to appreciate the value of physical education, to develop athletic interest and the support of sportsmanship and, above all, to promote international friendship and co-operation which is indispensible for a cosmopolitan city like Tsingtao."

On March 16, the Administration wrote as follows to the petitioners:—

"We beg to advise that your petition, together with enclosures, has been given careful attention. Since the rules and regulations of your Club together with what you propose to do regarding the selling of parimutuel tickets and cash sweeps have been drawn up in strict accordance with similar existing clubs of Peking, Tientsin, Shanghai and Hankow and are quite in order, your Club is hereby granted the use of the Huai Chuan recreation ground together with the grand-stand, ticket office, judge box, stables and other equipment for a period of 20 years which is to be the life of your Club on condition that your Club pay first of all a special charter fee of $15,000 to this Government.

"It is understood that your Club is to make according to regulations a 20-year leasing agreement with the Finance Bureau and to pay rent accordingly and that, in future, 20 per cent. of your net profits made from the sale of tickets for pony-racing is to be paid to this Government annually for public purposes.

PUBLIC RIGHTS PRESERVED.

"Since, however, the Huai Chuan recreation ground is the only public place for recreation in the city, it is hereby stipulated that during the period of the lease, all recognized organizations, schools and public bodies can, upon securing permission from this Government, use the ground for holding meetings or athletic sports free of charge, provided that such meetings or sports do not interfere with the affairs of the Club.

"It is also understood that your Club can make alterations and additions to the equipment already on the ground, but must do so according to the existing rules and regulations of the city.

"Your enclosures sent in together with your petition will be kept on file at this office for reference."

In the Constitution of the Club it is noted that any surplus of profit from the working of the Club after deducting rent for the race course and other expenses shall be employed as follows:—(a) 10 per cent. for the purpose of Charity to be selected by the Committee, (b) 20 per cent. for the Government, (c) 15 per cent. for the promotion of objects of the Club in such manner as shall be decided by the Committee; (d) 55 per cent. for dividends to shareholders. Promoters' shares shall be entitled to double profits.

INTERNAL STRIFE IN KUANGTUNG

Opportunity Afforded by New Constitution for Reunification of China

Peking, Apr. 22.

A midnight mandate says that the Government has received a communication from Gen. Chow Hung-yin expressing regret at the internal strife from which Kuangtung particularly suffered. The people are tired of domestic upheavals and the new Constitution offers opportunity for rehabilitation. Gen. Chow declares his devotion to the task of reunification and his loyalty to the Central Government. The mandate then instructs Gen. Chow to suppress local disturbances with a view to reunification.

Gen. Chow Hung-yin, who is one of Gen. Chen Chiung-ming's doughty followers, recently left Waichow for Amoy and was principally responsible for the recent defeat of Gen. Tsang Chih-ping. According to Consular despatches it was arranged that when Gen. Chow defeated Gen. Tsang and settled the affairs in that region he was to be joined by Fukien troops and return to Waichow, after which further operations would follow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ANHUI'S ANTI-SMALLPOX CAMPAIGN

Highly Successful Propaganda for Vaccination

From Our Own Correspondent.

Anking, An., Apr. 17.

A successful campaign of vaccination against smallpox in which both Christian and non-Christian organizations cordially joined, has been carried out here recently.

Doctors from four hospitals first met at the Y. M. C. A. and agreed upon methods of procedure, then a larger committee consisting of representatives from gentry, officials, merchants, schools and churches was formed to discuss ways and means. The work of advertising and raising of funds was intrusted to the Y. M. C. A.

By way of promoting the idea among the people and helping to break down the prejudices among the superstitious, and opposition that might come from the old type of medical fraternity, wide publicity was given. The daily papers gave as much free space as desired and before the campaign was well started not only the quack doctors but the ancient nose method vaccinators were rushing out special advertisements offering all but free rates. In spite of some of their statements that the free vaccine offered was worthless this rival campaign was really an excellent thing and helped to stir up the people to the need of vaccination. Illustrated lectures on smallpox were given to students of more than 20 schools as well as to hundreds of other people—the churches, schools and the City Temple being used as lecture halls. Graphic picture posters were put up in all parts of the city and two days before the vaccination began groups of students from 20 schools distributed free vaccination tickets to the poor people in all sections of the city.

Five vaccination stations, including St. James, Poa Yu, Chien Sheng, and Hwa Chung Hospitals and the Y. M. C. A., were open for two hours each morning for five days with an average of nearly a hundred each (though the Mission hospital had by far the largest numbers). In addition a few outside groups were given free vaccination including the model prison and the boy's orphanage, etc., making a total of 2,661, most of whom were children.

Funds for the purpose of the campaign were raised by two showings of the film 'Civilization.'

NAVAL WEDDING AT WEIHAIWEI

Claridge-Beer

From Our Own Correspondent.

Weihaiwei, Apr. 16.

A wedding at Weihaiwei is a rare occurrence and the marriage on Saturday, the 12th instant, of Lieutenant G. P. Claridge of H. M. Submarine Flotilla to Miss Margaret E. Beer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Beer, well-known as among the oldest residents here, was an event that excited much local interest.

The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. O. R. Burnett, M.A., at St. John's Church, Port Edward, which had been tastefully decorated by the ladies of the port with marguerites and daffodils, mainly contributed by Mrs. Russell Brown from Government House gardens. The church was well filled with friends of the bride and bridegroom, including a number of officers of H.M.S. Diomede, the only ship at present at Weihaiwei.

The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in a simple gown of white brocaded satin, the veil being arranged with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of pale pink and white carnations and was attended by her younger sister, Miss Eileen Beer, who wore a becoming dress of pale mauve taffeta and carried a posy of violets. Lieutenant A. E. H. Cameron, R.N., acted as "best man." The bride's mother was in silver grey and carried a bouquet of freezias.

Mrs. C. R. Burnett presided at the organ and three hymns were sung during the service,—"Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead," "O perfect Love" and "Praise the Lord! ye heavens, adore Him." The bridal party left the church to the strains of Lohengrin's "Wedding March" to pass beneath an arch of crossed swords formed by fourteen of the bridegroom's brother officers.

Through the courtesy of Mr. J. Clark the reception was held at the King's Hotel Annexe which had been beautifully decorated for the occasion by Mr. A. Whittaker. Standing in front of a handsome floral screen, surmounted by a silver bell which was presented by Mrs. Niven, the happy coouple received the congratulations of their numerous friends. The bride's health was proposed by Mr. W. Russell Brown, Officer Administering the Government, in a few well-chosen sentences and this speech was followed by the usual toasts.

The reception was followed by dancing during which Lieutenant and Mrs. Claridge left for their honeymoon which will be spent at Peking preparatory to their journey to England by the P. & O. S. Plassy, leaving in a few weeks.

Practically the whole resident community attended the reception. Among those present were His Honour W. Russell Brown and Mrs. Russell Brown, Capt. G. Hopwood, C.B.E., R.N., Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt-Smith, Surgeon-Commander McCloy, R.N., and Mrs. McCloy, Commander Ridler, R.N., and Mr. and Mrs. Tuson.

PEKING DAY BY DAY

Peking, Apr. 20.

As Mr. Shou Heng-chun, who was recently gazetted as Consul-General at Vladivostok, has been appointed Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinanfu Railway another Consul-General for Vladivostok has to be found. It is reported that Mr. Pai Kuang will be given the post.

The Educational Association and Chinese Chamber of Commerce at Kirin have telegraphed to the Government urging that Mr. Li Chia-ao should be instructed to make representations to the Moscow Government with a view to the recall of Mr. Karakhan. Kirin seems to be particularly interested in this matter, as the Kirin Provincial Assembly sent a similar telegram to the Government last week.

Gen. Tsai Cheng-hsun's subordinates have begun to bombard Peking with telegrams in which they state that Gen. Tsai has done excellent work in Kiangsi since he was appointed Tuli of that province. They assert that he has won the confidence of the people and that his removal would cause much regret throughout the province. This section is a reply to the recent appeals by the Kiangsi gentry of Peking for the Government to take action in connexion with the drug monopoly instituted by Gen. Tsai.

NEW EDUCATION ENTERPRISE IN HUNAN

Corner Stone of Theological College Laid

From Our Own Correspondent.

Changsha, Hu., Apr. 14.

Two interesting functions have just taken place in the missionary educational circles of Changsha. On Friday, the Fu-siang Girls's School held a meeting to commemorate its tenth anniversary; on Saturday the corner stone of the new school buildings of the Hunan Union Theological School was laid.

The Girls' School is a union work between the Presbyterian and the Evangelical missions. Under the very able principalship of Mrs. Lingle, one of the leading educationalists, not only in this province, but in China, the school prospers in both numbers and character of teaching. Its new buildings, which would have been ridiculously large a little while since, are only sufficient for the work carried on there to-day.

The Theological School is a union between the Evangelical, Methodist, Presbyterian and Reformed Missions which also started 10 years ago, though a month later than the girls' school. New buildings are in the course of erection fronting the military road and next door to the Bible School—a much larger institution, with 10 times as many students who come from 13 different churches and half the provinces of China.

The corner stone was duly laid by the masons before the ceremony—its size and the lack of proper tackle prevented any attempt at a spectacular display of amateur masonic craft. A cavity hollowed in the stone was filled by the President with a Bible, a typescript history of the Institution, a complete list of its 73 students and a copy of the Constitution of the Board of Directors and the Regulations of the School. The four characters "Hsieh Ho Shen Hsueh"—"Union Theological School," which are inscribed on the face of the stone were written by a Hanlin. The Rev. T. W. Mitchell of the Presbyterian Mission gave an excellent address. Happily the gathering was favoured with fine weather, and indeed with three previous fine days. It is almost the first time for the year that the ground on which the building is being erected had been anything like dry. The rainfall has not been excessive in quantity, but it has been in the number of days over which it has been spread. Dr. Fuchs, the great oculist, spent a week here a short time ago and in his pawky way intervened in a discussion about dialects with the question "Is there a Hunanese word for sunshine?"

THE MANCHU LIBRARY

Peking, Apr. 14.

A deadlock has occurred in connexion with the scheme to send the four-volume Manchu library to Shanghai to be reprinted. After the arrangements had been virtually concluded, an objection was lodged by the Government. It was pointed out that the library was national property and that the approval of the Republican Government must be obtained before it could be removed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

In the course of the action Peck. v. Russell at Kuala Lumpur, in which possession of a gold mine is disputed, Mr. Russell said that he had been throughout a speculator in mining lands, had formed the China Minerals, Ld., and prospected in coal, wolfram and tin in South China unsuccessfully. The whole capital of that company was lost. Afterwards he continued alone, losing $30,000 (Hongkong). He and Mr. Henggeler were partners in the China Minerals, Ld., and agreed that if a valuable mining deposit was found, the first refusal would be given to the Malayan Collieries, Ld. A promising deposit was found and abandoned owing to the impossibility of communication.

PEACE RESTORED IN WEST CHINA

The Victories of Yang Sen Followed by Rare Tranquillity: Reforms in the Air

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kiating, Sze., Mar. 14.

Kiating, the quietest city in Szechuan—the name has been well earned as it is at least six years since the sound of warfare, more than the regular drilling of troops, has been heard by the residents of the city. Of drill there is a plenty, and possibly no troops in the province are more carefully and thoroughly drilled in every way, except perhaps target practice, than the eighth division.

General Cheng Heng-fan, commander of the eighth division, is a man of peace, but of preparedness withal for he believes in being ready, as well as in using silver bullets to accomplish the task of leaden ones where possible. And if it came to an actual test one could easily predict that the eighth division would give good account of itself.

Possibly the reason for the condition of peace hereabouts is that we are near one source of financial assistance, and Gen. Cheng has the revenue from the Salt Inspectorate at Wutongchiao at his disposal regularly. His men are thus paid systematically and can be sure of their regular monthly money when the end of the month comes round. Officers and men alike are fairly treated and can depend upon their commander to do the fair and proper thing each time occasion arises, hence we have peace within our borders, and amiable treatment at the hands of the soldiers.

GIVE US PEACE.

The kaleidescopic changes which Szechuan has been undergoing for the last few years, have stopped now for some time, and with the advent of Gen. Yang and his associates Liu Hsiang and Liu Tsen-hou, the whole of West China looks for a long cessation of hostilities. With the enemy, under Hsiong Keh-wu and Lai Hsin-huei, south of the Yangtze, and the Federal commanders in charge at Chêngtu, the situation looks much brighter indeed than it has for some years. There are places here in the province where the official has changed over a dozen times in the year, and such conditions cannot be for the welfare of the country. The advent of Liu Hsiang and Yang Sen bids fair to give the country a settled condition, which is the fond hope of the native. Give us peace regardless of who is at the helm, is the cry one may hear all through the country.

The actual governors of the province are not as yet settled. Where one province has had as many Robin Hoods as has Szechuan, the settling of the proper head of the provincial government is no easy task. There are those who feel that the honour should not go to Yang Sen, and others that Liu Tsen-heu should not take his place as Governor. If these two men should be given the highest places, there is a great possibility of dissatisfaction among the generals who have fought to keep the province loyal to the North. On the other hand for seven or eight years now, Peking has recognized Liu Tsen-hou as the head of the province.

FACTORS OF UNREST.

Nor is the position of Yang & Co. secure at present. Not far from Chêngtu we have the third army under Gen. Liu I-chiu, which is a factor to reckon with. In union with the third army is the eighth division, with its headquarters here and at Suifu Gen. Liu Tsi-chan is also a friend of the third army and the eighth division. Therefore any cause which estranges the goodwill of this clique, will have to reckon with a host with no small power behind it.

The present squabble at Yachow and beyond is one of the cases where there are wheels within wheels in this great political game at which the Chinese are past masters. It would seem that, because Hsiong Keh-wu had such a strangle hold on the third army under Liu I-chiu, it was unable to move against him, much as its officers would have liked to join in with the Federal troops. Because of no action on the part of Liu I-chiu, a letter was sent past him on to Yachow to Gen. Cheng Hsia-lin, the Border Defence Commander, to attack the third asmy. This letter was intercepted by the censors of the third army and of course they were on their guard against the attack of Cheng. This latter general did, however, come down into the territory of the third army and take up positions, but not until the armies of Yang Sen and Liu Tsen-hou had defeated the armies of Hsiong and Lai. Hsiong having made his escape and Liu being free to make some definite action, at once attacked Cheng Hsia-lin, while Yang Sen winked at the little tempest in a teapot being enacted at Yachow. It was enough to teach Cheng a lesson which he will not forget and now the third army are being called off by Yang and Liu Tsen-hou.

YANG SEN'S REFORMS.

The Chêngtu daily of March 12 now reviews the general orders of the Yang party in which they deal at length on the important position of the border defence commissioner, and the necessity of assisting him in his duties, lest more trouble befall the province. This one can but think is the nice way for the Yang party to tell Liu I-chiu that he has punished Cheng Hsia-lin and must now cease, from attacking that general. Now a place will have to be found for Liu I-chui, and Cheng Hsia-lin will be reinstated in his position of border defence commissioner.

General Yang Sen is a man of strong impulses, and advanced ideas. He is impetuous and if any fault were to be found with his aggressive policies, it would be that he does not take time to mature his plans for reform, before putting them into action. Were he more considerate of the advice of his advisors he would make more progress in his government. Since his return to Chêngtu, he has made plans for the beginning afresh of the road to Wanhsien, has linked up West China with the Good Roads Commission of Shanghai, has promised to re-open the government medical college, and has placed many and good reforms in practice in Chêngtu. Even those who complained of his over-use of funds in Luchow, are compelled to admit that his government is better than any other men who has been at the head of affairs in West China for many years. If General Yang could be put in some place once more where he can work out his plans and ideas unmolested, it would undoubtedly be for the bettering of the whole of West China. This is why some of the deep thinkers are hoping that he will not take any active lead in the political situation in Chêngtu, but be content with some position of lesser importance elsewhere for the time being at least.

OPIUM CALLING FOR ATTENTION.

Opium growing which has been on the increase in the province is to be one of the reforms instituted by the new régime. And it is sadly needed, for the officials and military have used it as a means to enrich themselves, in most cases. It is worthy of note, however, that the district ruled by the eighth division has not been planting opium.

Kiating boasts of a new and up to date hospital. The Canadian Methodist Mission are leaving their old place and occupying a fine new fifty-bed hospital, just completed. The hospital will be opened just as soon as some more equipment which is now on the river above Chungking arrives.

Guests in Kiating at present are Mr. Ager, representing the American Drug Co. of Shanghai, who brings a supply of medicines for the native agencies of the firm, and Mr. Ballantyne of the Asiatic, Petroleum Co., who is on a tour of inspection. Both say that they find Kiating a relief from some of the places lately visited where the chief topic of conversation is bandits. Of these we have none here.

Communication for native craft is now opening up and with the rising of the rivers, the steamers will soon be running to Suifu, and then later to the head of navigation for West China, Kiating. Business men are optimistic and looking for much brighter days in the not distant future.

KILLING THE GOLDEN GOOSE OF FUKIEN

Young but Prosperous Silk Industry Facing Ruin Through the Governor's Avarice

Cases of cumsha, commission, squeeze, or extortion—call it what one will—are a matter of every-day life in China. Often, however, someone goes rather too far and then it is only right that the fullest publicity should be given to the incident. A tale under this category comes from Fukien, a province that has gained an unenviable reputation as regards squeeze. Fukien is one of China's most prosperous agricultural provinces, rich in all the more common products of the soil and specializing in wood, tung oil, tea and silk. The patient and industrious small farmer is well known amongst Tuchuns and brigand Generals as "an easy mark" and consequently Fukien always has been regarded as one of the choicest plums in the basket. The gentle Governor who recently retired from office after serving the province faithfully for five years and doing his best for the general good of China, amassed the tidy little fortune of $20,000,000 during that time, and the benevolent gentleman who succeeded him did moderately well in getting away with $3,000,000 in a year.

The present incumbent evidently has studied the methods of his predecessors with care and proposes to be as great a financial success—personally—and even the sure ruin of Fukien's youngest but most promising industry has not called a check to his avarice. Many silk experts who have toured in China have reported on Fukien as being a district eminently suited in every way to sericulture and in late years a great deal has been done for the promotion of the industry in the province. Foremost have been the Shanghai Committee for the Improvement of Sericulture and the staff of the Fukien Christian University, particularly Prof. Kellogg. The best eggs and mulberry trees procurable were distributed amongst the people and the industry encouraged in every way. The Fukienese were willing to be taught, they planted mulberry trees all over the province and, best of all, the industry flourished in every way.

Substantial returns began to come in and the annual production increased to a value of $100,000 yearly, with every evidence that there would be an enormous growth within a few years. Most of the silk hitherto has been used locally, but last year it was found possible to export $30,000 worth. Now the blow has fallen. The Governor decided that such a lucrative industry must be taxed and as the easiest way of getting in his share quickly, he sold the rights of taxation for $25,000. The purchaser asked for a guarantee that he would be able to collect the money and he has been promised that soldiers will be placed at his disposal to ensure enforcement of the tax. No limit has been placed on the tax and the man who has purchased the right may, with the aid of the soldiers, make any demands he chooses. The countrypeople know from past experience that the taxes will not be light, when a large sum has been paid for the privilege of collecting them and when there are hungry military tax-gatherers also to be satisfied.

It is stated that if the industry had been allowed to continue its peaceful way, in two years' time the annual value of the silk produced would have been quite $2,000,000 and probably more, but now the people see only ruin before them. Protests have been made and committees have been formed in the province and elsewhere to endeavour to secure something approaching justice, but it is candidly admitted that there is very little hope. Naturally there can be little when the Governor will only laugh at Peking if it attempts to remonstrate with him.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY IN JAPAN

Automatic Retransmission of Messages

Tokio, Apr. 14.

Direct and automatic retransmission will shortly be opened between the Central Telegraph Office and the Funabashi Wireless Station, which will result in the speeding up of radio communications with Manchuria and other points in Asia by three or four hours.

A similar quickening of the domestic radio service will result from the automatic retransmission of messages between the Tokio Central office and the two sending and receiving stations employed in this service.—Reuter's Pacifis Service.

SYDNEY, Apr. 18.—The Minister of Defence, Mr. E. K. Bowden, announced to-day that a new seaplane base would be established at Port Jackson.—Reuter.

FRESH rumours of a movement to restore the Ching Dynasty appear in the Chinese press. Mr. Yang Tu, the famous monarchical supporter who was the first man to address a petition, in 1915, to President Yuan Shih-kai urging him to ascend the throne, is again reported by the "Sin-wanpao" to be extremely active. He is now said to be negotiating a loan of $6,000,000 from a Japanese in Hankow. Meanwhile, Hsuan Tung, the last Manchu Emperor, is said to have called a meeting of his associates, former Ministers of State and Councillors, to discuss action in connexion with Parliament's proposal to cancel his abdication agreement. This will mean stoppage of payment of the ial House under the "Special Excellent Treatment" plan" says the "Eastern Times."

SHANGHAI NEWS

A WORLD FAIR FOR SHANGHAI

The Proposal Again Brought Forward: What it Would Do for the Port

A year ago Mr. G. A. Bena raised the question of holding a world exhibition in Shanghai. The project was not then taken up by public bodies owing to the political conditions, including the Lincheng incident, then under the purview of the public, but it is understood that Mr. Bena has once more approached the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce with a request that all interests in Shanghai should be summoned to a meeting to consider the matter. In an interesting brochure on the subject Mr. Bena puts forward the following reasons for the holding of such an exhibition:—

Because Shanghai is the principal economical, spiritual and intellectual centre of New China and will play the most important part in the future development of this great country.

ALL WORLD CONGRESSES.

A World Exhibition in Shanghai will put in direct contact all that has been done up to date, by the outside world and China, in every branch of human activity. It will be possible to have in Shanghai all the World Congresses that will be held in the year of the exhibition. Our ablest brains in business, industry, science, art, philosophy, etc., will have an opportunity to come in contact with all that China has done in those branches during several millennia—a thing that is now impossible to do through the medium of the few books existing on those subjects. No one need be at all surprised if foreign scientists, artists and philosophers should discover in China the sparks of new ideas that would materially contribute to intellectual and social advancement.

The benefit that the exhibition will bring to the Chinese is very evident. They will have before them a comprehensive and convincing presentation of all the latest progress of western civilization and they will be able to choose what will be most suitable for the progressive advancement of their own country.

Shanghai will benefit most by a World Exhibition, not only by the great increase in business that is certain to come immediately before, during and after such manifestation, but by the public and private initiative that is bound to result from such an occasion.

ACCELERATING PUBLIC UTILITIES.

There are now many projects of great public utility that for one reason or another are not carried through which a World Exhibition would accelerate. Mr. Bena mentions only the two principal ones—the development of the Shanghai Harbour and the extension of the Settlement.

There is in Shanghai at present quite a wave of intellectual activity. The President of the Science and Arts Society is justly clamouring for an art museum. The exhibition could solve the problem, besides others just as important. The building which during the exhibition would serve for the purposes of meetings, Congresses, and various festivities could be a permanent structure designed for the purpose of serving, after the exhibition, as an art museum, an up-to-date library and an international commercial and industrial museum. The latter is a real necessity for Shanghai and ought to be supplemented by a complete chemical laboratory for the testing of Chinese produce under the supervision of the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce, which should be authorized to issue official certificates.

The exhibition will give an opportunity for beautifying Shanghai by the execution of great public works; which works will necessitate the collaboration of the Chinese, French and International authorities.

SAN FRANCISCO'S EXAMPLE.

San Francisco planned her great exhibition in the year of the earthquake—only a few months after the disaster—and made it a success in spite of the world crisis of 1907 and the world war of 1914. Shanghai has but to follow the splendid example of her sister on the other side of the Pacific.

Mr. Bena feels certain that Shanghai will prove capable of accomplishing what is sure to bring her prosperity and fame.

EMPRESS OF CANADA IN PORT

Over 300 Globe Trotters Landed to View the Wonders of Shanghai's Denizens

The R. M. S. Empress of Canada, which sailed from Vancouver on January 4 and New York on January 30 on a world cruise, arrived in Shanghai on Sunday, after having visited 15 countries and traversed more than 30,000 miles, Captain Samuel Robinson, R.N.R., C.B.E., who commanded the R. M. S. Empress of Australia while the latter vessel was at Yokohama last September when the earthquake occurred, and who, for his heroism was awarded the C.B.E. and the silver medal of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem (the second time only that the latter medal had been bestowed upon a Canadian), being at the helm.

The huge liner is a regular floating palace: she is 21,500 tons (gross) and 26,650 (displacement), and is the largest vessel that has yet circumnavigated the globe. She has an average speed of 19.5 knots an hour (22.5 maximum). An idea of her size may be obtained from the fact that seven times around her deck constitute a mile. Apart from carrying all the necessities for the "globe trotter" (the 200 large airy staterooms, two beautiful swimming pools and a gymnasium, moving picture apparatus, laundry, bar and what not) the steamer carries a crew of 78 Europeans, 401 Chinese and a dozen Filipinos.

Amongst the 545 passengers whom the steamer brought to Shanghai were Sir Augustus M. Nanton (a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway), Lady Nanton, and their daughters, Constance and Marguerite, General H. C. Nanton, C.B., C.I.E., R.E., (his brother, who for 34 years was stationed in India), Mr. Charles Murphy (general manager of the western division of the C.P.R.), Mrs. and Miss Murphy, Mr. Mark Workman (former president of the Dominion Steel Co.), Mr. E. Alex. H. Blair (son of Sir Robert Blair, Secretary of the London County Council), the Hon. Nathaniel Curry (a member of the Canadian Senate), Mr. H. Holdsworth (Mayor of Wakefield), Mr. W. Kitchen (a prominent retired lumber-man and railway contractor), Miss Dorothy H. O'Ryan (daughter of Maj.-Gen. John F. O'Ryan, the American Chateau Thierry hero), Mr. J. Bernard Avegno, (representative of the American Guaranty Co.), Mr. Adolph L. Bemberger (considered to be one of the wealthiest men in America), Mr. Horace M. Caine (a well-known underwear manufacturer), Col. George J. Dorey, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States and Judge Advocate of the American Overseas Forces during the War), and Mr. W. D. Hoxie (president of Messrs. Babcock Wilcox & Co.).

Mr. Peter Sutherland, general agent of the Canadian Pacific Steamships at Hongkong, is assisting Mr. C. E. Benjamin in the direction of the visit to China.

Mr. J. W. H. Ferguson, Statistical Secretary of the Customs, went Home on Monday by the Empress of Australia, on long leave. His place is taken by Mr. de Luca.

AMERICAN DINNER TO JUDGE PURDY

Large and Representative Gathering: Guest's Views on Extraterritoriality

Over 350 guests welcomed Judge M. D. Purdy at the American community's dinner in his honour at the Carlton Café on Thursday, under the auspices of the Far Eastern American Association in co-operation with the American Chamber of Commerce, American Association of China, China Central Committee (Red Cross), American Legion, American Co., S.V.C., American Troop, S.V.C., American Women's Club, Shanghai American School, American Club, Columbia Country Club, and other bodies.

Mr. Sterling Fessenden, President of the Bar Association, presided, and among others present were: Admiral Washington, U.S.N., Mr. Nelson T. Johnson, Consul-General at large, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. James Porter Davis, Messrs. Jacobs and Bucknell, American Assessors at the Mixed Court, members of the Consular staff, Mr. O. F. Roberts, former President of the China Association, Mr. M. R. Nicholson, U. S. Treasury Department, Mr. G. C. Howard, U. S. Trade Commissioner, and Mrs. Howard, Captain W. I. Eisler, Dr. S. A. Ransom, and Capt. Kimberley, of the U. S. S. Huron.

Mr. Fessenden spoke a few words of welcome to the new arrivals, and then introduced Mr. P. P. Whitham, who in the course of his speech of welcome said:—

It is difficult for us to realize that this great modern commercial metropolis had its beginnings only 81 years ago. The first American established himself in business in Shanghai in 1844. It may be of interest to recall that, although he did not take office, the first American Consul appointed to the post at Shanghai bore the same surname, Mr. Henry Fessenden, as the Chairman of this evening's function.

In conclusion Mr. Whitham said that not only would the Judge find that Americans in Shanghai pulled together in order to advance their national interests; they also co-operated with other foreigners as well as the Chinese in furtherance of all their mutual interests.

On behalf of the American organizations represented there, he welcomed Judge Purdy to Shanghai and extended to him assurances of their good will and best wishes.'

JUDGE PURDY'S SPEECH.

Judge Purdy said: I thank all of you, my friends, for the kind welcome you have given us, and I may say for all of us that it is a pleasure to come to Shanghai.

"I am one of those unfortunate few, who believe that after dinner speaking is one of the survivals of former cruel and inhuman tortures, and I hope that such will soon be prohibited by Constitutional amendment.

There was recently a cartoon in the "North-China Daily News" of the new American Judge Purdy, who "refuses to be drawn on extraterritoriality." When that first appeared I felt as though lashed to the mast, both as to form and to substance. My first idea was to demand a retraction, but on further reflexion (in the mirror) I realized that what the Editor did was with worthy motives and of justifiable ends.

I doubt if few of us realize what the American Government has done for its citizens away from home, and that we here in China as well as in other foreign lands are protected as in the States.

It is a splendid thought—when you go into this land far larger that the United States, the law and its institutions follows you. You are tried in the Courts founded upon the principles of justice of your ancestors. That, ladies and gentlemen, is my idea of extraterritoriality. This institution is a privelege but it also conveys corresponding duties and obligations.

"SECOND TO NONE."

Continuing, the speaker dwelt upon the splendid work of Judge Lobingier and the position of the American Court (second to none in China), which was done through his efforts.

"But to keep up this splendid standard the Court must have your sincere help and co operation. I know that you will keep up the standard of the body, and I pledge you here and now that I will do all within my power to sustain that institution that my predecessor has built in in the Orient.

What we want to do in this Far Eastern land is to be helpful to the people of the Republic of China. We want them to realize the blessings of free government institutions and democratic government.

"I know that we will in our every-day life, in social and business lives bring this home to the people that we meet and so act and do that the people of China will be glad that we are here."

SUSPECTED ARMS RUNNERS

Dramatic Night Arrest by River Police on the Huangpu After Sharp Tussle

Two Frenchmen and a German in possession of 17 automatic pistols and 1,000 rounds of ammunition were smartly captured by two Chinese constables in the River Police on the night of the 17th instant.

The constables were patrolling the river in a sampan near where the M.M.S. Chambord is anchored in midstream. Shortly after 8 o'clock their suspicions were aroused by another sampan containing the foreigners, which they stopped. The foreigners resisted being searched, and, it is alleged, one of their number fired a shot at the constables to frighten them, afterwards throwing the weapon into the water. Shortly afterwards an M.B.K. launch came to their assistance. When the craft reached the two sampans further resistance is said to have been offered by the foreigners, but they were eventually got into the motor-boat. They asked to be taken ashore or back to their ship, while the police told the motor-boat's laodah to proceed to the Wetmore Road Police Hulk. Further trouble appeared imminent when a foreign police officer, Sgt. Bensen, made his appearance in another sampan and ordered the motor-boat to proceed to the Hulk.

JUGDE LOBINGIER'S RECORD

The Ninth Court of Appeals, California, has upheld Judge Lobingier's decision in the action by the Banque Belge l'Etranger v. Montgomery Ward & Co., states a private cable received in Shanghai yesterday. By this decision of the appellate court Judge Lobingier has completed his full term without a single judgment of his being reversed.

Plaintiffs, who were represented by Messrs. Schuhl & Schoenfeld, were awarded Tls. 14,000 damages and costs by Judge Lobingier.

A new vessel for the Tsungming Island trade, the Tong Zing, was successfully launched at the yard of the Société Franco-Chinoise de Constructions Metalliques et Mécaniques on the 17th instant. This vessel is a sister ship to the Hong Dah, also launched at this yard on March 22 for the same owners. Both vessels are expected to be ready in about seven weeks' time for the Tsungming Island run.

A man who went to have a bath after 40 years' abstinence from bathing and died in the bath was referred to in an English coroner's court recently, when an inquest was held on his brother, who also died from self-neglect. Apparently there was a strong hereditary taint here which would delight the heart of Dean Inge, who denies that man is moulded by circumstances. There was certainly no circumstance compelling these two brothers to neglect themselves as it was shown they were not in want of money.

THE BOWLING CLUB'S ALLEY SOLD

Old Shanghai is breathing its last breath: old customs have died, old buildings razed to the ground to make way for new, even the old residents have subtly changed. Now comes the last blow,—the Shanghai Bowling Club with its ancient skittle alley at 49 Nanking Road has been sold.

The alley has stood in its present position ever since the formation of the Club 70 years ago, let to the club at a rental probably lower than that of any building of its size in the central district,—Tls. 25 per month. The Club's history is both interesting and varied. It has passed through many vicissitudes, periods of prosperity and periods of gloom. There have been times when residents have been almost anxious to pay their Tls. 130 for election and there have been other times when a large proportion of the cost of members shares has been handed back to the holders in order to bring down the cost of membership and attract new members.

The land on which the alley stands is the property of the old Fives Court Club, their claim to possession having been established in H.M. Supreme Court in 1922. There is, however, no question of the Club ceasing to exist. Steps are being taken to secure new premises and every confidence is expressed that such premises will be found.

The history of the Club is a long one and will take some time to compile in compact form. When that is done, however, there will be much in it to interest both old residents and new. The Club is probably the most exclusive in the Far East. The membership is limited now to 24, and the antecedents of a proposed member are regarded closely before election. Once elected, however, he finds himself among one of the cheeriest and pleasantest gatherings east of Suez. The Club has many strange rules, the most curious of which is probably that whereby no-one ever pays for drinks and no chits are ever signed. There is a subscription of Tls. 20 per month from each man and that is supposed to pay all expenses. The bowling alley is famous all over the East, and hardly less famous are the pink drinks—an awe-inspiring concoction of the cocktail variety,—one of which every man is supposed to drink before he leaves the Club's portals.

LINERS COLLIDE IN HUANGPU

Soudan Swung Broadside on to the Pres. Cleveland by Tide: Damage Slight

The P. & O. S. Soudan and the President Cleveland came into collision in the Huangpu on Tuesday afternoon shortly before 3, but little damage was done. The Soudan was inward bound while the Cleveland was moored alongside the China Merchants' Central Wharf. When the accident occurred the Soudan was swinging. She was caught in a tide and got out of control, with the result that she ran broadside on to the American vessel, denting some of the plates in the Cleveland's stern and slightly grazing her own sides. Altogether, however, the damage was very slight and the Soudan continued on her way.

A SECOND COLLISION.

A more serious collision occurred somewhere outside of Woosung in the early hours of Tuesday morning. The precise details of the affair are not yet known in Shanghai, but it resulted in the Chinese str. Hwa Wu, chartered by the Kailan Mining Administration, having to put back to Shanghai although at the time she was outward bound. The Hwa Wu came in collision with the Russian str. Indigirka, and the bows of both vessels are stated to have been seriously damaged. The Hwa Wu will have to lay up in dock for repairs.

REVENUE CRUISER HAI HSING

Launch of a Fine New Ship at New Engineering and Shipbuilding Co.'s Yards

In gorgeous weather and the presence of a very large number of friends, the fine new Customs revenue-cruiser Hai Hsing was launched on Monday afternoon by Mrs. T. J. Eldridge, wife of the Coast Inspector, at the New Engineering & Shipbuilding Works' yards in Yangtszepoo. Among those present were, besides Captain and Mrs. Eldridge, Captain and Mrs. Hillman, Commander and Mrs. Mulock, Eng. Commdr. Hayward, R.N., Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Arnhold, Lord Addington, Dr. Ross, the Canadian Trade Commissioner, Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Green, Mr. and Mrs. Gavin Campbell, Mrs E. W. Carpenter, Mr. S. S. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. N. Dyer, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Wilkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Brankston, Mr. and Mrs. Blechynden, Mr. C. P. Dawson, Mr. H. G. Mackenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Tweedie Stodart, and Mr. L. Stedman. Among old residents noted were Captain J. H. P. Parker, and Mr. Thomas Weir, re-visiting the Far East with his daughter. A large platform had been erected at the vessel's bows and here at the due moment, Mrs. Eldridge pressed an electric buttom, which released the cruiser and, as she slid rapidly down the ways into the river, broke a bottle of champagne on her and christened her Hai Hsing, amid the cheers of all present.

THE EARLIEST REVENUE CRUISERS.

Everyone then gathered in the Company's offices where refreshments were served, and Mr. C. E. Arnhold, acting chairman, rose to propose the toast of success to the new cruiser and to thank Mrs. Eldridge for coming to perform the ceremony notwithstanding that she was leaving that day for England.

"It has been our privilege in the past to build several vessels for the Chinese Customs," said Mr. Arnhold, "but these have always been of smaller dimensions than the Hai Hsing and intended for service as lights tenders in the Yangtze River. The cruiser which has just taken the water is for similar duties at sea, and marks a new era in the fine record of work performed by this branch of the Customs Service, in attending to the needs of shipping on the China Coast in serving the various light ships and stations, and in giving continual attention to navigation buoys.

"We have to go back many years to reach the date of the first revenue cruiser operating in these waters, namely the Kua Hsing, an iron paddle steamer whose duties, in a small way, were precisely the same as those for which the Hai Hsing is now intended. The service was augmented in 1868 by two twin screw composite vessels which were, however, chiefly employed in preventive work. One of these, it is interesting to note, although long since having ceased to carry out her original work, is now a familiar sight as the police hulk moored off Pootung Point. Three other vessels followed in 1888 having been built in England by Messrs. Armstrong, and much needful and useful scientific survey work was undertaken, and in 1902 an order was placed in Japan for an improved type of ship to meet the increasing requirements of that time.

A FINE FLEET.

"The determination of the authorities to have the coast adequately served and surveyed, and to provide efficient aids to navigation to meet the continual increase in shipping entering and leaving Chinese ports, has prompted them to add a still further vessel to their fleet. This fleet now consists of five ocean-going vessels, and many smaller craft operating in inland waters, and it was gratifying to this Company to have this last order placed with us, in keen competition with other shipbuilding concerns.

"This ship is larger than any of her predecessors, and will in every way be a fine craft, eminently suited for the duties she is to perform, and we have every hope that she will be a credit to the Service to which she belongs and to this Company as her builders. Although primarily intended for the duties I have referred to, she will in common with other Customs Cruisers carry a small armament for cases of emergency and preventive work. I would like to mention that whilst the cruiser has been under construction, we have worked side by side with Messrs. Parker, Rielley and Simmons appointed by the Customs to supervise the work together with Captain Gowing (unhappily not able to be here owing to a motor-accident) and Mr. H. G. Mackenzie of their own service, and our association all through has been of the happiest nature, and I would like to thank these gentlemen for their assistance and courtesy. Ladies and Gentlemen I will now ask you to raise your glasses and drink success and good fortune to the revenue cruiser Hai Hsing, with which I would also couple the name of Mrs. Eldridge.

PRESENTATION TO MRS. ELDRIDGE.

Captain Eldridge replied briefly on behalf of his wife, expressing his regret that Sir Francis Aglen was unable to be there; and Mr. Arnhold then presented Mrs. Eldridge with a beautiful bouquet and very handsome diamond and platinum brooch.

"Dr. Chatley," he said, "has suggested that the libation poured over the Hai Hsing's bows should have consisted of red wine rather than champagne. He reminds us that the custom is a humane variation of the ancient heathen practice of sacrificing a virtuous maiden and besprinkling the new vessel's bows with her blood. This it was thought endowed the craft with the maiden's spirit, and ensured her favourable fortunes. As representing blood the wine should therefore strictly be red. Well, ladies and gentlemen, we could wish for nothing better than for our new-launched vessel to be endowed with Mrs. Eldridge's spirit (cheers). Personally, however, I shrink from anything so gruesome as the thought of sacrificing her even in allegory and even in so good a cause. I hope, therefore, that you will in this instance, with all due deference to Dr. Chatley, endorse our choice of a paler vintage,—and join me in assuring Mrs. Eldridge that, so far from seeking her blood, we wish her and her husband every happiness and a long life to enjoy it in."

Mrs. Eddridge made a very happy reply, saying that it was the last day she would spend in Shanghai and she could not imagine a happier way of spending it than to launch so fine a ship, to receive so charming a present and to see so many friends about her.

THE CRUISER'S DESIGN.

Length overall	260'-0"
Length B.P.	250'-0"
Breadth moulded	28'-0"
Depth moulded to Upper Deck	21'-0"

The vessel is of the combined bridge and forecastle type, having straight stem and cruiser stern built of steel in accordance with the classification rules of Lloyds for 100 A1. The hull is divided longitudinally into eight watertight compartments. She is constructed with three steel decks, and, in addition, an upper bridge deck, navigation bridge and flying bridge deck. With two masts and a single funnel the vessel will have a very smart appearance when completed. Ample cabin accommodation for the Captain is arranged on the upper bridge deck and on the combined forecastle and bridge deck there will be comfortable quarters for the ship's deck and engineer officers.

The upper deck will be fitted out for the accommodation of foreign lightkeepers and Chinese crew, with spaces for spare cabins, bathrooms, lightkeeper's mess room, sick bay, armoury, etc. All cabins and accommodation will be fitted up in a comfortable manner.

POWERFUL MACHINERY.

The deck machinery fitted comprises; a powerful steam windlass on the forecastle deck specially designed for handling various sizes of buoy chains and cables. On the forward and aft side of the foremast is fitted a 5-ton winch, one to serve the 10 ton buoy davit and the after winch for handling 15 ton lifts in conjunction with a steel derrick A one ton steam capstan is fitted on the upper deck aft for warping purposes. The propelling machinery consists of two sets of triple expansion, surface condensing engines, having inverted cylinders and three cranks placed in line directly over the crank shaft. The engines are designed to be entirely independent for propellling purposes. All pumps are driven direct by separate engines. Steam will be supplied at 190 lb. per sq. inch. The engines, boilers and mountings are constructed in accordance with Lloyd's latest rules and requirements.

A Cochrane donkey boiler is installed for use in port and a very complete set of engine room auxiliaries of the latest type is provided for the special duties to be carried out on board. The engineers' workshop requires special mention, being fitted out with lathes, shaper, drills and grinder, all electrically driven and provided with accessories with which repairs to the machinery on board, and on the stations, can be handled when required.

Electric light is installed throughout the vessel and a Marconi wireless outfit of the latest type completes the list of special equipment.

THE CHINESE REVENUE CRUISER HAI HSING AFTER HER SUCCESSFUL LAUNCHING ON MONDAY

ARMED VILLAINS AT WORK

Shroff Robbed and Murdered: Chinese Woman Wounded: Coolie Murdered

Armed desperadoes were again at work during the week-end, and two crimes of a particularly callous nature are under investigation by the police. The first occurred late on Thursday night of last week on the outskirts of the Settlement near the Stone Bridge Road, where a shroff employed by a rice shop, crossing over into Chinese territory, was attacked by two armed men. One held a pistol in his face and the other searched him, and it is curious that although the shroff had nearly $1,000 in his possession the thief took only $100. No resistance appears to have been offered, but the report is that, having taken the money, one of the robbers deliberately pointed the revolver at his victim and fired, inflicting a fatal wound. It was all the work of a few moments and the robbers made off into Chinese territory.

The same night, in the neighbourhood of North Szechuen Road Extension, a Chinese woman was molested by two armed men, one of whom snatched at a gold hair pin she wore. The woman pluckily attempted to defend herself but was brought to the ground by a bullet wound in the ankle, the thieves then making their escape. The injured woman was shortly afterwards discovered by a Sikh constable and was conveyed to hospital.

A third crime, the motive for which is not yet clear since the victim was only a coolie and can scarcely have provided booty of any value, occurred early on Saturday morning in Chekiang Road. Information so far available is that a coolie in the employ of the Shanghai-Hangchow Railway, walking along Chekiang Road in the direction of Kiukiang Road, was followed by two Chinese, one of whom suddenly fired from behind. Two or three shots were fired and all took effect, the coolie receiving wounds which caused immediate death. In this case also, the desperadoes got clear away, for it seems that a Chinese boy was the only witness of the crime. When the body of the unfortunate coolie was taken away by the police it was found that the man had only a few small coins in his possession.

NEW CHURCH IN SHANTUNG ROAD

Dedication of the Tien An Tang Church Building: Long Historical Associations

On Sunday last a large and representative gathering of Chinese and foreign friends were present in the Shantung Road, Ma Ka Choen, to take part in the dedicatory service and the formal opening of the fine new buildings which have recently been erected by the Chinese members of the Tien An Tang Church.

In 1843, the year of the opening of Shanghai as a Treaty Port, the Rev. Walter Medhurst and Dr. Lockhart, of the London Missionary Society, arrived here as pioneer Protestant missionaries, to commence work in this centre. Two years later they moved from rented quarters in the native city to a new site which they purchased in the Foreign Settlement, the present Ma Ka Choen compound in the Shantung Road. Here for 80 years church and hospital work have been continously carried on, and the East and the West have been closely linked together in sympathy and service. The Tien An Tang Church and the Shantung Road Hospital are the fruits of this fellowship between the Chinese and the foreign community of Shanghai. The older residents of Shanghai will remember that until the year 1885 the members of the Union Church met for worship in a church in the Shantung Road compound. In this year Union Church secured its present site in the Soochow Road and the old Union Church building became the home of the Chinese Church which had previously met for worship in the hall of the hospital. The Chinese Tien An Tang Church was for many years ministered to by the Rev. William Muirhead D.D., the Rev. Nie Yuin-san and others. A few years ago the London Missionary Society made an offer to give this valuable site to the Chinese Christian Church under trustees for the use of the Tien An Tang on condition that $10,000 was raised as a guarantee of an undertaking to erect a new church building, and rooms for educational and social service work.

GENEROUS GIVING.

This sum was raised in a short time and now we see the completion of the great enterprise. The Chinese Christians of the church have themselves raised altogether over $50,000. Their giving has been generous and sacrificial; much of the money has been given in memory of former pastors, church officers, and church members by their relatives and friends. One hall is a memorial to Pastor Nie Yuin-san, one to Mr. New (Niu).

The largest hall is dedicated to the memory of the Rev. William Muirhead D.D. who for 53 years did noble service as missionary, pastor and friend of the Chinese. Chinese and foreign friends of Dr. Muirhead have joined together in this tribute to a noble life of service.

At the dedication service on Sunday Mr. Sesson Nie, a son of the Chinese pastor mentioned above, who is Chairman of the Church Council, acted as leader. The sermon was preached by the Rev. F.L. Hawks Pott, D.D., of St. John's University, and addresses of congratulation were given by representatives of the National Christian Council, the Union Church (Rev. A. N. Rowland), the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Shanghai Pastors' Association, the (S.M.S.) Provincial Council and the London Missionary Society. A Chinese choir trained by Mrs. Hsia led the singing and gave appropriate anthems. This new church with its church rooms adds another splendid building for the use of the Christian movement in Shanghai, to those which have been erected during the last few years. It is a fine tribute to the zeal of the Chinese Christians who form its church membership and will give them the means of more worthily worshipping God and serving their fellows.

CELEBRATION OF ST. GEORGE'S DAY

Largely Attended Service at Cathedral: Brilliant Ball at the New Carlton

The appointed programme for St. George's Day was on Wednesday very successfully carried through by members of the Royal Society [illegible] the cordial co-operation of members of the other national societies. Morning service in the Cathedral, conducted by the Society's Almoner, Dr. Symons, was attended by some 70 members, and was followed by a brief office of duty and affectionate memory at the War Memorial, where a wreath in the colours of St. George was set by the President of the Society (Mr. W. H. Donald), Dr. [illegible] in memory of Shanghai Englishmen who fell in the war.

The annual ball at the New [illegible] a brilliant function and socially enjoyable. [illegible] for tickets up to the last moment, with the result that the attendance [illegible] year's throng and the Carlton's ample accommodation was fully taxed. Mr. Ladow and his staff rose to the occasion admirably, whilst members of the various committees saw to it that guests received the honours and hospitality appropriate to themselves and the occasion. Under the direction of Mr. R. E. Stewardson, the ball room was very charmingly set out, a simple decorative scheme in the red and white of St. George having been effectively carried out, the main feature being the [illegible] in these colours, with the county arms of England in relief. The floor was pleasantly overhung with graceful sprays of wisteria, in blue and white, while a huge Union Jack, crowned with the arms of the City of London, adorned the main entrance. The dining room was also prettily decorated, and tables were set out for some 350 people for the supper. Music was played by the excellent Carlton Band, and dancing went on merrily from 9.30 until midnight, when the customary ceremonial took place.

THE BEEFEATERS.

The [illegible] of the Beefeaters, in the wonderfully picturesque costume which has now become legendary, and led by a stalwart, quickly identified as Captain E.I.M. Barrett, carrying the baron of beef. The Captain and his attendant Yeomen, having circled the hall and taken up position in the centre, the whole company rose and joined in the singing of "God Save the King," Mr. C. F. Butt leading as soloist. Then that right good ditty, "The Roast Beef of old [illegible] played by the band, and the Yeomen resumed their march to the supper room, the President and his guests joining [illegible] procession. Among those who sat at the President's table were:

Mr. [illegible] President of St. Andrews Society, and Mrs. Rutherford; Mr. L. M. French Bertagh, President of St Patrick's Society, and Mrs. Bertagh; Mr. T. J. Vaughan, President of St David's Society and Mrs Vaughan; Admiral Anderson and Mrs. Anderson, and Mr Sidney Barton, H. M Consul-General, Colonel and Mrs Gordon, Com. G. de' Rossi, Consul General for Italy, and Mme de Rossi Mr. A Wilden, Consul General for France, and Mme Wilden, Mr. E S Cunningham, U S Consul General, and Mrs Cunningham, Admiral Washington, U S Navy, and Mrs Washington, Mr. S. Fessenden, Chairman of the Municipal Council, and his Honour Judge Purdy, and Mrs. Purdy.

TOAST FOR REMEMBRANCE.

There were no toasts, but the President announced the customary exchange of greetings. The following messages, signed by the President, were despatched from Shanghai:

To H.R.H. The Prince of Wales, President St George's Society, Shanghai Branch respectfully tender loyal greeting good wishes on occasion of Saint George's Day.

To St. George's Society, London, Shanghai Branch respectfully tender loyal greetings and good wishes to parent Society.

Telegrams conveying greetings were also sent to the Presidents of St. George's Society at Hongkong, Kobe, Peking, Tientsin, Hankow and Ipoh.

Messages were received from Kobe, Peking, Tientsin, Hankow, Ipoh Hongkong and London, the two latter reading:

"Best wishes and warmest greetings from Hongkong Society."

The following telegram was received on Thursday by St. George's Society:—

Davis, President St. George's Society, Shanghai. Prince of Wales sends sincere thanks for St. George's Day greetings which he heartily reciprocates.—Private Secretary.

The Dresses

Besides the formal decorative scheme which was so successfully carried out, the ladies present had apparently resolved themselves into a Committee of the Whole to add to the picturesqueness of the occasion and as one looked from the balcony upon the animated swirl of colour on the dancing floor or singled out some special costume for approving inspection, the charming dresses worn on this occasion were such as to bear out Shanghai's claim to being the Paris of the Orient.

Mrs. Trenchard Davis, wife of the President of St. George's Society, wore a stylish gown of dark blue georgette, embroidered in steel beads and modelled on the long, straight lines, and the Vice-President's wife, Mrs. A. C. Clear, chose black to set off her fair colouring, a black satin, cut in softly flowing lines, draped at the side, and trimmed with diamente. Among the guests of honour, Mrs. C. H. Rutherford, the wife of the President of St. Andrew's Society, wore a soft pink fabric, skilfully interwoven by hand with silver, and trimmed with diamente. Mrs. Edwin S. Cunningham, the wife of the U. S. Consul-General, wore a stunning model of electric blue velvet and blue and gold brocade, cut straight across the shoulders, with an epaulet and strings of blue and gold beads on one side. The dress was cut on straight slim lines, with a godet at the side filled in with blue and gold net. Blue stockings and slippers of the brocade were worn with this costume which was finished by a comb of blue and gold feathers stuck at an effective angle in the low-dressed coiffure.

Lady Turner was a stately figure in black, the drapery cleverly disposed and fastened with a large jet cabuchon. Mrs. Milton Purdy, the wife of the new Judge of the U. S. Court for China, wore blue chiffon, trimmed with crystal beads, while Mrs. C. J. F. Symons was another who chose black, appearing in a black lace gown, cut on the straight lines so popular at present. Mrs. Brooke-Smith wore corn-flower blue moire, draped and fastened at the side with a rose. Mrs. O. M. Green wore an unusual and very effective colour scheme of orange charmeuse draped with orange ninon and gold lace, with a girdle of gold tissue and emerald velvet, the transparent neck of gold lace over pale chiffon being cut high. The model was sleeveless with panniers of ninon and gold lace.

Mrs. A. W. Dixon were white crêpe de chine relieved with a red sash cut with a low waist line and straight silhouette, and worn with silver slippers finished with buckles of brilliants. Mrs. Brankston wore a model of beige French satin trimmed with soft floating panels of handmade lace with a bertha of the same, and satin slippers to match. Mrs. P. H. Nye's chic gown of mauve and silver, cut on straight, simple lines, harmonized perfectly with the decorations of the evening. It was a temptation to go on describing all the other beautiful gowns which were worn, but space forbids.

Mr. H. E. Morriss is left yesterday for Peking en route for England viâ Siberia. He will probably be away for five months.

Y. W. C. A. BUILDING ENTERPRISE

Campaign to Raise $130,000 for New Premises, a Centre for All China

At an enthusiastic tiffin given at the Carlton Café on Wednesday the Y.W.C.A. opened its big financial campaign which will run from April 24 to May 24 inclusive, with the aim of securing $130,000. About 250 persons actively interested in the success of this ambitious undertaking sat down together, the gathering including many influential Chinese men and women such as Mr. H. Y. S. Zia, a well known lawyer, who presided at the tiffin, and introduced the speakers, Mrs. O'Ben, a prominent business woman, Mrs. T. T. Wang, the widow of the late chairman of the Chinese Educational Mission in Washington, Mrs. S. M. Woo, a graduate of Radcliffe College, Mr. Tso Bing Chang, and Mr. Ponson C. Chu. Mrs. A. H. Hilton-Johnson, Mrs. C. W. Atkinson, and Mrs. James Yard were some of the foreign members of the committee who were present, and there were many other representatives of the foreign and Chinese community, and a large number of foreign and Chinese business women.

LAND BUILDING AND BUDGET.

About 200 workers, Chinese and foreigners about equally divided, have promised to push the campaign and these are divided into five teams, Chinese and foreigners working together, each taking one colour of the Chinese flag. An original indicator to mark the progress of the campaign has been made by the British-American Tobacco Co., a large painting which shows a Chinese and a foreign girl walking hand in hand (representing each team) along paths which converge at the wide-open doorway of the Y.W.C.A. The flag floating from a pole behind the wall of the building bears the campaign quota figures, $130,000. The idea is that each team as it collects its proportion of that quota will add its colour to the flag, and as each pair of girls moves toward the doorway, the colour of the team follows on the path where she has walked. This painting will be set up at Campaign Headquarters, 61 Range Road, and every Monday and Thursday afternoon during the progress of the campaign the workers will meet to report progress.

The campaign quota, $130,000 while larger than anything of the sort undertaken by the Y.W.C.A. previously, covers primarily the cost of land and building which will serve as the centre for the Chinese Y.W.C.A. in Shanghai, estimated at $85,000, and the balance of $45,000 will provide a two years' budget for the Chinese Y.W.C.A., support the Foreign Y.W.C.A., a clubhouse for foreign young women in Shanghai, and supply a small part of the budget of the National Association which unifies and develops the work of the Y.W.C.A. all over China. In the light of the splendid work done by this organization and its constantly enlarging field this amount does not seem unreasonable, and it is confidently expected that the campaign will be a complete success. The first gift—$5,000—was contributed by Mrs. O'Ben, the widow of the former manager of the Sincere Co., herself an energetic business woman, connected with the Wee-Wee Co. and various banking interests.

SERVICES ALL OVER CHINA.

Mrs. T. T. Wang, one of the earliest board members of the Shanghai Y.W.C.A., and Chairman of the Social Service Department of the Shanghai Women's Club, spoke in Chinese on the work of the Y.W.C.A. and he was followed by Mrs. S. M. Woo, wife of Dr. S. M. Woo, of the Council on Health Education, a graduate of an American college and president of the Board of Directors of the Y.W.C.A. who spoke in English on the work of the Y.W.C.A., not only in Shanghai but throughout China. She emphasized the friendly services which the Association rendered to women all over China and especially to strangers passing through Shanghai, the benefit of the hostel maintained for women travelling alone, the popular education classes, the school and club activities, and others.

Referring to the campaign quota, Mrs. Woo said that it had been apparent for a long time that permanent headquarters were necessary for the successful development of the local Association's work, first because otherwise they were at the mercy of the landlord and could not make definite arrangements for the future, second because in the final accounting it was much better to reduce the annual budget by owning their own property, and third because land values in Shanghai are rising every year and good locations are increasingly hard to secure. Opportunity was offered to buy the property at 61 Range Road, previously owned by the Presbyterian Mission, at a very reasonable rate and they felt themselves very fortunate to secure a site with a building which would meet their needs for the present time.

In closing Mrs. Woo said that the future of China depended largely upon strong, enlightened womanhood, in the making of which the Y.W.C.A. had always played a leading part, and she appealed for co-operation between Chinese and foreign women in this definite effort to secure this aim.

The aims and methods of the Campaign were further demonstrated by a little play in which two canvassers for the fund called first upon a typical silk merchant at his office, asked for a subscription, were met at first with a refusal but presented the merits of the case so convincingly as to overcome his prejudices; and second obtained subscriptions from a typical tea table group of Shanghai women. The singing of a campaign song and more detailed instructions to team members closed a delightful and instructive tiffin which seemed a very auspicious opening for the "drive."

On the authority of the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" Lee Vei-tsing, vice-chairman of the Shanghai City Assembly, has discovered that, as a condition of the return of the International Mixed Court to China, the Diplomatic Body is demanding "an extension of the Settlement from the north of Range Road and Honan Road to the Huangpu River and from Hongkew Park northwards."—Somebody's geography seems to be a little at fault.

WEDDING

Bachrach-Ware

A very pretty wedding, attended only by close relatives, was celebrated on the 17th instant at the Free Church, which was artistically decorated with marguerites, when Miss Helen Ware, daughter of the late Rev. and Mrs. James Ware, became the bride of Mr. Roland Bachrach, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Bachrach, of London. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. L. W. Faucett, M.A., of St. John's University. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, Mr. W. M. Cameron, looked charming in white brocaded silk, made with sleeves and the right panel of silk lace. The other panel, which touched the ground, was of silk, both being caught with pearl buckles. The veil of Breton lace, cap-shaped, was fastened with an orange blossom wreath and the bridal bouquet was made of pale pink carnations.

The bridesmaid, Miss Elizabeth Arthur, a niece of the bride, wore daffodil yellow organdie with hat to match, and carried jonquils. Mr. Luther G. Day accompanied the bridegroom as best man. The home of the bride, 58 Edinburgh Road, where the reception which followed the ceremony was held, was a bower of spring blossoms, white lilac and bridal wreath. A large number of friends gathered to express their good wishes for the young couple and after a delightful afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Bachrach left for the Soochow lakes, the bride wearing a three piece costume of grey gabardine, with a hat of grey georgette, embroidered in henna.

Mr. Chang Chien, Jr., High Industrial Commissioner to Europe and America, left on Wednesday, with his colleagues for Nanking. After conferring with Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, Governor-General of this province, Mr. Chang will return to his father's home in the now famous industrial town, Nantungchow.

CORRESPONDENCE

PROHIBITION.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Under Notes and Comments in your issue of the 7th instant, you publish a really marvellous list of benefits arising from Prohibition in the States, and then add from your own pen "Yet we cannot get away from the feeling that prohibition is a vicious infringement of liberty and a confession of weakness." In all this I heartily agree except in the use of the word, "vicious."

The defence of alcohol amongst people of refinement has finally narrowed down to "infringement of liberty" and the use of it largely as a social necessity. All the old arguments as to its food value have been set at naught and its place in medicine very greatly limited—a great many doctors taking the position that in most cases its final effect is harmful rather than beneficial and so use other drugs which have no bad after effects.

Practically all laws of prohibition are an infringement of liberty. If Shanghai society prefers to tarry over mere food and arrive late at a performance, even of such artists as Kreister, why infringe on their liberty by suggesting anything which would make it impossible for them to be a nuisance to the majority. If an esteemed citizen desires to stop his car in the busiest road at the busiest hour of the day and enjoy his cigarette, why should we desire to infringe on his liberty, though we thereby relieve the great majority of a nuisance. We all know that laws are made that the greatest good may come to the greatest number, whether they be laws of prohibition or not. Why then should some people feel that in the case of Prohibition it is vicious and yet in most other laws they think it proper to prohibit?

There are two sides to "personal liberty" and both sides must be considered. Pat was happily drunk and in throwing his arms about hit a bystander on the nose, whereupon the bystander knocked him down. Pat claimed that he was at liberty to throw his arms about, whereupon the bystander informed him, "your liberty ends where my nose begins." One morning a woman in Shanghai left for her work (whereby she supported herself and husband). During the forenoon the husband "loaded up" and fell down the stairs, and had to be brought to hospital. Word reached the wife and she arrived at the hospital just as the nurses were undressing the husband. To assist she kneeled to unloose his boot, whereupon he deliberately kicked her in the face. Does anyone feel that a law made with the hope of making such a thing impossible is an infringement of the wife's liberty? Confession of weakness, yes, but not on the part of the wife who is the bread-winner, but on the part of the poor devil, and his brothers in distress, who can't resist and for whom you and I should be willing to exercise any strength we may have and use all the power we have to help them instead of thinking about the infringement of our liberty. From my experience I could multiply this case by dozens as could anyone who has to deal with the seamy side of life. So much for "infringement of liberty."

"Alcohol a social necessity," has recently forced itself upon me with increasing persistence, I don't think I am extravagant in saying that the average hostess would think she had been lacking in true hospitality if she did not offer cocktails or some drink to her guests. "What'll you have?" is expected of your host. Some 30 years ago I greatly offended a young officer on an American gunboat because I "begged to be excused." It is good that we have advanced past that stage, but the chief, and perhaps the only, stronghold which alcohol now finds with people of refinement is as a social necessity. The sad part about it all is that while the western district is indulging moderately in this "social necessity," the poor men and women who by habit have found it a real necessity are becoming more and more enslaved by its use. Why make a plaything of something which causes untold misery right at our doors. As we would help the physically weak bear their burden, so I plead, let us uphold everything which would help the morally weak bear their burden.

I am, etc.,
J. B. Fearn, M.D.

Shanghai, April 16, 1924.

 We are sorry to see that Dr. Fearn is as incapable of thinking clearly as other prohibitionists. The person who comes in late at a Kreisler recital or obstructs traffic is a nuisance to everybody concerned. The person who drinks in moderation emphatically is not. A man may even get drunk (though we certainly do not defend his doing so) without being a nuisance. But a man who, being drunk, creates a fight or kicks his wife becomes a nuisance and is promptly amenable to the law. We call prohibition a vicious infringement of liberty partly because it has created a whole series of new forms of law-breaking. It has undoubtedly stimulated many people to drink who never drank before. When the present writer was in New York early in the year 1919, one feature of life that particularly impressed him was that practically everybody drank water with their meals, whether in restaurants or at home. Now he is credibly informed that some form of alcohol is almost considered de rigueur and because of prohibition it is usually of the most poisonous brand. To make laws which by their very nature incite people to break them is, to say the least, a grave mistake, if it does not actually tend to encourage a general spirit of lawlessness.—Ed.

Sir,—The following is an extract from Cromwell's letter of September 12, 1650, to the Governor of Edinburgh Castle:

"Your pretended fear lest error should step in is like the man who would keep all the wine out of the country lest men should. It will be found an unjust and unwise jealousy to deprive a man of his natural liberty upon a supposition he may abuse it. When he doth abuse it, judge."

Shanghai, April 11, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I have with great interest followed letters that appeared in your paper about prohibition. Please let me state a few things, which I know to be facts. There is in one recent letter stated that prohibition was enforced because of the number of votes. Now, if you will interrogate who gave those votes, you will find that the majority are people selling "hooch," thereby enriching themselves, and as well having a sufficient amount of said hooch for their own consumption. In U. S. A. it is possible for every man, or girl, to get as much of that desired, and forbidden alcohol, as he or she likes; and if we take the old saying: "Forbidden fruit tastes best," it is only natural that whoever can get it, will do his or her best, or worst, to get it. Therefore prohibition is not a remedy but a drawback, which should be annulled, as it has been in other countries, for example Norway, where people with broader minds have seen the uselessness of the prohibition. More countries where this ridiculous prohibition has become a law will follow suit, and I sincerely hope that the U. S. A. will see that, ultimately, they are mistaken.

Condemn prohibition, and people will be sober!

A Man Who Knows.

Shanghai, April 21, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Perhaps one of the most interesting aspects of a foreigner's life in Shanghai is the insight it gives us all into the varying modes, manners, mental processes, laws, etc. of other nations of the earth whose representatives dwell here.

Therefore, it would seem that in discussing Prohibition due allowance must be made by the protagonists on either side for the widely differing conceptions of such terms as Justice and Liberty, as well as the general principles governing the conduct of affairs by those belonging to differing civilizations.

Dr. J. B. Fearn takes exception, very rightly, from his viewpoint as an American citizen, to your editorial comment that U.S. Prohibition is a vicious infringement of liberty and supports his view by saying that "we all know that laws are made that the greatest good may come to the greatest number, whether they be laws of prohibition or not."

Now, undoubtedly, if that be the case in his country—and one accepts his authority on the point,—if the majority of persons in the U.S.A. some four or five years ago were so given to the habit of excessive drinking, then heroic measures of Total Prohibition were necessary perhaps to cope with such an exaggerated state of affairs.

But in my country things are different. For example, any intelligent Englishman who studies his House of Commons knows that Laws in England are by no means made that the greatest good may come to the greatest number. We are not so fortunate in our legislative intelligence to have yet achieved that ideal state of affairs during the several centuries that law-making has had its vogue with us.

In America one does not doubt that the noblest minds and best equipped brains of the nation are devoted to its politics, the making of laws, and the betterment of their fellow men—hence, Total Prohibition. It is now counted a crime in that great country to drink a glass of wine, I am told, unless under medical authority.

In England those who can still afford to indulge in that pleasant custom are free to do so provided they obey the law and make a contribution to the coffers of the State (instead of the doctors) for the privilege. Our State, in its turn, hands over that contribution to the government of Dr. Fearn's country in repayment of debts incurred by us, or on our signature, to his people.

In England we can drink a glass of beer or a glass of wine, enjoy it, pay for it and benefit the seller, the State, and ourselves in the process—and still remain respectable citizens. We are not sent to gaol for it—only if we overdo it. We do not think ourselves fine fellows either for drinking a glass of wine, or for rigidly refraining from moistening our lips with beverages which Dr. Fearn comprehensively describes as "alcohol." We do the one or the other as it pleases us and centuries of history have taught us to take it as a matter of course.

> "When wet politicians are no longer allowed to place accomplices in appointive positions, when propagandists of liquor are no longer allowed to incite men to violate the Constitution, when law and order become supreme, then in wealth, health, character, power and achievement America will show the world to what heights a self-governing people can rise when freed from the chains of alcohol."

That is an inspiring prospect.

For the moment, however, we English, still janging the chains of alcohol, gaze upwards at those free men of the U.S.A. toying with their tea-pot tops while they industriously occupy themselves wangling the claims of petrol!

One notes that character comes third on the list of the New World's desires—and Wealth, first.

Dr. Fearn writes:—"The defence of alcohol amongst people of refinement has finally narrowed down to 'infringement of liberty' and the use of it largely as a social necessity."

Such may be the case in his country where the social necessity of "alcohol" is happily replaced by the beneficent "gum" which, I am told, the whole American nation may still continue to masticate without danger of gaol—but that is by no means the defence of good wine, good beer, and good spirits in England.

It never occurred to us to question the desirability of these things used in moderation, or to prevent our fellow men enjoying them if we ourselves did not happen to care for them. Then intense persons came from over the sea telling us what splendid fellows they were, how much money they had, and all the rest of that spell-binding which thrives so profitably elsewhere—and some of the more untutored and restricted minds amongst our people reacted to the novel doctrine.

Hence, in this simple matter of a glass of wine and so on, it is interesting to dwell in Shanghai and exchange ideas with the peoples of other lands and of widely differing civilizations to our own.

W. Bruce Lockhart.

THE FIRST MIRACLE (N. T.)

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—"Rosslyn Picard," in Thursday's issue of your valuable paper, says, "Is it likely that Christ, who lived an ideal life, would have used His miraculous power to provide wine if He held it was wrong to drink (it)?" A quotation like that is not quite satisfactory. "Total Abstainer" might easily retort that the miracle was not wrought to show that Christ held it was right to drink wine, because surely it cannot be suggested that the miracle wine was like man made alchoholic wine!

St. John (Chap. 2:10) says, the governor of the feast expressed his surprise thus: "Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse:" inferring that they would then be unable to tell the difference; whereas, the miracle wine made them sit up and take note.

A careful reading of St. John 2: 3, 4, 5 and 11 would have enabled "Rosslyn Picard" to avoid taking His miracle out of its rightful setting.

Our Lord made the wine to declare His power on taking up His ministry on earth, and used it as a vehicle to show the higher quality of the New Testament. (St Matt. 26:28) His parable of new wine in old wine skins (St. Matt. 9:17) was for the same purpose.

RELIGIOUS TEACHING v. CRIME.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—The "Literary Digest" of March 15 and 22 devotes considerable space to a discussion of the cause and cure of a wave of crime that, according to statistics which are given, seems to be sweeping over the United States. The Editor says;—

"Fifteen thousand people will die this year by murder and homicide in our country. It would take three hours for a procession of those who will thus perish, before December 31, 1924, to pass a given point."

Unfortunately America is not alone in this experience. Every country in the world seems to have developed a class of criminals that take a vicious delight in crimes of violence and murder. This is usually and perhaps rightly, regarded as being the aftermath of the great war when millions of men were instructed in the art of killing. Be that as it may, the fact that in, what claims to be the most civilized nation on earth, in this year of grace, an army of 15,000 innocent people must die by the hands of assassins is sufficiently startling. Equally disquieting is the fact that the majority of the killers are scarcely more than mere boys. Says our authority";—

"Four young men were sentenced to death the other day in Brooklyn and the grim tragedy in the still court-room was the grimmer in that it might have been prevented."

Justice James C. Cropsey, who sentenced the young men said, "One of the outstanding facts is the age of the offenders. Three of them are but little more than 21 years old and the fourth is only a few years older and, indeed, 80 per cent of our criminals are under 25 years of age."

"From the biological standpoint" says William McAdoo, chief Magistrate of New York City, "this army of young criminals is emotionally deficient. That is, they are strangers to love, affection, pity, sympathy, friendship, charity, kindness, temperance and chastity. In many respects they are not much advanced from merely predatory animals."

These statements from responsible public men, whose duties bring them into contact with the class referred to, have attracted wide attention and the cause for this degradation of ideals amongst the youth of the nation has been carefully canvassed. Judges and reformers have agreed that the chief cause lies in the fact that American education is divorced from religion. America, with its polyglot population of divers creeds, found it impossible to devise a course of religious instruction for the public schools which would not arouse vehement opposition from some part of the community; consequently this part of the curriculum was dropped altogether. As the New York "World" says:—

"A knowledge of Greek and Roman gods is necessary for graduation. In school, it seems, every pagan god in history may be the subject of the day's lesson but not the God of the Bible. Children are lacking in reverence. Their sense of the sacred has never been developed. They do not know the attitude of worship. They have no conscious knowledge of God."

The terrible facts of the situation being as stated above and the underlying cause having been ascertained, the next thing was to devise a remedy, so a joint meeting of Catholics, Protestants and Jews—the first of its kind ever held according to the press—met in New York to discuss the situation. They concluded that there was only one way in which betterment might be hoped for. The children must get religious instruction somewhere. In the home, or the school, or the church but, they must get it.

The Editor of the "Literary Digest", sums up the situation thus; "The problem is long past the debating stage. No nation can depend on its police system to preserve its moral fibre. The gallows and the electric chair are sorry substitutes for the Sunday-school and the old-fashioned altar of maternal knees."

The problem is as pressing in Britain as in America. Chaplains in the army were astounded at the dense ignorance of religious truths shown by the men they met in the ranks of our conscripted army.

The France of Marat and the Russia of Lenin are examples of nations without religion. Are we also drifting thitherwards? The cure is "the Sunday-school and the old fashioned altar of maternal knees."

RUBBER COMPANIES.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—The yearly reports being issued by many Shanghai rubber companies make interesting reading, and permit shareholders calmly to survey their investments under the beneficial influence of restriction. I think some will arrive at the conclusion that drastic measures,—similar to restriction—are required in many of the Shanghai rubber companies to induce the large foreign and Chinese investing public again to buy rubber shares.

I do not wish to convey the idea that I have lost confidence in the industry. On the contrary, I have the greatest faith in the future, as under restriction I feel sure that it is entering an era of security and prosperity which is not yet fully appreciated; my regrets only are that my "holdings" in rubber estates which have cost me approximately Tls. 65,000 are in Shanghai instead of Singapore-managed companies.

Let me give a concrete case: in one Shanghai company I am interested in the capital is Tls. 200,000 in Tl. 1 shares, the area under cultivation is 510 acres, output approximately 100,000 lb. rubber yearly, five Directors, Secretary, Singapore agents, etc., the all in cost last year under restriction was 42 cts. per lb. To look for dividends in such companies is a hopeless quest. This is only one illustration of many Shanghai-managed companies: I could name others in which the all-in costs run from 8d. to 11d. a lb. I maintain that this excessive cost in comparison to Singapore managed companies, is due to lack of control through the head office being established in Shanghai, thousands of miles distant from the estates.

The obvious remedy under such conditions is to endeavour to amalgamate these estates with some neighbouring Singapore managed estate under the best terms obtainable, accepting as payment shares in the amalgamated company, thus securing on the spot the benefit of experienced directors and secretaries who have an actual knowledge of expenditure and local conditions and greatly economizing through dual control. If such an arrangement cannot be secured, the property should be sold as soon as possible, under the present working conditions. Shareholders derive no benefit, and will not derive any benefit unless the price of the raw material soars sky high. Will it do so? In this connexion a fact that impresses me in reading the various reports is to note that many directors are also secretaries of their own, as well as other companies, and I venture to suggest for this reason the proposals made may not receive the consideration, from a shareholders' point of view, that they deserve.

THE REFUGEES IN MANCHURIA.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Last night it was my privilege to be a guest at St. George's Ball. This morning I read in your paper the urgent appeal for help of Dr. James A. Greig, the League of Nations Delegate in China, on behalf of the thousands of starving Russians in Manchuria.

It is true, as you say, that Shanghai has its own refugee problem. But, what a contrast! The peace, security and bountiful plenty of Shanghai as evidenced, for example, by last night's brilliant function, and the cruel biting want, the hopeless penury of those thousands of helpless white people living—or rather just barely keeping body and soul together—not so many hundreds of miles to the north of us as so graphically described by Dr. Greig.

I sincerely trust that all who may have missed seeing "The need in Manchuria," on page 6 of your this morning's issue will turn up the paper again, and read of the ragged little white children begging on the railway stations, of the orphans Bishop Iona is trying to feed, of the hopeless lack of work for men, of the mothers who have neither bread nor the means whereby to buy it for the sustenance of their starving households.

Dr. Greig has been doing splendid work for the Manchuria refugees for a long time past. His Report on the Refugee Problem as a whole in China is now receiving the attention of the Council of the League of Nations at Geneva, but, to quote from your article, "Thinking people know that time is required to bring any final solution."

Is it not possible for us here in comfortable, prosperous Shanghai meanwhile to aid the good Doctor's efforts to feed and clothe the hungry and helpless for whom he appeals? It seems to me that unless we choose to selfishly close our eyes and pockets, and to wilfully ignore our obligations as brothers and sisters of these helpless people in Manchuria, our duty is clear.

Enclosing $25 as my contribution, and hoping that many others of your readers will respond according to their means, however great or small,

I am, etc.,
W.

Shanghai, April 24, 1924.

 The $25 duly received will be forwarded to Dr. Greig and we shall be happy to send along any other sums from readers—Ed.

ST. GEORGE'S BALL.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—At the risk of being considered "behind the times," old-fashioned, and the rest of it, I really think that, on such an essentially national occasion as the above, the Committee who arranged the dancing programme might well have improved on the kind of thing one can get any night at a dozen places in Shanghai.

There is nothing wrong with a fox trot, but there is something decidedly wrong with approximately Thirteen fox trots with say two waltzes and a couple of one steps. I am not suggesting that we should necessarily resuscitate the polka, velita, barn dance, etc. but I do think that two sets of Lancers would have livened up the proceedings considerably. At the St. Andrew's Ball, our Scotch friends introduce reels and "Caledonians" and they add tremendously to the pleasure of those present. These are practised for weeks beforehand, and they invariably "go with a swing."

Surely we Englishmen can break away from Carlton and Astor House after-dinner tradition on an occasion like this. A national ball attracts both the young people and an older generation who want something different from the everlasting fox trot. Perhaps the Committee will bear it in mind next year.

I am, etc.,
Pre-War.

THE DUST.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Is it at all possible to raise a campaign again dust? the dust which is such a dangerous and well known feature of the city. Firstly, now that there are new roads outside the settlement, leading to open country, is it really necessary to have riding tracks down some of the main roads? There is the Race Course for those possessors of ponies who live in town, and the Great Western Road and others of the same nature for dwellers in the suburbs. I have in mind especially Avenue Foch, which is covered with dust at the slightest puff of wind, the dust rising in clouds about the eyes, nose and mouth of any passer-by, be he pedestrian or "road hog." These riding tracks seem to be a source of real danger.

Secondly, can the P.W.D. coolies be taught to sweep roads? As everyone knows, their method is to whirl a bamboo broom over their heads, and sweep cheerfully away, raising dust all around them and anybody near at hand. When one realizes that in spite of all this energy, the dust has merely been distributed over a rather larger area and only a very small percentage actually removed, one wonders why the ratepayers do not bring the matter before the notice of the Council. It is almost impossible to take real precautions against epidemic catarrh and other more serious diseases, when germs are being perpetually spread broadcast by the road dust.

I am, etc.,
D. J. W.

THE CREEK TO THE HILLS.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Would some reader who has done the journey recently kindly advise several people who wish to go to the Hills (Zose) this spring whether it is possible go viâ the Siccawei Creek. The general opinion seems to be that it is not practicable these days owing to the numerous quarry boats which block the way. Of course other routes are available, but are long and expensive.

I am, etc.,
Zose.

Shanghai, April 8, 1924.

Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, Governor-General of Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui, has telegraphed to Peking urging the payment of Admiral Tu Shih-kuei, Commander-in-Chief of the loyal fleet, and his men at once. Marshal Chi states that, apart from $400,000 required for immediate upkeep expenses for the ships, the men have not been paid for several months, and action should be taken immediately by the Central Government to pay the money from the Salt Surplus, as previously agreed upon.

Two Chinese Imperial vases were mentioned before Mr. Justice Greer in the King's Bench Division on March 14. "Only two people in this country understand the value of Chinese Imperial vases," their owner, Miss Elsa Jeanne D'Usez, of Montpelier Square, Knightsbridge, said. "These were given as presents, and the pattern was never repeated. The moulds were broken. The penalty for breaking the Imperial regulations was hanging." Miss D'Usez asked for an injunction against Traffics and Discoveries, Ld., from removing furniture from her house. She had, she said, given one of her vases as security in respect to a loan. Mr. Justice Greer said she had had the benefit of £1,000 provided by the company and had not paid it back, so the company had a right to enter.

EXCHANGE.

Exchange remains unchanged at T.T. 3/2½d. The market during the period under review has generally been quiet and steady with not a large volume of business passing in sterling or gold dollars. The speculators have, however, been busy, concentrating their energies on the yen market, in which large transactions have taken place daily. Their position on Thursday night was estimated to be oversold about nine million yen and about square in sterling and gold dollars.

The market opened yesterday morning quiet and steady with sellers of T.T. 3/2½d. to December, Gold $ T.T. 70⅜ to June, 70¼ July/December, but very soon eased off slightly, and at the moment of writing the best sellers are quoting T.T. 3/2⅞d. to December and Gold $ T.T. 69⅞ to May and 70 June/December.

LONDON BULLION

Samuel Montagu & Co.'s Reports

Reporting on the London bullion market on March 12 Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 5th instant amounted to £126,274,745, as compared with £126,272,360 on the previous Wednesday.

Gold valued at $13,371,000 has arrived in New York from London, and 10,000,000 gold marks from Germany.

The Transvaal gold output for February 1924 amounted to 760,617 fine ounces, as compared with 796,768 fine ounces for January 1924 and 704,970 fine ounces for February 1923.

Commenting on the Canadian gold outlook for 1924, Mr. W. B. Timms, of the Dominion Department of Mines at Ottawa, in a recent article states that the activity in gold mining and the exploration and development carried on during the past three years, has brought many mines to the stage of production. Northern Ontario is now producing at the rate of $2,100,000 a month. With an ample supply of power, and with new producers, the Ontario production should be approximately $30,000,000 for the year 1924. Developments in the Stewart district, the opening up of the Rossland mines, increased activity in placer mining, and with improvement in the copper situation, a greater production should be recorded from British Columbia.

SILVER.

The tendency of the market has kept fairly good. There has been some China selling, but not of a persistent character, and supplies from other quarters have been intermittent, though America has been disposed to close with favourable offers. The buying has been composed of bear covering in the Indian Bazaars.

According to the General Bulletin of the American Mining Congress, the U.S. Commission on Gold and Silver says that the effect of the decline in the price of silver due to the expiration of the Pittman Act cannot be determined until the industry has adjusted itself to these conditions for another year, and adds that "a great wastage, which will probably continue under present unfavourable conditions, has taken place in silver ore reserves, mine equipment, and capital invested in the industry." The Commission further states that many of the problems confronting the silver industry are not subject to legislation and suggests co-operation of producers to meet the situation, although the solution of some problems may require amendment to present laws or new legislation. The Commission refers to proposed investigations by the Bureau of Mines as to developing new uses for silver, and suggests a voluntary contribution by producers and fabricators of silver of $10,000 to conduct the work until July 1. Congress has been asked to appropriate $15,000 for these investigations for the year beginning July 1 and the Commission suggests that a like amount be contributed by silver producers and fabricators.

GOLD MOVEMENTS.

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 12th instant amounted to £126,274,905, as compared with £126,274,745 on the previous Wednesday.

A substantial amount of gold came on offer this week, and inquiry on India and Continental account absorbed a moderate proportion.

Gold valued at $6,500,000 has has arrived in New York from France.

The United Kingdom imports and exports of gold during the month of February 1924 were as follows:—

	Imports.	Exports.

Mocatta & Goldsmid's Report

Writing on March 20 Messrs. Mocatta and Goldsmid state:—

The price of silver has only varied between 33 7/16d. and 33½d. since the 13th instant and the market has been exceedingly quiet. China has remained very inactive and India has only made very moderate purchases; on the other hand there have been very few offerings from New York, the price there being slightly above the London quotation on most days.

With such general inactivity it is difficult to gauge the tendency of the market but the amount of silver likely to be offered shows signs of decreasing and without much buying we think the present level of prices is likely to be maintained.

Gold.—India has again bought a moderate amount of this week's arrival, the remainder being taken for New York. The price has varied between 96s. and 96s. 4d. per ounce fine.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Stagnant Condition of Affairs in Every Direction: Nothing of Interest to Report

Apr. 26.

The Shanghai markets this week do not make a cheerful picture. There is little change to report in piece goods, while as far as woollens are concerned the position has been very much overdone. Local yarn spinners are not booking further orders, and all branches of the export trade are dull.

PIECE GOODS.

Interest in piece goods centres mainly in the northern demand for low and medium Whites, in regard to which sales are proceeding at steady prices. Spring Fancies are going into consumption at a slow rate, but even so, the carry over in this department of the trade seems likely to be less than was at one time anticipated in many quarters.

The future continues difficult to envisage. On the one hand Manchester is reported to be maintaining prices at a level beyond the capacity of the China market, while in other quarters there is a feeling that it is more ready to bargain than hitherto. If so, the prospects of new business may be conidered better than for several weeks past. There is, however, a distinct amount of nervousness on the part of Chinese dealers with reference to tael prices, and they do not seem to be at all certain that they can be maintained. In such circumstances speculative purchases and forward transactions are being regarded with some anxiety.

In woollen piece goods the situation locally is described as dead. There has been a great deal of over-trading, and the result is said to mean that little business of importance can be looked for during the next few months. In addition to the two important bankruptcies involving several lakhs since China New Year, about a dozen smaller Chinese merchants are reported to have gone into liquidation, with naturally a very unfavourable result on the trade situation.

COTTON AND YARN.

China Cotton—The same hand to mouth buying on the part of the mills which has been a feature in recent weeks continues. Prices remain steady owing to low supplies and firm holders. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange the market for futures is reported as uncertain owing to a smaller demand in the interior for yarn. Exchange quotations for China cotton are as follows:—Thursday—April 46.55; May 46.35; June 46.05; July 45.45; August 44.35; September 41.25. Yesterday morning's closing—April 46.55; May 46.45; June 46.05; July 45.50; August 44.35; September 41.20. Spot quotations are as follows:—Tungchow 49; Shanghai 46; Shensi 47; Hankow 45.50; Hokushr 45.50; Nanzu 45; Kashing 45.50.

Yarn—While a fair amount of yarn is reported to have changed hands between dealers, the mills are not receiving any fresh orders worth noting. The future market on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange is reported as heavy owing to poor interior demand. Thursday's quotations on the Exchange were as follows:—April 181; May 177.80; June 175.30; July 173.90; August 171.60; September 170.30. Yesterday morning's closing:—April 181.20; May 177.70; June 175; July 173.60; August 171.40; September 169.70.

SILK.

The silk market is very dull, and prices in general are very weak. A small business has been done for Lyons but New York is still holding off.

PRODUCE.

There is no change to report in the condition of the produce market, and nothing of interest is occurring.

COMPANY MEETINGS

JAVA CONSOLIDATED ESTATES

Annual Meeting

The annual general meeting of the Java Consolidated Rubber & Coffee Estates, Ld. was held at No. 10 Canton Road on the 17th instant afternoon. Mr. A. J. Welsh, Chairman, presided, supported by Messrs. S. A. Hardoon, A. E. Algar and E. S. Kadoorie (Directors) and C. J. L. Stewart (Secretary). 17,626 shares were represented.

The Chairman, proposing the adoption of the report and accounts, said:—

Gentlemen, The report and accounts have been in your hands [illegible] permission, I will follow the usual [illegible]

The report covers the ground so fully that there is very little left for me to say.

The output of rubber for the year was some 64,200 lb. less than for 1922 but, in spite of this large decrease, the cost of production was practically the same as last year, a fact which clearly demonstrates the efficiency of and the economy exercised by the two managers.

In common with most of the British owned estates in the Dutch Indies, this company voluntarily restricted its output during 1923 and your directors propose to continue to do so during the current year.

Having loyally done our part towards assisting the recovery in the price of the raw material, it now remains for the Dutch Government to evolve some scheme for controlling and curtailing the output of native rubber in the Dutch Indies, which is increasing by leaps and bounds and threatens eventually to nullify the good effects of the restriction exercised in British Colonies.

Both estates are reported to be in first class condition and capable of producing a very much larger output whenever the time comes that it is deemed expedient to do so.

Pests and diseases gave little or no trouble during the year and labour was sufficient at all times, although it was found necessary to increase wages slightly on Kali Padang Estate for a short period during the coffee plucking season on the large neighbouring estates.

Turning now to the accounts, and taking those of the Dutch [illegible] you will see that the working [illegible] shows a profit of Guilders 248,681.68 as compared with a profit of Guilders 68,396.13 last year.

After making certain deductions and transfers the balance of profit and loss account is Guilders 160,680.34 against a loss of Guilders 1,911.16 last year.

As regards the balance sheet, there was practically no capital expenditure during the year and most of the fixed assets have been [illegible] a reduction has been made to cover the estimated amount of [illegible] due up to [illegible]

The [illegible] Company are quite straight forward and call for no special explanation. If you pass the dividend [illegible] by your directors, the company will start the new year with liquid assets in excess of cash liabilities to the extent of approximately Tls. [illegible] so that it is well equipped to meet any emergency that may arise.

In conclusion, Gentlemen, I am sure that you will join with me in tendering our hearty thanks to the two managers, their staffs, the visiting agent and the [illegible] whose united and strenuous efforts is due the very satisfactory position in which the estates find themselves today.

That is all I have to say, Gentlemen, but if any of you have any questions to ask I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my ability.

Mr. A. E. Algar seconded the adoption of the report and accounts and the motion was carried unanimously.

On the proposition of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. E. S. Kadoorie, the following resolution was declared:—

That a final dividend of [illegible] per share, making Taels 1.25 per share for the year, be paid.

On the proposition of Mr. J. A. Sudka, seconded by A. K. Craddock the appointment of Messrs. A. E. Algar and E. S. Kadoorie as directors was confirmed.

On the proposition of Mr. A. P. Nazer, seconded by Mr. A. K. Craddock, Mr. A. S. Hardoon was re-elected a director of the Company.

On the proposition of Mr. Craddock seconded by Mr. Nazer, Messrs. Lowe Bingham and Matthews were re-elected auditors to the Company.

This concluded the business of the meeting.

SUA MANGGIS RUBBER COMPANY, LD.

Annual General Meeting: Finances Now in a Sound Position

The 14th annual general meeting of shareholders in the above-named company was held on the 17th instant at the offices of the secretaries and general managers, Messrs. Scott, Harding & Co., No. 35 Peking Road. Mr. Leslie J. Cubitt presided and there were also present Messrs. A. K. Craddock and J. H. Teesdale Directors, and Mr. D. M. Butt representing the secretaries. The attendance represented 16,420 shares.

The notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report having been read, the Chairman said:—

Gentlemen,—In presenting the report and accounts for 1923, which have been in your hands for some time, your Directors are glad to say the finances of the company are in a sound position which enables them to recommend the resumption of the payment of a dividend after several lean years.

When the Chairman of last year's meeting addressed you, the restriction programme had only been in operation for two months and the effect had hardly begun to make itself felt, whereas during 1923 the restriction scheme was in force the whole time. Our experience, in common with that of other companies, has been that the scheme has been of great benefit to the rubber growing industry and that its introduction came just in time to save numberless perfectly sound concerns from irretrievable disaster.

That the Dutch authorities have not yet seen their way to follow the British in this sound and far-sighted policy is much to be regretted and we can only hope that the saner section of the Dutch planters and owners of properties will shortly see that their present attitude is a "penny-wise and pound foolish" one, leading to excessive tapping with the inevitable result of lower yields in the future.

EXPORT RIGHTS.

There is very little to say on this occasion, as the report contains very full information on all points and the estate being fully planted, there is little beyond the daily routine to call for comment. You will have noticed that our revenue was augmented last year by the sale of export rights for the extent of [illegible] There will be no revenue from this source during the current year, as the sale of rights is no longer permitted and although an extra source would have been very welcome, I am of opinion that in the interests of the industry as a whole the Government's action in this direction is fully justified.

ESTIMATED OUTPUT.

The crop for the year 1923 was [illegible] and under the new assessment, assuming a 60 per cent. basis, our export allowance is [illegible] lb. Whether this amount will actually be harvested will depend upon circumstances, as there are some 70 or more acres of rubber which in spite of being tested for [illegible] are not yet in a condition to justify a resumption of tapping. On the other hand there is a similar area planted in 1917, which should be ready for the knife this year if required.

THE BALANCE SHEET.

Now, a few comments on the balance sheet. The sum of the Income and Development accounts is Tls. 253,065.61, which, with a planted area of 717 acres, gives a book value of Tls. 327, or say between £30 and £35 per acre. Already Tls. 58,322.24 has been written off development account, but personally I should like to see another Tls. 5,000 written off gradually as opportunity offers, which would reduce the book value to Tls. 300 per acre.

The other fixed assets have been written down to a very safe figure, [illegible] the manager's estimate of actual values, the buildings standing in the balance sheet at only 30 per cent. of cost and the machinery at 57 per cent.

The total liquid assets amount to Tls. 64,825.07, of which Tls. 4,400 represents investment in Straits 5½ per cent. Loan, and Tls. 43,070.41 is in cash, the remaining Tls. 17,354.64 consisting of sundry debtors and stocks of rubber and rice. On the other side we have sundry creditors and uncollected dividends to provide for amounting to Tls. 12,809.26. Thus the position is, after disposing of the Tls. 26,354.42 at credit of profit and loss, as recommended in the report, a sum of Tls. 25,661.39 (including the sum invested) remains against the general reserve of Tls. 25,000. It is stated in the balance sheet that, with the exception of the S.$5,000 Conversion Loan, this reserve is invested in the company's business and I would therefore explain that at the time of closing the accounts the stocks of rubber were not realized; they have since been sold for approximately the amount at which they stand in the balance sheet and your Directors will consider the investment of surplus funds up to the amount of the general reserve.

The net profit on the year's working represents only a fraction over 6 per cent. on the paid up capital, but with the carry forward from the previous years of nearly 5 per cent. your Directors have no hesitation in recommending a dividend of 7 per cent. At the moment the prospects for the current year are rather disappointing as regards prices, but demand remains healthy and I do not think there are grounds for serious anxiety regarding the future.

The estate manager, Mr. Adair, takes his furlough in a month's time, and during his absence Mr. G. T. Koch, who comes to us with very good recommendations, will be in charge of the estate. Our thanks are due to Messrs. Harrisons Barker & Co., Ld., for the efficient discharge of their duties as agents at Singapore & Kuala-Lumpur.

The following resolutions were passed:—

That the report and accounts for the year 1923, as presented, be and are hereby accepted and passed.—Proposed by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. J. H. Teesdale.

That a dividend of 35 tael cents per share, being 7 per cent. on the paid-up capital of the company, payable on April 17, 1924, be paid to shareholders on the register on that date. Proposed by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. J. H. Teesdale.

That the balance standing at credit of profit and loss account, viz. Tls. 7,454.42, after the payment of a dividend of 7 per cent., absorbing Tls. 18,900, be carried forward to the current year's account.—Proposed by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. J. H. Teesdale.

That Mr. J. H. Teesdale be and is hereby re-elected a Director of the company.—Proposed by Mr. A. K. Craddock, and seconded by Mr. L. E. Canning.

That Messrs. Mortimer Reid & Sleo be, and are hereby, re-elected auditors to the company for the current year at a remuneration of Tls. 150.

Dr. Wang Ching-wei, the well-known educator and Dr. Sun Yat-sen's representative here, arrived in Shanghai from Canton on Sunday night.

SEMAMBU RUBBER ESTATES, LD.

Possibility of Dutch Co-operation in Restriction

The eleventh annual general meeting of shareholders in the Semambu Rubber Estates, Ld., was held on Thursday at the offices of Messrs. J. A. Wattie & Co., Ld., the general managers. Mr. G. Grayrigge (the Chairman) presided, supported by Messrs. C. R. Burkill, E. S. Kadoorie (directors), C. J. L. Stewart (representing the general managers) and other shareholders, there being a total of 72,750 shares represented.

The Chairman: The year under review saw the completion of the first 12 months period of enforced restriction and though the result has not been all we expected, it has, however, saved a good many companies from extinction, it has enabled us to make small profits, and has also permitted a certain amount of betterment being put into properties which, when the industry was on the border line of ruination, had to be deferred. In addition, the lighter tapping, the partial and complete resting, called for by the reduced crops, have facilitated the accumulation of bark reserves, points that do not show up in the balance sheet, but which, after all, are a rubber company's main asset. In the matter of price, whereas this company's sales averaged in 1922 8.77d., 1923 averaged 14.77d., a very substantial difference which would not have occurred without restriction.

Reviewing these benefits, it is a great pity that the Dutch East Indies do not join hands with us and make a sweeping success of restriction instead of laying themselves out to produce almost pound for pound the amount we restrict. It seems possible, however, some change of mind, vide a recent Reuter's telegram from Amsterdam, is taking place in Dutch circles, and I am sure we shall all hail the day when the Dutch decide that co-operation with the British in their effort to set the rubber-growing industry on a reasonably profitable basis is the right and proper course to pursue.

STANDARD PRODUCTION AND RESTRICTION.

Standard production for Semambu is set at 263,773 lb., of which last year we were allowed to produce nine months at 60 per cent. and three months at 65 per cent. For the present, pending re-assessment on the new scale, we are still working on last year's scale, but I am hoping the new scale may not affect us unfavourably.

The estate is reported on by the visiting agent as being in good condition and the administration economical. Labour shortage was experienced, but not acutely, and the last two batches of recruits, we are told were none too satisfactory. The health of the labour force also was not of the best, influenza being the chief complaint.

Turning to the Accounts, the net profit for the year was Tls. 17,284.01, which, added to the sum brought forward from 1922, left a disposable balance of Tls. 27,708.99. Out of this an interim dividend of Tls. 15,000 was paid on October 31 last, [illegible] in hand a balance of Tls. 12,708.99. The directors recommend this be disposed of by writing off live and rolling stock Tls. 59.20, which reduces all our fixed assets to the nominal figure of Tls. 1 each, and by carrying forward Tls. 12,649.79. This sum would suffice to pay a final dividend of [illegible] dareems per share, but the board is loth to declare less than 5 candareens. However, an interim dividend on this year's working will be declared as soon as the accounts show this to be feasible. This passing of the final dividend, I dare say, is as disappointing to you as it is to us. The fact is that when the interim was declared the accounts seemed fully to warrant the payment, but exchange ran against us and [illegible] the dividend by a short head. If you will turn up the profit and loss account you will see that we lost no less than Tls. 5,724.70 in exchange for 1923. The policy of the company so far has been to take credit for exchange profits and to write off exchange losses yearly. We had a profit in 1922 of Tls. 5,885.20 and, as I said, a loss in 1923 of Tls. 5,724.70.

Financially, we are in a comfortable position. After providing for all known liabilities, our liquid assets amount to Tls. 91,610.72, of which Tls. 83,333.29 exist in hard cash, the balance in kind. The estate emergency reserve, which had been on fixed deposit earning very low interest in the Straits, was invested in £3,500 worth of Straits Settlement 5 per cent. Loan 1929/1947.

I have nothing more to tell you, gentlemen, and I therefore now beg to propose the first resolution, viz:—"That the directors' report and statement of accounts for the year ended December 31, 1923, as presented be adopted and passed." This is seconded by Mr. C. R. Burkill. Gentlemen, the resolution is before the meeting and is open to discussion.

The resolution was carried unanimously and also the following:—

"That Dr. E. L. Marsh be and hereby is re-elected a director of the company." Proposed by Mr. A. K. Craddock and seconded by Mr. J. A. Sudka.

"That the appointments of Messrs. C. R. Burkill and E. S. Kadoorie as directors of the company be and are hereby confirmed."—Proposed by Mr. A. K. Craddock and seconded by Mr. A. J. Welch.

"That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be and are hereby elected auditors to the company for the ensuing year."—Proposed by Mr. C. R. Burkill and seconded by Mr. A. K. Craddock.

Sir Edward Crowe, formerly British Commercial Counsellor at Yokohama, has been appointed head of the foreign section of the Department of Overseas Trade and will not return to Japan at present. The appointment is an important one and involves the supervision of the British commercial services throughout the world, except in British dominions and possessions. The promotion came unexpectedly after Sir Edward Crowe had made all his plans for returning to Japan. Lady Crowe, who has been seriously ill and has undergone an operation, is making a very good recovery and is able to be out for a short time each day.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

CLUBS AND SOCIETIES

BRITISH CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

A Year of Several Successes: The Pukow Customs House: Trademarks and Extraterritoriality: Huangpu River Police

The 9th annual general meeting of the British Chamber of Commerce was held at the Shanghai Club on Thursday evening, Mr. F. R. Scott, acting Chairman, presided, and was supported by Mr. Sulley Barton, H.M. Consul-General, Mr H. J. Brett, H. M. Commercial Secretary of Legation, and Messrs. A. W. Burkill, R. Calder Marshall, N. L. Leslie, A. B. Lowson, E. F. Mackay, P. W. Massey, L. W. Hutton, G. W. Sheppard, W. H. Trenchard-Davis, E. M. Gull, secretary, and P. Campbell, assistant secretary.

The Chairman said: If you care to refer to the report of the Chairman's speech at the last annual meeting you will see that one of its opening paragraphs read in part as follows:

> The subjects with which I think I need hardly deal, because they were discussed a month ago, are those of internal taxation; the question of having a Custom House at Pukow; the absurdities of the Merchant Shipping Acts, which preclude vessels owned by Chinese Companies from enjoying important benefits which vessels recognized as British enjoy; extraterritorial rights in China; trademarks."

The paragraph continues—

> "Before leaving this group of subjects I feel sure I may say that the incoming Committee will do their utmost to see that your interests in regard to all of them are closely watched and energetically pushed."

Through a series of unexpected changes in the personnel of the Committee, it falls to my lot to occupy the chair at this meeting, and I am in the fortunate position of being able to prove to you that the assurance given by Mr. Burkill last year that your interests would be closely watched and energetically pushed has been fully redeemed.

A CUSTOMS HOUSE AT PUKOW.

To take the first subject mentioned in the paragraph which I have just quoted—a Custom House at Pukow. This time last year that was one of the things we were trying to get. Now we have got it. The Commissioner of Customs at Nanking wrote to the Consul-General, there, Mr. J. T. Pratt, on December 19 last as follows:—

> "I have the honour to inform you that, in accordance with instructions recently received from the Inspector General of Customs, I am now making arrangements for the establishment on the Pukow side of the river of an office for the purpose of allowing duty to be paid on that side. This office at Pukow will constitute a sub-office of the Nanking Customs, detached from the central office at the request of and for the convenience of merchants in order to provide improved Customs facilities and to obviate the delays caused to merchants by the necessity of their crossing and recrossing the river before they are able fully to comply with Customs formalities."

The Chamber began its efforts to get this sub-office on May 18, 1921. There were all sorts of difficulties in the way when we began, some of them genuine, others artificial. However, we've got over them all, largely through the help of Mr. Pratt, whom I should like publicly to thank for his energy, determination and skill.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ABSURDITIES.

Next as to the Merchant Shipping Act. At the close of the Conference of the Associated Chambers in February, H. M. Minister stated that formal application had been made by the Foreign Office to the Board of Trade for an early amendment of the Merchant Shipping Act. That means, that we have made some progress in convincing the authorities of the essential inequity of the present conditions, under which vessels owned by certain British companies flying the British flag and registered at H. M. Consulate are nevertheless not British. They would be British if the companies owning them had their principal places of business in British territory. British individuals in China can own British ships, and British firms in China can own British ships; but a British limited company incorporated in China cannot, as the law at present stands, own British ships. It is an illogical position, which would be laughable if it had not this very serious consequence, that if a vessel owned by a China Company happened to have a collision in our crowded harbour her owners would not get the benefit of limited liability.

As a result of our representations the Foreign Office has now asked the Board of Trade to get the Merchant Shipping Act amended so as to rectify the position.

EXTRATERRITORIALITY.

Next as to extraterritorial rights in China, with which I will couple the question of the Chinese Trademark Law. For months past we have been putting up a fight in defence of extraterritorial rights which the proposed trademark law, had it been recognized by the Diplomatic Body, would have infringed. As you all know, greatly helped by the China Association, we have been successful in our opposition.

I do not wish to occupy your time by going over the whole ground of the controversy, but I do think it is important that you should realize the significance of the Chamber's work in this matter.

There were two distinct issues involved, one the safety of very valuable property, the other the extraterritorial rights of foreigners in China. The safety of trademarks was threatened by the nature of the Bureau and by the nature of the tribunals which were to decide disputes.

The Bureau was to be run entirely by Chinese, who would have had to deal not only with trademarks registered from the date on which the law became operative but with the mass of marks already provisionally filed at the Custom House. The tribunals also were to be staffed only by Chinese and one of them was to consist of judges appointed by the Bureau. Now, even supposing that the Chinese were beyond reproach in matters of administration, a tribunal appointed by the body whose decisions it was to try would be open to serious objection. But when to that fact had to be added the fact that as administrators the Chinese are notoriously inefficient, and as judges notoriously corrupt, the administrative provisions of the law could only be regarded as positively dangerous. If property represented by trademarks had been the only kind involved, we should have felt obliged to oppose the law tooth and nail.

But more than that was involved. Foreigners live and trade and accumulate possessions in China on two fundamental conditions. These two conditions are first that they are subject to the jurisdiction of their own Courts ann secondly that they have a right to be represented by their Consuls in Chinese Courts.

The proposed law overrode both these conditions, for it constituted a Chinese Court, in which there was to be no foreign representation, the final arbiter in disputes regarding the right to register, and therefore the right to use, trade marks, whether such right was in dispute between foreigners of the same, or foreigners of different nationality, or between foreigners and Chinese. Had this been allowed, had our extraterritorial rights been given up in regard to trademarks, without any of the safeguards which were contemplated in 1921, there would have been no saying where they would next have gone by the board, while our rights in property of other kinds would have been endangered.

A summary of the Note in which the Diplomatic Body communicated to the Chinese Government their decision not to recognize the law was issued to you on the 14th. The Note states definitely that should there arise any causes of complaint regarding trademark rights such cases will have to be dealt with strictly in accordance with existing Treaty stipulations whether marks have been registered at the new bureau or not.

The trademark struggle has involved very heavy work and I think the trademark sub-Committee, and its energetic Chairman, Mr. A. L. Dickson, is entitled to a special expression of our thanks for all they have done. The law came before them first on October 2, since when they have not infrequently had trademarks for lunch and trademarks for dinner. Mr. Dickson used, I believe, to have them for breakfast also.

I think our thanks are also due to the other national Chambers, more particularly the American Chamber, for standing by us in this fight. The American Chamber has been cognizant of, and has supported, all our decisions and the readiness with which members of their Committee and their Secretary put their time and advice at our disposal is very greatly appreciated.

RIVER POLICE AND SOOCHOW CREEK.

The Chairman then turned to shipping questions and, having dealt with certain aspects of harbour improvement, said:

Connected with the Harbour are the twin questions of the River Police and the Soochow Creek. On September 11 the Shipping Sub-Committee met to consider a letter addressed by the Senior Consul to the Chairman of General Chamber, suggesting that as the Inspector-General was prepared to finance new capital expenditure totalling Tls. 100,000 on the River Police, so as to increase the force to 58 and give it the necessary plant, but was not prepared to finance more than 25 per cent. of the additional annual expenditure necessary, a special wharfage due of one fifth of one per cent. on the Customs duty might be levied as an equitable method of providing the additional Tls. 75,000 per annum required. We replied on October 11, with the suggestion that steps should be taken to secure closer co-operation between the River Police forces of the International Settlement and the French Concession, and stating that while agreeing with the Senior Consul's proposal we reserved the right to reconsider our decision if at the end of two years the service did not prove satisfactory.

At our annual conference, as you know, we took the subject up again passing a resolution to the effect that we viewed with grave concern the serious increase in thieving and robbery within Shanghai's harbour limits, and urging that measures should be taken to reorganize the River Police Force. We have not yet been informed officially, but I understand unofficially that the Inspector-General has consented to increase his annual grant very considerably. That is a very satisfactory result of our representations and shows what can be done by hammering away.

The frequently congested state of the Soochow Creek is partly the result of insufficient policing, so that if we can get the Police Force augmented and improved we shall be able automatically to improve the condition of the Creek. The Creek will never be an adequate waterway, of course, until it is properly dredged, but in that matter we are up against the tiresome and ever-stiffening difficulty of China's so-called sovereign rights.

INSPECTION OF THE YANGTZE.

Another question that can be reported under the heading of shipping is the outcome of Mr. F. Palmer's inspection of the Yangtze. On this point I need not do more than remind you that it was largely owing to this Chamber that a Yangtze River Commission was established on December 3, 1921, and that between December 12 and 17 of that year Mr. Palmer, who is Consulting Engineer to the Port of London Authority, made a preliminary survey of the Yangtze between Shanghai and Hankow. As a result a Technical Committee was appointed and that Committee has just issued its first annual report, a volume containing information about the river never available before. Mr. Palmer's own report, while disposing finally of the idea that the Yangtze can be conserved so as to make it available at all seasons for steamers drawing up to 15 feet, points to the possibility of very valuable work being done by the Technical Committee just referred to.

THE MAILS.

A word, next, in regard to the mails. As regards outward mails, in July last we received a letter from the Postmaster General in London, dated June 11, stating that he had received from the Foreign Office a copy of the resolution passed at our 1923 conference drawing attention to the difficulties caused by the late arrival of shipping documents relating to cargo sent from Great Britain to China. He informed us that arrangements had been made for additional mails, containing letters and post cards for Shanghai and the Treaty Ports, to be despatched from London every Tuesday for conveyance by the Lloyd Triestino service from Brindisi to Alexandria, onward transmission from Suez to be by a steamer of the Holt line. He also stated that the best possible use would be made of the Canadian Route. These arrangements have certainly improved matters very considerably.

The subject of homeward mails was taken up with the Postal Commissioner early in the year. There had been delays in the arrival of homeward mails and we asked the Postal Commissioner for information. He informed us that a contract was about to be made with the Blue Funnel to carry mails from Shanghai to Port Said for transhipment to Brindisi and overland to London. He also gave us information showing that test letters had been sent via Siberia, which showed a result of 26 days. Since then the time taken by the Siberian route has been shortened to 21 days. The contract with the Blue Funnel has not yet, I understand, actually been signed but mails are being carried by Blue Funnel ships.

We also took up with the Postal Commissioner the despatch of mails to Hankow and were told that letters and newspapers were being sent by rail when the Post Office was sure that that route was quicker than the steamer route.

If members have any complaints to make in regard to mails, the in-coming Committee will be glad to go into them again. On the whole I think things have improved considerably.

FREIGHT RATES.

Another subject which comes under the heading of shipping is that of notices of increase of freight rates by the China Homeward Freight Conference, which came up before the Export and Shipping Sub-Committee last summer. As a result it was decided to ask the Conference to delete the words "by named steamer" in the clause reading.

> "Shippers can obtain refusal of space from the Shipping Companies for three or four days; the rate of freight charged will be that quoted on the day the refusal of space was given to the shipper for shipment by named steamer within 90 days from the date of signing contract, except ore in bulk the forward booking for which is extended to 180 days."

This request was transmitted to London and on February 23 last we were informed that our request had been granted. The clause just quoted now accordingly omits, the words "named steamer."

I turn now to the other matters affecting Export trade, and first to the payments of freight on seeds and cereals. This question was taken up with the China Homewards Freight Conference on April 25, when we asked the Conference to revert to the pre-war system of paying freight on delivered instead of on shipping weight. A reply was received at the end of July, our request being granted.

We are able to record success also in regard to arbitration awards issued by the London Produce Brokers' Association. At our 1923 Conference we passed a resolution urging the Produce Brokers' Association to indicate in arbitration awards the reasons for allowances on, or rejection of, cargo, so that it might be possible for exporters in China and Hongkong to rectify causes of complaint and avoid their recurrence. Mr. C. H. Arnhold took this matter up for us with the Brokers, and while he was not able to get them to do all we asked he was successful in getting them to agree, if requested by either of the parties to an arbitration, to write without prejudice an informal covering letter giving the reasons for their findings.

THE ILLEGAL TAXES.

Under the heading of Import Trade most of the questions that require notice all fall under the heading of taxation. In this department we can record only a series of energetic protests against taxes which are being illegally levied on cigarettes and other imports. The Legation backs up our protests, but the illegal taxes go on being levied, and will go on being levied until some settlement is reached regarding the financial administration of the country as a whole. An opportunity for adjustment may, and in our opinion should, present itself in connexion with the 2½ per cent. Customs surtax agreed to at the Washington Conference, and we have urged that the conference which is to consider the conditions of the surtax should be preceded at an early date by joint consideration and decision by the Powers of their policy towards China. At present they do not appear to have a policy, and until they have they ought not, in our opinion, to come to the surtax conference, for the surtax should be granted only on conditions which the Powers are prepared to enforce and which are of such a nature as will safeguard foreign rights and interests in China.

PIECE GOODS CONTRACTS.

Another matter under the heading of import trade is the Standard Piece Goods contract. Our Piece Goods Sub-Committee's protracted negotiations, first under the chairmanship of Mr. Beytagh and then under that of Mr. Norman Smith, have at long last been brought to a successful conclusion. The Guild wrote to us on Tuesday saying that they accepted the contract in regard to which I shall presently ask Mr. Piercy to say a few words. We have had great difficulties over this contract but now it has been agreed to and will, I hope, receive the support of the Banks. That support is essential and will, I hope be forthcoming. I would thank Mr. Beytagh and Mr. Smith for all they have done.

BRIGANDAGE.

I need not, I think, dwell on this Chamber's contribution to the efforts made by all foreigners in China in connexion with the Lincheng outrage, though the many meetings which your Committee held last summer involved a great deal of work and threw much additional work on Mr. Campbell, who from April to December, during Mr. Gull's absence on leave, was responsible for the Secretariat. I think our thanks are due to him for the very adequate way in which he preformed his duties. It is certainly not the Chamber's fault that the Lincheng outrage has not been more speedily or more satisfactorily avenged. On the other hand the Hankow Chamber and our representations here have contributed to the stationing of a reserve gunboat, the Mantis, at Hankow. Having the Mantis at Hankow enables the naval autorities to maintain wireless communication between Chungking and Shanghai, a fact which has greatly increased the sense of security felt by British subjects resident in the Yangtze Valley, and one for which we are all duly grateful.

THE BOXER INDEMNITY.

A subject on which I should like to say a word or two is the Boxer Indemnity. We have not got very much further with that for the reason that nothing more can be done until Parliament has passed a Bill authorizing the remission of the Indemnity and its use for the purposes to which it is desired to put it, purposes mutually beneficial to China and Great Britain. There are, however, indications that this Bill will soon be under consideration, and in the meantime the Committee which was appointed by our Associated Chambers, of which Mr. J. S. S. Cooper is the energetic Chairman, is working out the five year programme adopted in 1921 and helping financially the most important British Schools that give a secondary education to Chinese. I should like to take this opportunity of asking members who can afford to do so to make good the very small amount necessary to complete this five year programme, a sum of roughly Tls. 2,600. We are pledged to continue certain grants for five years and we want roughly Tls. 2,600 to enable us to redeem our pledge.

CHAMBER'S MANY ACTIVITIES.

Now I would like to say a few words about other departments of the Chamber's work, those that go on automatically and independently of any of our Committees. During the past year 143 written trade inquiries have been dealt with. These inquiries come from all over the world. They are, as you know circularized to all members before being published in the Journal, and all members likely to be specially interested are in addition communicated with individually.

In estimating the amount of work involved you have, accordingly, to multiply the number 143 by at least three and in addition there is a steady stream of verbal inquiries. Six arbitrations and 12 surveys have been conducted through the Chamber and 184 applications for employment have been dealt with, roughly 48 per cent. of the applicants being found positions. Then there is the Chamber's Language School, which, as you know, is very efficiently conducted by Mr. J. B. Grant. The certificates gained in the past year include 16 preliminary, 7 intermediate and 4 advanced, examinations being conducted by H. M. Consul, Mr. G. S. Moss, whom I should like to thank for the time and trouble which he has been good enough to devote to this work. The average number of students attending the School during the three terms of the past year has been 55, as against 73 in 1922. The decrease is not, I think, due to any fault in the School, but partly to certain firms having made their own arrangements for teaching Chinese, partly to a diminution during the past year of the number of men wishing to learn the language.

In connexion with Chinese I have to report the decision of the Committee to discontinue publication of the Chinese Journal. The circulation attained by the Chinese Journal was never a large one, it was showing a loss and there appeared to be only two courses open to us, either to devote more time and trouble to it, which would have meant engaging additional staff, or—unless we were prepared to lose money—to close down. We appointed a special Sub-Committee to go into the matter and finally decided on the latter course.

THE JOURNAL'S GOOD WORK.

The English Journal, on the other hand, continues to prosper and is steadily gaining ground. Mr. Gull found, while he was on leave, that it was being used regularly in the offices of the commercial newspapers in England and that it is very well spoken of in the offices of the Home Chambers. That it makes a certain amount of money and goes a long way towards financing our Associated Chambers you can see from the accounts. But it is doing more than that. It is giving us a voice in such public affairs as we ought to have a voice in, and we know that it is carefully read from the fact that we very soon hear about it if copies go astray, or when it contains anything that ought, in the readers' opinion, to have been otherwise expressed. I certainly think that the English Journal is worth while, and that it is doing good work for our collective interests in China. Such, Gentlemen, is our record for the past year. I hope you will agree that we have done a good deal.

H. M. Consul General then addressed the meeting.

STANDARD PIECE GOODS CONTRACT.

Mr. R. S. Peony said: The Chairman has kindly asked me to comment on the Piece Good Standard Contracts, which as you have just been informed, have now been agreed upon between the Chinese Piece Goods Guild and this Chamber.

As you are doubtless aware, this question was first brought up in the middle of 1920, and has been constantly under discussion since that time with varying fortunes.

The Contract itself is mainly based on the usual conditions under which the Piece Goods trade is conducted at this port, combined with the terms arranged with the Manchester Chamber of Commerce.

The only new feature is Clause 7 of the Sterling Contract, which applying to goods sold in sterling or on a Tael basis with a guaranteed Exchange, gives Importers the option of fixing exchange for buyers account should the official rate decline 10 per cent. below the rate ruling at the time the contract was made.

As soon as the contracts and their respective translations have been printed, it is proposed to circulate them to the members of this Chamber, and it is hoped that all interested will arrange to work on the terms agreed on. Copies will also be forwarded to the Foreign Bankers' Association and to the other Chambers of Commerce at this port, with a request for their support in this matter.

The report and accounts were passed on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. R. Calder Marshall.

Rule 2 was amended to provide for an increased subscription.

The following Committee were elected:—Messrs C. H. Arnhold, A.W. Burkill, R. Calder Marshall, N. L. Leslie, A. B. Lowson, E. F. Mackay, P. W. Massey, W. J. Monk, A. Rose, F. R. Scott, G. W. Sheppard and W. H. Trenchard-Davis.

THE annual worry of the Japanese police over the May Day celebrations of the labour unions has again begun. At Osaka last year, says the "Japan Chronicle", the police "mobilized for the occasion" were nearly as numerous as the demonstrators. Some lively skirmishes occurred and many of the workers were arrested. The Kobe police and other officials met on the 11th instant to consider what to do on May 1 this year. The local authorities have restricted the area in which processions may be held and have prohibited the visiting of factories, which was one cause of trouble last year. Any labour body participating in the procession is to carry three banners, but pennants are prohibited—doubtless because the fights between the police and the paraders last year were mostly for possession of red pennants which were being carried in the processions in spite of the official ban on redness.

THE Old Harrovians in the Malay Peninsula, assembled recently at the Empire Hotel, Kula Lumpur, and dined together. It was the first purely O. H. dinner that, as far as is known, had ever taken place in that country, and 11 from the old School sat down. Sir L. Guillemard, the Governor, attended as a guest, he being closely connected with the School through his cousin, the late Mr. W. G. Guillemard, who was a master there for the long period of 28 years from 1879 to 1907. During the evening it was explained to his Excellency that, according to ancient custom, every new boy who joined at Harrow had to sing (in front of the whole house) to the music master, the first four lines of the March of the Men of Harlech, to enable that master to judge if he had a voice or not. The Governor, who had never dined at a Harrow dinner before, was treated as a "new boy," and he was asked to sing the four lines. Sir E. Guillemard at once complied and was loudly cheered, says the "Malay Mail."

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the House of Commons on March 18 the constitution of the Committee to inquire into the National Debt. Lord Colwyn will be Chairman, and amongst the members are Sir Charles Addis, Sir Alan G. Anderson, and Sir Arthur Balfour. It is unnecessary to state Sir Charles Addis is chairman of the London Committee of the Hong-kong & Shanghai Bank and a director of the Bank of England. He was a member of the Cunliffe Currency Committee of 1918-19, of the Indian Currency Committee of 1920, and is at present on his way back from Brazil, which he has visited as a member of the Financial Mission. Sir Charles Addis has an impartial mind, and, as a banker of distinguished record, knows a great deal about monetary problems in the practical as well as the theoretical sense. He has, by his lucid expositions, made intelligible to the layman many abstruse subjects.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

SHANGHAI BILLIARDS CHAMPIONSHIP

Capt. Barrett's Win from Mr. Gordon Morriss

Captain Barrett won the billiard championship on Tuesday, defeating Mr. Gordon Morriss 1200-1015. At dinner time Mr. Morriss was leading by 29, with an unfinished break of 12, though having lost the white and being in no position it was useless to him. Up to that point he was much the better player of the two. After dinner Captain Barrett returned in festive mood, he played magnificently, took incredible chances and almost invariably with success. Every billiard player knows the occasions when the gods love one; equally so when they frown. The former was Captain Barrett's lot last night, the latter Mr. Morriss's. Very little went wrong for the former, very little right for the latter. No amateur can be quite sure what will become of the balls after a forcing shot; they may leave you well placed or they may not. It depends on the gods. To be just, Captain Barrett played brilliantly. Two shots in particular, screw-backs not quite straight (which makes all the difference in difficulty) along the cushion into the top pocket, the object ball travelling round the table and back into position, were specially noticeable. His mastery over position was extraordinarily good, he rarely left himself a hard shot and used his head well. The careful advantage he took of the rules of the game was complimentary to his opponent, but towards the end rather irritating to spectators. To play for safety when you are within 20 of game and some 200 ahead of your opponent seems unnecessarily professional. With a little bit more luck for Mr. Morriss the result might more easily have been different than the score suggests. A fraction of an inch makes all the difference, and after dinner Mr. Morriss rarely got it. He had to fight for most of his openings and the balls would not help him. Nevertheless he played very finely through most of the match. His losing hazards both into middle and top pockets were admirable. In the latter the object ball travels across the top corners and back to the middle pocket. It is quite simple, if you have accuracy and strength and Mr. Morriss usually has. Another shot he loves is to pot the red in the middle pocket (himself playing from baulk) and leave his own ball precisely placed for the half-ball shot off the spotted red into top pocket. Again only strength and accuracy: It looks so easy. He makes effective use of the side that a ball takes from the cloth. Several pockets and cannons at an angle, so wide that most amateurs would play a forcing shot he was able to get slowly by dint of tremendous side. It was a lesson in itself. Curiously enough, he was not very successful with long jennys, when the ball slides all up the cushion and curls in so prettily from the further shoulder of the pocket. They are usually fairly simple half ball shots, though most spectacular. But Mr. Morriss's were mostly on the left side and after dinner there seemed to be a tendency for him on the left top pocket.

The game opened slowly, neither player warming up and latecomers doing their best to put them off. Captain Barrett got away first with 27 and 18 (the latter all off the red) and led Mr. Morriss most of the way to the first 100. Then the latter got going, 12, 11, 17, 17, 15, 11, a beautiful 57 including a lovely run through loser along the top cushion, side taking the ball down from a seemingly impossible angle in the jaws, 16, 17, 17, 23, 21, a charming 31; and Barrett meanwhile doing nothing and never left with much chance. The score stood at Morriss 335, Barrett 192. Then came a change. Barrett played a magnificent forcing loser into the middle pocket, piled up 23 and several more useful scores including a 52 and 41 while Mr. Morriss for several attempts did nothing. The score went to Barrett 494 Morriss 474: then the latter recovered, passed the 500 ahead of Barrett and got to his points with the latter 571.

The after dinner session may be recorded thus. Captain Barrett's best efforts in succession—11, 40, 19, 30, 63, 50, 64, 37, 36, 26, 12, 27, 31; and Mr. Morriss's —15, 31, 54, 41, 14, 18, 25, 30, 31, 15, 11, 26, 19

Captain Barrett's 63 was the most attractive break of the evening. The 64 contained one of the screw-back losers mentioned, but the 63 held four long jennys and the player's control of the balls was magical. Next in merit, as a single performance was Mr. Morriss's 54. He had to sink his opponent at 21 for position, leaving himself in his favourite place over the middle pocket, red on spot, and then made 33 off the latter, all beautifully arranged easy shots. The misfortune of his play was that he too often went to the table four or five times on end with nothing to show for it, while Captain Barrett was piling on points. The latter's playing was inspirational. Twice he extricated himself with extraordinary shots. Once his opponent's ball was jammed on the side cushion just below the middle pocket and Captain Barrett, from baulk played a cross shot with running side into the opposite middle pocket. Another time it was a cannon, the balls being similarly placed but the stroke much more difficult to calculate because the object ball was not quite touching the cushion, which made the shot a most delicate and beautiful run through. Mr. Morriss fought gamely to the end but fate was too much for him. Captain Barrett is heartily to be congratulated on his first win of the championship and both players are to be complimented on some excellent and most instructive billiards. There was a lot of safety play and the average is not high, Captain Barrett's being 7.7 and Mr. Morriss's 6.5.

Mr. H. W. Taylor, captain of the team, interviewed by a representative of Reuter's Agency, expressed the opinion that the South Africans ought to win a majority of the County games. It would be presumptuous to say that they were going to beat England, but luck might be on their side.—Reuter.

Sing Song Houses.

A petition by 25 Shopkeepers in the Louza District has been presented, praying that licences be issued in respect of Sing Song houses in the Settlement. The Commissioner of Police reports that these establishments are at present licensed compulsorily as brothels, that many of them have been closed as a result of the annual drawings, and that the remaining licences will expire on December 31 next. Many of these establishments have therefore to be transferred to the French Concession where they are licensed as such distinct from brothels. In the neighbouring Concession, the cost of a Sing Song licence is $2 a year, and the monthly licence fee for each female singer is $10. The Petitioners contend that the closing of these houses in the Foreign Settlement will mean serious loss to their business. After examining the records on the subject, and hearing the views of the Commissioner of Police and the Prosecuting Solicitor, the Council has decided that Sing Song houses should be allowed in the Settlement under suitable licence conditions, and directions have been given accordingly.

Serious Crime.—This includes the murder of a Chinese female who was shot in a house in Tatung Road on March 1 by armed robbers, the murder of a Chinese Constable who was shot on the night of March 13 whilst attempting to arrest armed robbers who were holding up a shop in the Yangtszepoo District, and the murder of two men who were shot dead in a house in the West Hongkew District on the night of March 20 by three men whose identity has not been established. One of the men killed was identified as an old offender who had been convicted of armed robbery.

A man under remand at the end of February charged with the attempted murder of two Chinese Constables on February 16 has been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. The case against a man charged with the murder of a Chinese whose dead body was found on Haichow Road on February 23, was concluded on March 4 when the prisoner was remitted to the Court of the Military Governor. In connexion with the attempted murder of a Sikh moneylender in the Wayside District in May 1923, a Chinese amah was arrested on March 2. The charge against her was withdrawn but she was detained as a witness in a case of perjury pending at the British Court.

Robbery.—Nine reports of armed robbery from dwelling houses and shops and two of armed highway robbery were received during the month. In two instances shots were fired by the robbers resulting in the death of a Chinese Constable and a Chinese woman.

One man arrested for being in possession of a loaded pistol for an unlawful purpose was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, while three others who were apprehended in this Settlement on charges of armed robbery committed in the French Concession were handed over to the French Police.

Seven men who were under remand at the end of February charged with armed robbery were dealt with during the month. One was ordered to be sent to the Court of the Military Governor, four were sentenced to imprisonment and one was expelled, whilst the charge against the seventh was dismissed. A man under remand on suspicion of being concerned in armed robberies in the Settlement was found guilty of armed robbery committed in February last and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. Sentence of five years each was passed on two men under remand at the end of February charged with being in possession of firearms for an unlawful purpose.

Two reports of robbery in which no arms were used were also received. Two men were arrested in connexion with one of these cases and sentenced to imprisonment. A man under remand at the end of February on a charge of highway robbery was ordered to be expelled.

Property Stolen.—490 reports made under this heading during the month represent a total estimated loss of $207,873 and include 34 cases of burglary, 10 of house-breaking, 7 of godown-breaking and 9 of shop and office-breaking. Successful investigation was made in 160 cases, resulting in the recovery of property valued at $154,582, in addition to which recoveries to the extent of $7,584 were made in connexion with reports received prior to March 1.

False Report.—A sentence of two weeks' imprisonment was passed on an employe of a printing establishment in the West Hongkew District for making on March 28 a false report of armed robbery to the Police. He stated that several men, one of whom was in possession of a pistol, entered his premises and stole a sum of money.

Mixed Court Report for March.

Assessors.—Mr. N. F. Allman retired from the American Consular Service on March 15 and was succeeded as Junior American Assessor by Mr. Howard Bucknell.

Infringement of Trade-marks.—Of more than passing interest to the mercantile community, especially at this time when new laws on the subject are in course of promulgation, was the conviction of seven persons on charges of infringing the trade-marks of well-known British firms.

The present code provides no penalty for this offence and prosecutions have to be taken under Article No. 359 which deals only with "injuring the business reputation of another." An opinion that the punishment prescribed under this section is totally inadequate was voiced by the Assessor, who in imposing a fine of $400 on the accused in one case of a very flagrant nature, expressed regret that the Court, under the present law, was unable to sentence the accused to imprisonment.

Defence of Prisoners. — The Magistrates and Assessors sitting in Criminal Cases have decided that in future, in all cases involving "capital" punishment, wherein the accused are unable to employ counsel to defend them, a lawyer on the roll of the Court shall be appointed by the Registrar to undertake their defence. The appointments are to be made in rotation, and should the lawyer appointed be unable to appear, it shall be incumbent on him to provide a substitute.

In accordance with the above ruling prisoners were so defended on two occasions during the month.

Chilean Citizens and Extra-territoriality.—Following the arrest of two persons who claimed to be registered in the local Chilean Consulate, but whose claim to registration was overruled by this Court, some correspondence ensued between the Consul for Chile and the Court on the status of Chilean citizens, the Consul claiming that the treaty between Chile and China conveys extraterritorial rights on all citizens of his nationality.

As the Court could reach no definite decision on the point the question was referred to the Consular Body for a ruling thereon.

Cargo Pilferage.—The prosecution by the River Police of a number of persons charged with broaching large quantities of cargo from ships in the harbour caused Mr. Martin, the British Assessor, to comment upon the apparent ease with which such thefts could be committed; he recommended far more stringent measures in the supervision of all vessels while in port. One remedy suggested was the employment of Sikh watchman instead of Chinese; he also suggested that the coolies employed by the stevedores should be compelled to display their badges while at work on the ships; this rule, according to the evidence produced, was not being strictly enforced, with the result that many undesirable characters were able to get aboard without challenge.

Mixed Court Home.—On an application from this committee the Court decided to increase the period of detention passed on women convicted of soliciting from 7 days to 14. The Court also intimated that on application supported by a doctor's certificate they were prepared to make an order for detention of a further period of any woman found to be suffering from venereal disease.

Decisions in Rehearing Cases.—A decision which will perhaps check applications for rehearings without mature consideration by counsel concerned, was given on March 3 when after rehearing a case wherein the accused had been sentenced on March 14, to 3 months' imprisonment for cruelty to a small child, the Court not only confirmed the previous sentence but also ordered that it should commence from the date of the judgment given in the second trial.

Opium Prosecutions. — Disclosures having been made during the trial of a civil case that the parties had dealt in opium, the action was dismissed, and criminal proceedings were instituted against plaintiff, defendant and an accountant. One accused briefed four counsel to defend him but without success, and the accused were all fined in sums ranging from $100 to $300.

In two other cases where it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that business in the drug had been carried on very extensively the maximum sentences imposed were a fine of $3,000 and 3 months imprisonment and expulsion respectively. In the latter case the accused had been twice previously convicted for the same offence.

Unrepresented Foreigners. — There were 29 unrepresented foreigners charged in the Criminal Courts, but all were petty cases and call for no special comment.

Court Orders Carried Out by Force.—Foreign Civil Case 3168 referred to under this heading in the February report was again before Court on March 19, when the defendant appeared before Mr. Carvalho, Portuguese Assessor, and Magistrate Yui, on an application for a rehearing on the ground that the compulsory signing of the deed conveying the land was not legal.

The application was refused and the following decision was rendered:—

"This case is in connexion with an agreement. On November 28, 1922, judgment was rendered for Plaintiff, Dzung Ping-mei, a Portuguese citizen, entitling him to enter into possession of and own the mortgaged land covered by a mortgage agreement executed by the defendant herein. An application for a rehearing was then made which was not granted. More than one year has now elapsed and the defendant, Tseu Kwe-song, has not yet complied with the terms of the said judgment, not having made a deed and affixed his signature thereon, thereby enabling the plaintiff to have it commuted into a title deed.

"Therefore, on February 25 of this year, the Court ordered that the defendant be forced to affix his signature thereon; which order is within the power of this Court, since Article 4 of the Civil Procedure Regulations on the subject of execution lays down that forcible execution may be resorted to either upon exparte application, or by the Court's motu proprio.

"On account also of the statements now made by defendant not agreeing with the contents of the application at bar, and of no signature having been affixed thereon by the defendant, the present application is refused."

COMPLICATED CASE OF COUNTER-CLAIMS

Two Parties Suing Each Other in Different Courts: Should Each Succeed?

A situation, rendered possible only by reason of the functioning of different national courts in Shanghai, was brought to the notice of his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner in H. M. Supreme Court on Thursday morning.

The Court was occupied with the hearing of an application for pleadings in the case in which Shih Sen-sun claims from the Pung Wo Manufacturing Company, Ld., of the Robert Dollar Buildings, 3 Canton Road, the following:—

(1) The sum of Tls. 20,000 money lent, or, alternatively,

(2) The sum of Tls. 20,000, damages for fraudulent misrepresentation:

(3) Indemnity, and/or,

(4) A declaration that plaintiff is not a shareholder of the defendant company, and/or

(5) A declaration that he is entitled to be paid the sum of Tls. 20,000 at present standing to the credit of the defendant company with the Commercial Bank of China.

Mr. Ranald G. McDonald made the application on behalf of plaintiff and Mr. M. B. Brown represented the defendant.

MIXED COURT CASE.

Mr. Brown, before the order was made, said there was one point he wished to bring to his Lordship's notice which might or might not be important. In February last the present defendant, the Pung Wo Company, filed an application in the Mixed Court against the present plaintiff for the same sum of money. It seemed to him to be at least conceivable that the plaintiffs in each case would succeed. In other words, the Pung Wo Company would be given judgment for this same $20,000 in the Mixed Court, and Shih Sen-sun be given judgment for it in the British Supreme Court. In that case they would find themselves up against something of an impasse, and there was some difficulty in his mind as to what would happen in such a case.

The Judge—Of course, it can always be dealt with at a later stage when the judgment arises. It does not really become important till the question of execution arises.

Mr. Brown—I take it that whoever obtained judgment first, the other side would apply for a stay of execution. Such a situation has never arisen in my experience, though of course it may well have happened before.

HOLDING HIS HAND.

The Judge—I am bound to say that I do not know of an exactly similar case myself.

Mr. McDonald suggested that the sum was not quite the same. The application was a very com[illegible] ... number of alternatives.

The Judge agreed with this. There was, for instance, an application for a declaration that plaintiff was not a shareholder of the company, a matter quite apart from the question of money. In any case it was clearly a writ with varied claims in which pleadings would have to be ordered and it was possible there might be a line of defence open to Mr. Brown on the statement of claim arising out of the proceedings in the Mixed Court. If the position he suggested should arise he (the Judge) would prefer to hold his hand and consider how it should be dealt with. Such a situation was always possible in an extra-territorial country.

Mr. McDonald submitted that in this case the British Courts were obviously the proper tribunal in which the matter should be tried since it was all English law.

The Judge remarked that in any case there would have to be pleadings and assuming the money question disappeared they still had the claim for a declaration and indemnity. It was, indeed, a most comprehensive writ containing contract, tort, declara[illegible] ... The best course to follow would be to wait for the statement of claim and see what could be done with that. [illegible] proceedings therefore.

DISOBEDIENT SEAMEN

Magistrate's Decision Upheld on Appeal: Fined a Month's Pay

In H. M. Supreme Court on the 17th instant their Honours Judge Sir Skinner Turner and Judge Grain, sitting as the Full Court, heard an appeal by Abdul Nagi and five other ex-members of the crew of the str. City of Bristol against a conviction in the Police Court by Mr. G. W. King.

The case was heard on March 28, on the arrival of the steamer in Shanghai, and it was then complained that the six appellants had combined with others to disobey the lawful commands of the master, Capt. Penworthy. Evidence was given that the defendants were signed on at New York and that trouble arose shortly after the vessel left port, continuing at intervals until Shanghai was reached, when their articles were discharged. It was said that the appellants, who were all firemen, refused to clean the fires properly and when the Captain threatened to reduce their pay they in turn threatened to strike, and a compromise had to be effected by giving them full pay under protest. Further trouble ensued, and at Yokohama the men were taken before the British Consul, and wages were paid under protest until the vessel arrived at Shanghai. The police magistrate was informed at the hearing that appellants were disobedient and insolent, disobeying orders by pretending not to understand them. All six men were convicted and fined one month's pay, and this decision was now the subject of appeal.

Mr. H. D. Rodger appeared for appellants and Mr. G. H. Wright for respondents, represented by the agents (Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co.).

MEN'S PLEA.

Mr. Rodger, for appellants, produced an extract from the ship's log showing that the men were warned their pay would be reduced and thereupon threatened to cease work. The Captain thereupon agreed not to reduce their pay if they would return to work, and this the men did. This Mr. Rodger argued, did not constitute disobedience of lawful commands, the men having returned to work. Mr. Rodger further held that the fine was excessive and illegal, inasmuch as the Merchant Shipping Act permitted a fine of six days' pay only for every 24 hours' disobedience, and appellants were not continuously disobedient for more than 24 hours. They went back to work on the same day.

Mr. Wright, for respondents, argued that the conviction was justified under the Act, since it provided that a fine of two days' pay might be imposed for every individual act of disobedience. It was therefore unnecessary to prove continuous disobedience for 24 hours. The appellants had continuously been disobedient on a number of days, and the total in fines would more than make up the penalty of a month's pay. Counsel further pointed out that the nature of appellants' work was such as to make it impossible to prove "continuous" disobedience.

The Court held that there was ample evidence before the Magistrate of disobedience on a number of days, and that the penalty imposed was not excessive, and the appeal was accordingly dismissed.

DISORDERLY INDIANS AT BRITISH POLICE COURT

Excited Demonstration by Sympathizers on Harbak Singh's Being Sentenced to Two Months' Hard Labour for Publishing Seditious Literature

Harbak Singh, whose appearance in the British Police Court some little time ago was accompanied by vocal and floral demonstrations by his black, turbaned friends, appeared again before Mr. G. W. King on Saturday on a charge of publishing seditious matter. Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted.

Det. Sgt. Tinkler, who received the warrant for Harbak's arrest, gave evidence that while he was looking for his man accused went to Central Police station, asked if there was a warrant out against him, and waited there until witness returned. Search was afterwards made at 478 Chapoo Road, a shop which had the name of Rose & Co., but witness did not find there any of the pamphlets headed "British Barbarism in India: British Justice gone Bankrupt." Several of these, however, were afterwards found at the printing establishment of E. Shing & Co., Szechuen Road, with the type set up and ready for printing.

Det. Sub.-Inspector Hunter gave similar evidence. When asked if he had any of the pamphlets, accused replied: "You need not trouble about getting so much evidence. You can only deport me."

The Magistrate (to the accused)—Do you object to that evidence?

Accused—I don't object to anything. You can do as you like.

The Magistrate—I cannot do as I like. I am bound by law, and I am asking if you object to the evidence that the detective put that question to you.

MAGGSTRATE'S FAIRNESS.

The Magistrate—If you can show me that any pressure was put on you to answer questions I will not take the evidence so obtained. Do you object to that question going in?

Accused—I make no reply to it.

The Magistrate—Well, in fairness to you, I will not put it in.

Two Chinese employed by E. Shing & Co. gave evidence as to accused having placed an order for the printing of the pamphlets in question, asking to be supplied with 800 copies at $1 per hundred. The pamphlets were delivered but the bill had not been paid.

The Magistrate—Do you want to ask any questions?

Accused—I have told you once, I don't want to ask any questions.

In answer to the Magistrate, Mr. Maitland said there would be no charge against the Chinese printer.

Captain E. I. M. Barrett spoke as to receiving a copy of one of the pamphlets through the post, in an envelope which he believed to be addressed in the handwriting of the accused. He also produced another copy which had been sent to the Commissioner of Customs.

"I DO NOT RECOGNIZE YOUR COURT."

Mr. Maitland then applied for an adjournment until Tuesday, and when asked if had anything to say to this, accused replied: I am a strict non-co-operator. I do not recognize your court. You can do what you like.

The Magistrate—You said that last time.

Accused—Yes. I had a little experience on that occasion that it is of no use to defend. You promised then that you would hear my defence well and properly.

Accused—My experience is that it is no use to defend.

The Magistrate—As the charge against you has not yet been proved to the hilt, I shall adjourn the case for further evidence. If it is proved, you will be guilty of what is known as a grave offence, and for that, under the order in Council you can be given two months, and also be ordered to find security for your future good behaviour or be deported. Already you are under a bond to be of good behaviour for two years as the result of the last case, and I shall have to consider your present conduct in relation to that. If there has been a breach, you will have to forfeit your recognizance or serve a term of imprisonment.

Accused was then remanded in custody.

Remarkable Scenes When Trial Concluded

Remarkable scenes were witnessed in the grounds of H.B.M. Consulate and in H.M. Police Court on Tuesday morning at the termination of the trial of Harbak Singh. The court room was filled with Indians and the grounds outside harboured some fifty to a hundred others who were unable to get inside. The accused, offering no defence and adopting an attitude of martyred resignation throughout, was sentenced by the Magistrate (Mr. G. W. King) to two months' hard labour. As soon as the Court rose officially, but long before the Magistrate had an opportunity to leave the Bench, the crowd broke into loud cheers for the prisoner, which were taken up by their fellows outside,—cheers which could not be suppressed by the police. A rush was then made for the doors, which the Magistrate ordered to be closed, but the police, after considerable struggling were overwhelmed by the mob and were unable to close them. A few men were arrested and when the rest saw this they cheered the more and threw flowers and confetti over them. The Magistrate ordered their release and a procession was formed which marched chanting to the Bund gardens, but the police headed them off and the procession proceeded quietly to the Gurdwara on North Szechuen Road. The crowd was, at all times well disciplined by the leaders.

THE OFFENDING PAMPHLET.

The case had been adjourned from Saturday. Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted for the police; the defendant was not represented.

Mr. W. C. Loynes, of Messrs. Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., Ld., described how one day last week he was walking along Nanking Road, near Hall & Holtz Ld., when a Chinese of the artisan class pressed a pamphlet into his hand. He did not look at it for some moments, thinking it to be an advertisement, but on reading it later he found it to be an inflammatory epistle against the British Government in India. He immediately went back to look for the Chinese and on finding him forcibly deprived him of a big bunch of similar packages. It was not till later that he thought of catching the man himself, and he called a friend at Whiteaway Laidlaw's, procured a Chinese constable and set out to search. They were unsuccessful for the man had disappeared.

Mr. Cyril Burden Clarke, of Messrs. Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., Ld., who accompanied Mr. Loynes on the search, gave similar evidence and said he had read the pamphlet.

This completed the case for the Crown and the Magistrate made the charges clear to the accused who expressed a wish to make a statement. On being told he would be allowed to do so he produced several closely written folios and commenced to read at a high speed in quite good English.

Accused, first thanked the Magistrate for allowing him to make a statement.

The Magistrate: You do not need to thank me for that, Harbak Singh. You are entitled to do so.

ACCUSD'S STATEMENT.

Accused's first contention was that the publication was not sedition against the Chinese Government. Shanghai was an International Settlement, not a British Colony, and therefore he could not be charged with sedition against the British Government. Furthermore, all the trouble was purely a matter of religion.—Harbak Singh took the Court back over Indian history, pointing out alleged injustices to Sikh rulers and accusing the British Government of broken pledges, pledges made in the days of Queen Victoria to certain maharajahs and broken in later years. He touched on the Amritsar incident, alleging that Indians had been made to crawl through the roads on their stomachs and shot without cause; that their wives and women had been spat upon by soldiers of the Government, and that the perpetrators of all these deeds had gone unpunished.

The Magistrate (interposing):—You refer, I suppose, to the case of General Dyer?

Accused:—I do.

The Magistrate:—And was not General Dyer punished for that? Was he not dismissed from the Army and sent back to England?

Accused:—No he was not. He was pensioned off,—pensioned with Indian money.

THE AKALI INCIDENT.

The accused's statement went on to refer to the incident mentioned in the Reuter's cable, characterized by the pamphlet as a pack of lies. He alleged that on that occasion the Government sent armed men to interrupt the reading of the Holy Book in an Akali temple, with the sole object of provoking the Akalis to violence, a weapon they had sworn an oath never to use; that machine guns were turned on unarmed Akalis in the temple and 250 were killed: and that others lay around wounded and Government troops burned them alive with kerosene oil. Reuter, he alleged, was used by the Indian Government to send out false reports covering up the misdeeds of the Government and its soldiers. The statement then reverted to Shanghai and alleged that when the order for the registration of British subjects came out a few months ago, rules were imposed on the Sikhs which were imposed on no other section of the British community. They had to produce two photographs of themselves instead of one and had to be registered at a separate office. When two of their number objected and offered passive resistance, accused continued, they were turned out of the office by force. When they returned they were threatened with arrest and finally were arrested. When they were taken to the police station they were, said Harbak Singh, subjected to a torrent of abuse from Captain E. M. Barrett and other members of the police; these two men were now liable at any time to be arrested for not being registered. He further alleged that Sikhs in Shanghai were oppressed by Captain Barrett and the Sirdar Sahib Buddha Singh, Jemadar of Sikh police: that the Sikh Gurdwara had been placed in the hands of the police and that the police used it for the oppression of their brethren and to turn it to their own account. That at the instance of Captain Barrett and Buddha Singh hundreds of innocent Sikhs were deported from Shanghai during the war. And why? he asked. Simply because they did not salute Captain Barrett and the Sirdar Sahib in the streets, because they would not be oppressed by them and would not bow down to their wishes. They had persecuted him personally for long, ever since they knew he was against them. They had tried to get him dismissed from his employment with Rose & Co., without cause, but in this they had failed because he was a director of that company. Police had searched his premises when he was absent and the last attempt on his freedom was when he had been brought before that Court on charges of publishing matter calculated to cause a disturbance of the peace.

"SEDITION NO CRIME."

Regarding what was written in the pamphlet, it was not sedition for it was true. Neither did he believe, in any case, that sedition was a crime.

The Magistrate (interrupting): You say sedition is no crime. That is rather a bold statement to make, is it not

Accused: I refer to India only

The Magistrate.—Very well, proceed: but it is a dangerous line to take.

Harbak went on to say that he knew he was about to be deported to India at the least, but he did not care. He would only be one of many innocent Sikhs sent out of Shanghai. What did it matter? By sending him to gaol they did but send him from a large prison to a smaller one. They could imprison his body but they could never imprison his ment," he continued, "much less do I hate any other Europeans. I love all men as my brothers. All men are my brethren. I hate the system of Government by the British in India."

As he made these statements defendant appeared to be sincere, and went on to say that he would fight for the freedom of India from the foreign yoke if it led him to the gallows. He would print similar pamphlets again when he came out of prison. Nothing could stop him but death. When they were oppressed by the foreign yoke in the form of a Mohammedan Government years ago Indians had arisen and driven the foreigners out. The oppression of the British Government was worse than the oppression of the Mohammedans. Defendant wound up his exhortation by saying that if it was sedition to give the world the truth, then he was seditious: if it was sedition to abide by the dictates of conscience, then again he was seditious. If the English were subjected to the same oppression that the Indians were subjected to by them, then Englishmen would arise and throw off the yoke in the same way as the Indians wished to do.

The Magistrate went through the accused's statement paragraph by paragraph with him. He first of all pointed out that the fact that the sedition was not sedition against the Chinese Government had nothing to do with the matter at all. He was not charged with sedition against the Chinese Government: he was charged with sedition against the British Government. This was an international Settlement, but all His Britannic Majesty's subjects were subject to British Law. Therefore that statement would not hold water as a ground for defence.

Harbak Singh: I did not put that statement in as a statement of defence. I put it in as a statement of my position and my feelings. I make no defence, I offer no defence. Do with me as you will. I cannot tell a lie.

A BRITISH SUBJECTS DUTY.

The Magistrate pointed out to the prisoner that his attitude was an extremely difficult one. He (the Magistrate) was trying to help him in every way he could. He wished to see justice done, but prisoner would not aid the Bench to help him.

As his Worship went through the statement similar passages occurred. The Magistrate insisted on trying to help the accused and the accused insisted he had no defence to offer. He had given them his thoughts and a statement of his position. That was all.

"You know as well as I do," said the Magistrate, on a reiteration of this statement, "that India is in a very disturbed state at this time. The material circumstance I have to consider refers to whether or not this matter you publish and distribute is likely to cause disaffection, and reading of this nature is bound to cause disaffection. You make assertions against the British Government of barbarism to your people, and state that British Justice has gone bankrupt, and yet recently the British Government has done everything possible towards meeting the wishes of the people. Would you care to deny that at the present moment the British Government is making every effort to meet the wishes of the inhabitants of India?

Accused admitted that he would not care to deny such a statement.

"Do you know" continued the Magistrate "that in the various councils of India to-day the Swarajs have a majority?"

Accused:—But they are outside the Congress.

The Magistrate.—Do you realize that if things were allowed to go on in India, with its different castes and grades of people, there would be complete turmoil and no government at all?

Accused:—If there were no government at all that would be better than the present government.

"That," said the Magistrate, "is a bold statement to make."

Accused: If we read our history we see that the Mohammedans did not oppress us as we are oppressed to-day.

The prisoner further stated that the Indians knew the Indian news received from Reuter's agency was not true. They knew from their own newspapers in Shanghai of the barbarism and brutality of the British Government, but other Europeans and Americans should be told and he had felt it his duty to tell them. Was he to be punished for doing his duty? Papers, registered in India, having passed the censor, came to Shanghai printing matter equally seditious to that which he had printed. Indeed, most of what was in the pamphlets was reprinted from those papers, describing the British Government as the Government, not of His Britannic Majesty, but as the Government of His Satanic Majesty.

The Magistrate (to Captain Barrett).—Is that true, Captain Barrett.

Captain Barrett: I believe that is so, Sir. Some of them I know are very hot stuff.

Prisoner here produced an Indian vernacular paper containing the headliness in question and offered to show it to the Bench.

The Magistrate: Thank you, I can take your word for it without seeing the paper.

Mr. Maitland, summing up, said it was hardly necessary for him to deal with the charge. Accused had admitted everything. They had seen the state of mind he was in. He was so bigoted in his ideas he could hardly be considered a reasonable being.

The Magistrate interposed at this point with the remark that Mr. Maitland was wrong there. Every British subject had a right to hold any opinions he wished, no matter how much anyone else differed from him. He could only be stopped when the expression of those opinions was likely to cause trouble and this was a case where that had happened.

After a final unsuccessful exhortation from the Bench to make some plea on his own behalf, the Magistrate said he saw no loophole. He would have to pass the maximum sentence of two months' hard labour, and when that term was finished prisoner would be bound over in his own surety and three others for $250 each to keep the peace. If he could not produce the bonds he would be deported.

Mr. Maitland then made application to the Bench in regard to further recognisances made by defendant from the last case in which he appeared when he was also bound over to keep the peace. He had failed to do so and therefore Mr Maitland applied to the Bench for the bonds to be forfeited.

The application was granted and the defendant warned that if he did not produce the money he would be sent to gaol for a further term of imprisonment.

MRS. ROWARTH AND MRS. M. DAVIS

Charges Framed of Perjury and Conspiring to Withhold a Material Witness

When proceedings in the Rowarth case were resumed at H. M. Police Court on the 17th instant the Magistrate (Mr. G. W. King) announced that he had decided to frame two charges against the accused, Mrs. Judith Rowarth and Mrs. Margaret Davis.

These charges were that, at the Supreme Court trial, Mrs. Rowarth knowingly and falsely swore that she never saw Pakhar Singh on May 4, and that she knew nothing of the assault. Further, that she conspired with the second accused, her daughter, to defeat and obstruct the course of law and justice by preventing the amah, Wong Foo-mei, from giving evidence at the preliminary inquiry and also at the trial in the Supreme Court.

Mrs. Davis was also charged, in the same terms, with conspiracy, and further with knowingly and falsely swearing that Mrs. Rowarth did not go out of her house before 8.30 p.m. on the night the assault took place.

Upon receiving the usual caution, Mrs. Rowarth at first said she did not wish to make any statement but would call two witnesses. Mrs. Davis said: "I think I ought to say something, your Worship."

THE JOURNEY TO MACAO.

Mrs. Rowarth, afterwards deciding to give evidence, went into the witness box and, in answer to Mr. S. H. Lewis, stated that on the day of the assault she went to her daughter's house between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon and remained there until after dinner, when she went to the show, afterwards going home with her husband. When she left Shanghai she went to Macao with her daughter.

Why did you leave Macao?—Because the Superintendent of Police there said that I was wanted at Hongkong, so of course I went.

You are charged with conspiring with your daughter to keep an amah, alleged to be a material witness, from giving evidence in the courts. Do you know anything about that?—No.

Do you know anything about anybody going to a particular house where this girl said she was living?—No.

Do you know anything about the alleged attack on the Indian who has given evidence?—No, I do not know anything about it.

Mr. E. T. Maitland (cross-examining)—You left Shanghai on March 2?—No.

You left quickly on the night of March 2?—I went away on the 2nd or 3rd.

On the day the amah was arrested?—What day?

On the Sunday?—We left on a Monday.

On the day the papers came out with a heading "Rowarth Trial Echo"?—I did not see the papers.

What were you doing with your daughter at Macao?—Just looking round.

You were put on board a boat for Hongkong?—Yes.

And your passage was paid?—I don't know.

You did'nt pay it?—No, I did not.

And you had no option but to come back?—I did'nt refuse.

You had no option?—They said I was wanted. Why should I not come?

A SERIES OF DENIALS.

In answer to further questions, witness said she had never seen the amah witness before, although she visited her daughter's house every day, and she could not explain how the girl came to know the family. She did not know the amah had been in Mrs. Davis's service, did not know how many servants her daughter had, and she had never been to any house to pay money for the amah. She could not explain the amah's story, nor that of the Chinese landlady who said that "an old woman" came to her house and paid rent for the amah and gave her rice money.

Why should they come forward and tell this story if it is not true?—I don't know.

How should the amah know Pakhar Singh if you did not take her to his house?—I don't know.

She has told the same story as Pakhar Singh?—I don't know.

Even to the detail of carrying a lantern?—I don't know anything.

Their stories are precisely the same?—Yes, but I was not there.

How could both be mistaken?—I don't know.

Why did you so suddenly decide to leave Shanghai for Macao in the night time?—Because my daughter said she was ready to go, and she had wanted to go before.

You had been continually packing and unpacking in readiness to go for several months?—No.

You had been in readiness to bolt from Shanghai?—No.

Pakhar Sing, Hassan Ali and the amah have all been lying when they said you went with Pakhar Singh?—I never went. It was not me. I don't know how they all made that mistake. I cannot explain.

Mrs. Davis next gave evidence, repeating her story that Mrs. Rowarth went to her house shortly after 2 o'clock on the afternoon of May 4 and remained there until the time of going to the theatre after dinner. She was quite sure her mother was there during this time. She knew nothing about the amah, Wong Foo-mei, or about taking money and rice to her in Chaoufoong Road.

Borrowed?—I did take some money out of his pay. I never said a word to anybody.

And no one knew where you were gone?—Yes.

Your mother left her house on the night of the 2nd and you were away early on the morning of the 3rd—No. I met my mother on board at 11 p.m. on the 3rd. I was already on board because I was sick.

In answer to the Magistrate, witness said she did not know where her own amah, Ah Mei—(they were all known by this name), was at the present time.

The case was adjourned until the afternoon, it being understood that Mrs. Rowarth wished to call another witness, but when the proceedings were resumed no further evidence was called, and Mr. Lewis announced that this was the case for the defence.

The Magistrate then said he had decided there was a case for consideration by a jury, and accused would accordingly be committed for trial.

Mr. Lewis made application for bail, but this was opposed by the prosecution and refused by the Magistrate, accused being remanded in custody.

THE STATELY HOMES OF SHANGHAI

A Lawsuit over the Villa Rosenfeld: Architect's Alleged Negligence in Supervision

In the U.S. Court for China, on the 17th instant, before Judge M. D. Purdy, Mr. A. Lafuente, architect, brought an action against Mr. A. B. Rosenfeld, cotton merchant, claiming Tls. 1,250 in payment for professional services rendered and money advanced during the construction of the Villa Rosenfeld, in the French Concession, of which the plaintiff was the architect. Mr. L. W. Hartigan appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. F. J. Schuhl for the defendant.

Mr. Schuhl mentioned that a counter-claim had been filed in the Spanish court for Tls. 7,280 which it was claimed had not been accounted for and Tls. 10,000 damages, it being alleged that the work had been performed in a negligent and careless manner.

Plaintiff said that he had practised as an architect in Shanghai for 11 years. He was graduate of a Madrid military engineering college and held a certificate as a qualified architect. About three years ago he was engaged by defendant to design a house. He drew up plans and specifications. Mrs. Rosenfeld made suggestions and alterations, but defendant impressed upon him that evcything must be as economical as possible. Mr. Rosenfeld eventually accepted the cheapest estimate of several sent in and a contract was signed with Mr. Arbuthnot. Witness visited the work frequently during 12 or 16 months. The first contractor only worked for four months in 1921 and then he sublet the contract to Sin Kee, who, however, was unable to finish the building, because the money was insufficient. When the work had been stopped for several months, witness told defendant and his son that unless something were done the building would be ruined. Witness then made an approximate estimate of the amount required to finish the building and as no one wanted to take the contract he engaged a member of masons, carpenters and other workmen and put them to work under several foremen. Mr. Julices Rosenfeld eventually took over building.

Defendant made payments of approximately Tls. 25,000 for materials, on witness's order. Witness employed an overseer for the work and paid him. Witness had conversations with defendant almost every day and defendant made objections to the panels, woodwork, windows and knots in pine and witness gave instructions for the necessary alterations. Witness was claiming remuneration for his work, his expenses, plans and all the trouble he had had. He had received Tls. 850 of the amount of his fees.

Cross-examined, witness said that his fee was to be 5 per cent. He admitted that the house had not been built according to the plans and specifications, but that was because so many alterations were insisted upon. Mr. Arbuthnot was paid Tls. 9,000 up to the time he left the work. Witness did not accept responsibility for finishing the building after Sin Kee left, nor did he become contractor. He simply prepared an estimate and found the workmen. He said he would complete the building for Tls. 11,020, but he did not complete it himself. He claimed that when he left the house was constructed according to plans and specifications, save for the alterations made by defendant and it was these alterations that had to be completed.

Mr. Schuhl—The specifications called for a concrete staircase. What is the starcase?—Wood.

Were there any mirrors in the doors according to specifications?—I don't know.

The Judge—I suppose there was nothing to prevent an arrangement between the owner and the contractor to make alterations?

Mr. Schuhl—Quite so.

Witness said that he never had any transactions with Jacks & Co. about tiling the bathrooms, etc., but they had sent him a bill for Tls. 1,500. He denied that on October 8, 1922, defendant gave him Tls. 1,500 to pay this. The woodwork was supposed to be seasoned, but witness could not say whether it was. It was difficult to say, and architects were not supposed to be able to say whether wood was seasoned or not. He did not know how tests were made. There was a clause in the contract stating that there must not be any subletting without the architect's permission and it was because this was done that witness stopped work. Mr. Arbuthnot's contract was for Tls. 19,800.

Mr. G. C. Wingrove, A.R.I.B.A., called for the defence, said that he had read the specifications prepared by the plaintiff and he had inspected the building. Instead of a concrete staircase there was an inferior wooden one, the windows were of wood instead of steel and there were no mirrors in the doors except in the boudoir. It was very difficult to say what wood had been used, because it had all been painted. In China it was rather difficult to tell whether wood was seasoned, but one could tell whether it was free from sap. The house was not constructed according to the specifications and he estimated that it would cost approximately Tls. 5,000 to put it right. The glazing was of Belgian and he thought some Japanese manufacture, instead of plate and bevelled glass, as called for.

Mr. A. B. Rosenfeld said that the house was not constructed according to specifications and he had complained accordingly. Witness wanted to take action against Arbuthnot when he failed to complete the work, but plaintiff said that it would be too expensive, that the work would be held up and that the building would be ruined. Plaintiff then said that that he would undertake to finish it himself. The total cost of construction as paid to plaintiff, apart from what witness's son paid afterwards, was Tls. 26.472. When the second contractor threw up the sponge plaintiff agreed to complete the work for Tls. 1,100. Amongst other things, screen window had to be put into the house after it was taken over, although they were mentioned in the contract.

Mr. R. E. Stewardson F.R.I.B.A., said that he had examined those clauses of the contract which referred to parts of the house about which complaint had been made to him and on examining the wooden staircase and wooden house he found a most inferior wooden staircase and wooden windows, whilst the only mirrors were in the boudoir doors and these Mr. Rosenfeld said that he supplied himself. The woodwork was very inferior. In these particulars the house was not according to specifications.

Mr. Julius Rosenfeld corroborated most of his father's evidence. He added that when he took it over the house was not completed and he had to call in another contractor to finish it. Witness mentioned that whilst the first work was in progress he

"There was not a thing I did not complain about," said wit- [illegible] and threatened to lock him out [illegible] the flooding of the basement in wet weather and witness had to have the basement done over with waterproof cement to remedy [illegible] was cracked. After going into [illegible] Tls. 2,987 for interior work.

Judgment was reserved.

LINER'S CAPTAIN EXONERATED

Pres. Grant's Fuel Oil that Polluted Huangpu: Missing Rivet in Ship's Side

At the U. S. Commissioner's Court on Monday, Mr. N. E. Lurton dismissed a charge against Capt. Michael M. Jensen, master of the Admiral Line str President Grant, of polluting the Huangpu River with fuel oil when his ship was in port in March. The Commissioner held that Captain Jensen was a victim of circumstances beyond his control. Mr. M. Reader Harris appeared for the prosecution; Major C. P. Holcomb [illegible]

Mr. Reader Harris, in opening for the prosecution, said that on the arrival of the President Grant on March 7, large quantities of black oil were seen coming from the ship. This was about 3 p.m. and at 9 p.m. a quantity between 10 and 30 feet wide was still seen issuing from the vessel. The matter, he said, was a serious one involving danger of fire and contamination of the water supply. Such an occurrence might have the effect of cutting off the water supply of Shanghai for a considerable time.

Major Holcomb admitted that great quantities of oil did come from the ship's tank, further that the U. S. Shipping Board wished to comply with the Harbour regulations and did not care to challenge the local rules.

Capt. Jensen stated that when he brought the President Grant into Shanghai on March 7 on approaching the China Merchant's Eastern Wharf, he saw oil on the [illegible] side. Leaving the Chief Engineer he asked if they were pumping out the bilges and upon receiving a negative reply made further investigations. After tying up he noted the oil bubbling up amidships and then held a conference again with the Chief Engineer, they coming to the conclusion that the oil must be oozing from the settling tank on that side of the ship. He then ordered the fuel to be transferred to other tanks by pumping, which operation took [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] tank.

[illegible] CHIEF AT FAULT.

Nothing more was done in Shanghai as the ship was fully loaded, but [illegible] in Kobe it was found possible to list the ship to the opposite side, thus exposing the leak. It was then seen that a 1 in rivet had dropped out altogether. This was presumably removed before their arrival in America when the damage was made good.

Capt. Whitney I. Eisler, of the U.S. Shipping Board, said it was his opinion that the internal pressure within the settling tank, it being above the surface of the water, was powerful enough to discharge water. Unless the captain took the ship from the port the oil must run into the river until it had all been pumped into the adjoining tanks the master had done all within his power to prevent pollution.

Mr. Reader Harris contended that the regulations were designed to [illegible] any kind of oil discharge [illegible] whatever. The Commissioner preferred to bring the matter before the national authorities of those who might allow such thing to occur rather than take action under the regulations, which might mean that a ship's clearance papers could be withheld.

MR. HUSAR'S ACCIDENT WHEN AT SEA

Struck on the Head Whilst Playing Medicine Ball: Claim in the U. S. Court

In the U. S. Court for China, on Tuesday, before Judge M. D. Purdy, Mr. L. G. Husar sued the United States Shipping Board and the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. for G.$50,000 damages for injuries received while travelling on board the str. President Lincoln in February, 1923. Messrs. Schuhl & Schoenfeld appeared for plaintiff and Messrs. Fessenden, Holcomb & Snyder for the defence.

Plaintiff stated that while travelling from San Francisco to Shanghai a year ago he was playing medicine ball with the ship's physician, Dr. Petersen, on the upper deck. It was his usual custom to indulge in this exercise daily with the doctor and afterwards to go below for a swim. On February 3, while taking part in the game, he tossed the ball into the air, but instead of following its course and dropping safely to his hands, it bumped into an awning spreader which then fell on his head, knocking him unconscious. Seven stitches were put into a wound in his forehead. The doctor told him that he would not have any permanent ill effects from the blow, though for some time after he was subject to severe headaches, which hindered him in the efficient performance of his duties. He felt pains under the scalp and was easily fatigued, while his eyes, which never caused any trouble (though he wore glasses) now bothered him very much. Three or four months after the injury he consulted an optician and had to get the prescription for his lenses altered, though for the previous [illegible] he had [illegible] every year or so, he had [illegible] at all inconvenienced. Dr. Pesin, Dr. Martin and Dr. O'Hara advised him to undergo a mild operation, which was done in January at the Victoria Nursing Home. His physicians had ordered him to take a long vacation and he was going to America in a few days, perhaps for six or nine months.

Dr. Martin said that he operated to remove a portion of the cervical fluid in the spine.

Dr. O'Hara corroborated Dr. Martin's statement.

Commander Giffen, of the U.S.S. Huron, gave technical evidence. It was his opinion that the awning spreader should have been made [illegible] with a pin, as it was [illegible] enough.

Mr. J. W. Schoenfeld, retired Commander of the U. S. N., also said he thought that the awning spreader should have been fastened down.

The case was adjourned.

Medical Evidence

Continuing their evidence for plaintiff, on Wednesday Captains [illegible] and Huntington [illegible] of the opinion that the awning spreader in question [illegible] without a pin [illegible] recognized as a safe [illegible]

Cross-examined by Mr. Snyder, [illegible] had been [illegible] properly constructed. He had seen similar ones unshipped by rolling seas.

The first witness for the defence was Capt. W. I. Eisler, American Lloyd's marine surveyor, who was of the opinion that this fastening was the customary one. He had never seen a pin used to make this type fast, and it was constructed in accordance with recognized principles of construction.

Mr. B. C. Haile, local agent of the company, and Mr. D. W. Murphy, American Loyd's engineer, said they were quite sure that the spreader had been secured in according with regulations.

Dr. D. G. Hiltner, giving medical evidence, said that he had made a minor examination. The scar seemed superficial, with no injury to the bone (this was very recent).

Mr. Snyder—What is this cerebro-spinal operation which the patient underwent?—It is made by the insertion of a needle and obtaining the internal pressure, which in the normal person should range between 60 and 100 mm. of water. It is usually not serious. The pressure in aggravated cases runs from 200 to 300 and sometimes 800 mm.

ONLY A SUPERFICIAL DIAGNOSIS.

Mr. Schuhl (Cross-examining)—You have never made a diagnosis of the case?—Not a real diagnosis.

Then all you really know about the case is what you have heard Mr. Husar say in evidence were his symptoms, your examination of the X-Ray plates and your three-minutes' conversation?—Yes.

Dr. S. A. Ransom, U. S. Public Health Service, stated that several weeks ago there were no visible symptoms of skull fracture, nor cerebral injury, but he had found evidence of traumatic neurosis. He did not believe that there had been a severe concussion of the brain.

In answer to Mr. Snyder witness said the extraction of 15 cc. of fluid was but one-quarter or one-fifth of what the average individual could stand.

In answer to Mr. Schuhl, witness said that concussion of the brain in many instances could not be determined by demonstrable anatomic examination, further that a beam 21 ft. long, weighing 40 lb. and falling three and a half feet would usually cause concussion of the brain, but that it all depended how and where it fell.

"AFFECTED PSYCHOLOGICALLY."

The deposition of Dr. Pederson, ship's surgeon on duty in the str. President Lincoln, was read into the record. It was to the effect that Mr. Husar, another passenger, and witness had [illegible] the medicine ball [illegible] the sun deck, their daily custom, when Mr. Husar, seemingly blinded by the sun, tossed the ball into the air instead of to him. He saw the beam falling and shouted to Mr. Husar, but could not attract his attention. He did not think that he was unconscious but appeared stunned for some time. The wound bled freely and after taking Mr. Husar below, witness thoroughly cleansed the cut and made seven stitches. Plaintiff appeared to be affected psychologically, for he continually referred to an accident in Shanghai, which befell a gentleman who afterwards died from spinal meningitis—it was traumatic neurosis. Witness had lashed the awning spreader to the posts immediately after the accident, within a day or two.

The hearing was adjourned, pending the arrival of another physician from Hangchow.

According to the "Sinwanpao," Wong Tung, who is in charge of the Chapei Census Office, "has received an order from the Paoshan Magistrate to take a census in Chapei, and at the same time to find out whether any bad characters are mingling with the law-abiding residents." The answer is in the affirmative, and there is no need to go to the expense of a census to prove it.

CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISMISSAL

Story of Garage Employee's Alleged Misdeeds: A Shareholder

A claim for damages for alleged wrongful dismissal by a former employee of the Asiatic Motors Co. came before Judge Purdy at the U. S. Court on Thursday. Plaintiff, P. W. Kelly, in his petition states that he joined the defendant company on May 11, 1923, and remained with them until dismissed on November 29. He claims arrears in salary from May until November, inclusive, amounting to Tls. 1,433, the sum of Tls. 1,500 due to him in lieu of three months' notice and G. $900 as reimbursement on shares he bought from the company. Mr. F. J. Schuhl appeared for plaintiff; Mr. Haskell for defendants.

Plaintiff, in evidence, said that the money he had paid for the shares had never been returned to him.

The Judge—Has plaintiff ever tendered the shares?—I tendered the shares and was almost ejected from the office.

Mr. Haskell (cross-examining)—Have you ever had complaints from patrons dissatisfied with the work done on their cars?—(Witness) perhaps a few, between one and ten.

Have you ever overcharged?—Never. I have reduced charges made through error in the book-keeping department by the Chinese clerks.

Have you ever struck any of the employees of the company?—Yes, I slapped one who struck the gas coolie, and I may have used rough language to some to make them work.

The defence produced vouchers to show that payments had been made to plaintiff in September and the words "to square his account" written alongside "On account."

Witness stated that these first words had been added since the original signature to the documents. "I called attention to it in your office," he said.

"OVERCHARGED CUSTOMERS."

Mr. E. M. Mark, called for the defence, stated that there were many complaints on the work done at the service station (St. George's Garage) and numerous instances of overcharge by Mr. Kelly. There had been a refund of $100 to Mr. Solomon and Mr. Niles, and Mr. Ting had made similar complaints. Probably 50 per cent. of the customers had made complaints as to the service.

Mr. Schuhl (cross-examining)—You got Mr. Kelly to put $500 into the company?—Well, he did put in that amount.

Had you any money in the company when Mr. Kelly put in his funds?—No.

Is it not a fact that you used that $500 to pay the fees debited through incorporation. I cannot say for sure, for it is likely there was other money in the bank at the time.

Is it not a fact that you discharged Mr. Kelly because he would not put any more money into the company, so that you could put in some one who could?—No.

In the afternoon, Mr. Grant Mark, a director of the company, told the Court that it was his custom to visit the service station at least once a day and that he had heard many complaints about the type of repair work done. He proceeded to give instances.

Mr. Schuhl (cross-examining)—Is it not a fact that you came to St. George's Garage many times intoxicated and ordered Mr. Kelly round?—No.

Have your employees not struck because you did not pay them proper wages?

Mr. Haskell objected, but Mr. Schuhl stated to the Court that he merely wished to show that the staff was dissatisfied and would not do the work properly. Witness denied the allegation.

Mr. Schuhl—On many occasions did you not fail to pay salaries when they were due?—Witness—Yes, you might say that, but often it was only over the week end.

Did you ever suggest that Mr. Kelly should put more money into [illegible] the company?—Yes. [illegible] if what he had been [illegible] pany for 60 days.

Mr. P. W. Gr[illegible], general manager of the Asiatic Motors since October 15, told the Court that plaintiff had used vile language to him and [illegible] became positively insubordinate in his phraseology. There were many complaints as to Mr. Kelly's work.

The hearing was adjourned till next morning.

GUNRUNERS ON THE HUANGPU

Two Men from Crew of M. M. S. Chambord Sentenced to Imprisonment

Two Frenchmen, members of the the crew of the M. M. S. Chambord, named Antonini and Saby, received 12 and 10 days' imprisonment each, respectively, when brought before a Marine Court on board the French gunboat Colmar on charges of assault, attempting to smuggle arms into China (in the case of Antonini) and obstructing a Customs Officer whilst attempting to carry out his official duties (in the case of Saby), on Saturday.

According to the Water Police (who prosecuted on behalf of the Chinese Maritime Customs), a Customs tidewaiter named Hansen was on duty at the Whangpoo Wharf, on Sunday, whilst the M. M. S. Chambord was lying alongside. He intercepted two members of the crew who came down the gangway and on Antonini found a pistol. While he was busy searching this man, the other managed to get clear and escape into the Settlement. A struggle followed, during which the Frenchman struck Hansen a blow on the jaw. He (Antonini) then rushed up the gangway, followed by the tidewaiter. Here again there was a struggle, the other members of the crew meanwhile surrounding the fighters. Suddenly one of the crew (Saby), according to the Customs officer's story, took 10 pistols from Antonini's waist belt and ran off into the crews' quarters. He came up again and struck the Customs officer in the stomach. Shortly afterwards the officers came to the scene and rescued Hansen, who accordingly reported the matter to his superiors.

H. & S. BANK BURGLAR SENTENCED

Four Years for Series of Daring Exploits

Sentence of four years' imprisonment was passed by Magistrate Kuan and Mr. Martin at the Mixed Court on Wednesday, on Woo Sung-kuei, alias Zoo Hong-yau, the burglar who broke into the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank early on the morning of April 4.

Accused had been remanded since April 4, when it was stated by police witnesses that he [illegible] entrance to the bank's premises at an early hour on that day. Seen by a watchman, he made a hurried exit. He made a wild attempt to escape, but before very long was caught by the police.

At the resumed hearing on Wednesday, a long record of burglaries was proved against him. He began operations on August 10 last year by robbing Medhurst College. Since that time he had broken into the Chinese Post Office, Peking Road, a godown at 1 Kungping Road, an office at the Old Ningpo Wharf, the China Merchants' S. N. Co.'s offices, Messrs. Thomas Cook & Son, the Equitable Eastern Banking Corporation, and the Small Investors,' Ltd., visiting the latter's premises a few minutes before making the attempt on the Hongkong Bank. The proceeds of his thefts must have amounted to approximately $4,000.

On a charge of begging, a man named H. P. Jackson was committed for trial at the U. S. Commissioner's Court on Monday. Defendant was the only occupant of the American Gaol on Monday, four prisoners recently sentenced to terms ranging from four to six months and fined in addition $100, departing under escort the same morning for Bilibid Prison by the str. President Grant.

Labour Bigger Not in Size But in Mind: Hopes of Agreement With Russia: Housing Problems: The New Hope for European Settlement

London, Apr. 19.

Unusual interest centred on the speech to-day by the Premier in connexion with the annual conference of the Independent Labour Party at York.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, opening the conference, declared that since January Labour had become bigger, not in size but in mind. "The Party and the Cabinet are both doing well." He denied the dictum that they were in office but not in power.

The Prime Minister alluded to the conference with the Russian representatives in London after years of misunderstanding and mischief, which had not produced a brass farthing to Russia's creditors but had produced unemployment and poverty to hundreds of British families.

In reply to a question whether the Singapore scheme was still being pursued, Mr. MacDonald declared: "We are in office with power to do so."

The Government had got to grips with the housing problem. A scheme was being drawn up to provide houses that would be a pleasure for people to live in.

The Prime Minister was glad to find the country behind him in the view that the experts' reports ought to be taken as a whole. There were things in them that he disliked, but if he began to raise details, France, Belgium and Germany would do the same and they would be exactly where they started. "Here is Europe's chance to put them into operation all at once and all together, and then, when that is done, to go on and finish the job and bring peace and security to the continent."

Mr. MacDonald urged that their attitude should be to accept Germany's word. He pointed out that the greatest danger Germany now offered was industrial deterioration and not the danger of arms.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald stated that Dominion status for India was the Labour Government's ideal. He appealed to his Indian friends to do their bit for British democracy and keep faith in the Labour Government. He declared that the Government inquiry now being held was in no way an expedient for wasting time, but must produce results which would be the basis for consideration of the Indian constitution which, he hoped, would help the Indians to co-operate towards the creation of a system which would be self-government.

The Prime Minister saw no reason why the country should be bothered by a general election for two or three years. He believed that his duty was to carry on the Government and keep off an election, which nobody wanted and which, if it came, would settle nothing. He did not believe in a coalition and did not think that an election would be kept off by it. It would take at least two or three years to put Europe on a peaceful footing and get industrial relations established in anything like a normal way.—Reuter.

A LABOUR PARTY CONFERENCE

Premier's Rousing Reception: Government's Aims and Justification

London, Apr. 21.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald attended the Independent Labour Party Conference at York to-day. The Prime Minister was given a rousing reception.

Replying to a resolution assuring him of the Party's hearty support, Mr. MacDonald said that the Labour Government was doing its best. He could not assure them that it would always do what they wanted. The Government had been justified in what it had done. It might have made mistakes and it might not have the true faith of the Empire, but the great thing it had got to do was to impress on public opinion, not only in Britain but throughout the world, that a Labour Government was a practical thing and a good thing.

The Cabinet was terribly overburdened, the Prime Minister continued, but he had received every assistance from the well-informed staff of the Foreign Office.

He did not know, he said, how long they would be in office and he did not care very much so long as they did good work. They were helping the world to a new frame of mind and getting people to see that the different point of view might be to their benefit. So long as they did that they were perfectly willing to continue.

Later.

The Independent Labour Party Conference at York to-day adopted a watered-down resolution on disarmament policy. The Commissioner of Works, Mr. F. W. Jowett, carried the meeting in pointing out that the Labour Government would go out of office if Britain alone declared in favour of disarmament.—Reuter.

LIBERAL AND LABOUR AMENITIES

Mr. Lloyd George's Tirade Against the Attitude of the Government

London, Apr. 22.

Mr. Lloyd George in a speech to-day at Llanfairfechan declared that it was absolutely untrue that there was a revolt against Mr. Asquith. There was, however, a revolt against the humiliating conditions under which the Liberal Party was expected to keep in power a Government that had never concealed its hostility towards the Liberals.

Labour speakers, the ex-Premier continued, had said that the Liberal Party was effete and done for. They were told that there would not be an election for two or three years; meanwhile the Liberals would be the oxen to draw Labour over the rough roads in Parliament and would finally be slaughtered. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, he declared, in three months had dissipated the stock of goodwill of those who put Labour in office. The Labour Party should reconsider its attitude before it was too late.—Reuter.

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Government's Endorsement of Many Resolutions: Legislation in Preparation

London, Apr. 23.

The Government has issued a White Paper specifying its position regarding the various resolutions of the Imperial Economic Conference and showing that it endorses most of them and is giving effect to them by administrative measures and the introduction of legislation.

It hopes at an early date to introduce legislation for reorganisation of the Imperial Institute. The necessary instructions are being prepared regarding the placing at the disposal of the Dominion and Colonial Governments of the services of his Majesty's commercial and diplomatic officers, and the Government will gladly take advantage of the Dominions' offer regarding the services of their oversea trade commissioners.

A revised scheme of Imperial trade statistics is being prepared for submission to the other Governments concerned.

The Government is preparing a scheme of mutual interchange of aeronautical information and will take steps to keep the other Governments fully informed of developments regarding airship services.

It is inviting the colonies and protectorates to adopt a scheme whereby patents granted in Britain should extend to the colonies and protectorates on registration.

The Government is reserving any expression of its views on tariff preference, shipping taxation and immunity of State enterprises pending the Budget discussions in Parliament.—Reuter.

BRITISH EMPIRE EXHIBITION

London, Apr. 22.

Splendid weather during the past few days immensely helped forward the day and night efforts of the army of workers in the final spurt to bring the British Empire Exhibition to a state of practical completion in time for the opening. The finishing touches are now being put to many sections. It is estimated that the great show will be 95 per cent. ready when the King, accompanied by the Queen, arrive in State on April 23 from Windsor.

The proceedings in connexion with the opening ceremony will begin at 10.30 a.m. by massed bands, a Brigade of Guards and massed choirs. Guards of Honour will be furnished by the Navy, the Army and the Air Force. The representatives of the Dominions and the Colonies will be posted on a corner of the Royal Dais. The musical programme will last an hour until the arrival of Their Majesties, who will be welcomed by the Prince of Wales as the President of the Exhibition. His Majesty's reply will be delivered before an audience of 150,000 people in the Stadium, while elaborate broadcasting arrangements have been made to transmit the speech to every part of the country. A brief religious ceremony will follow, after which a Royal salute of 21 guns will be fired and the Union Jack will be broken over the Dais, and the Dominion and Colonial flags on their respective buildings.

London, Apr. 21.

Mr. and Mrs. Chu Chao-hsin held a reception at the Chinese Legation yesterday in honour of Mr. Liang Shih-yi and the Hongkong representatives at the British Empire Exhibition A hundred and fifty Far Eastern guests were present.—Reuter.

Telegraphic Arrangements.

Shanghai, Apr. 22.

At the British Empire Exhibition to be opened at Wembley tomorrow, the Eastern Associated Telegraph Companies will occupy a space with their own exhibits, and so forth.

For the convenience of exhibitors, visitors and others, they will also have their own telegraph station for the acceptance and delivery of telegrams at a stand at Avenue 15, Bay 7 to 11, in the Palace of Engineering, which will be in direct communication with their London station at Electra House.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

London, Apr. 22.

On the occasion of the opening of the British Empire Exhibition, Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Commonwealth Prime Minister, has cabled the High Commissioner for Australia in London a message which concludes: "Let us on this day, in the spirit that animated and sustained our fathers, pledge ourselves by loyalty to the Empire's products to build up on a lasting foundation of the prosperity of every individual citizen a greater and a nobler Empire than we have yet known, one which, owing its existence to supremacy in the arts of peace, will remain the greatest factor in maintaining peace."

On the occasion of the opening of the Exhibition, Sir James Stevenson has been created a Baron.

Huge Surging Crowds.

Apr. 23.

Overcast and chilly weather in no way damped the enthusiasm of the cosmopolitan crowds visiting the British Empire Exhibition. Hundreds of thousands of people were surging to Wembley from six in the morning in a continuous series of special trains packed to suffocation. The roads were crowded with omnibuses and motors. Innumerable schoolboys and girls were among the earliest arrivals. The scenes at the Exhibition defied description. An army of workers, including the clerical and managerial staffs, were very busy throughout the night with the final stages of clearing up. Scarlet bands were massed outside the Stadium at an earlier hour and the huge white-robed choir was already in position facing the royal scarlet, gold and purple dais.

Their Majesties arrived at 11.30 and were greeted by a tremendous roar of applause which drowned the fanfare of trumpets. Their Majesties were received on the richly carpeted dais by the Prince of Wales as the President of the Exhibition, who had arrived earlier, and presented the address.

Powerful Agency of Civilization.

The Prince of Wales, in asking His Majesty to declare open the exhibition, referred to the Exhibition as a picture of our commonwealth of nations. He truly believed that it would suggest to the world that the most powerful agency of civilization had its heart set upon peaceful aims and the good of mankind. In expressing gratitude to the organizers and others, including the representatives of the Dominions, India and the Colonies, the Prince said that the great work had been carried through with splendid loyalty and energy. In conclusion the Prince of Wales hoped that the result would be to impress vividly upon all the peoples of the Empire to work unitedly and energetically to develop the glorious heritage for the benefit of the British race, for the benefit of the other races which accepted our guardianship and for the benefit of mankind generally.

The Prince of Wales wore naval uniform and received a great ovation, the vast audience stood and the band played the National Anthem. The dais on which the Diplomatic Corps, the Cabinet Ministers and the High Commissioners were seated presented a brilliant colour scheme, with officers and soldiers of numerous regiments, including Indian, African and every conceivable kind of uniform. The whole was flanked by flower beds and fronted by very green lawns.

The King's Speech.

"It gives me very great pleasure and satisfaction to come here to-day with the Queen for the purpose of opening the British Empire Exhibition. Our heartiest congratulations are due to the Board of Management, to the executive council and to all who worked with and under them for the marvellous organization and industry which produced this triumphant result. I am well aware of the numerous adverse circumstances, including exceptionally unfavourable weather, which had to be faced. These were successfully overcome by arduous labours carried out with resolution and goodwill. Many who, like the Queen and myself, have seen the work in the earlier stages can appreciate to the utmost the skill and toil which have translated a magnificent conception into this splendid reality that now stands before us.

Free and Tolerant Co-operation.

"I am happy to welcome the representatives, official and unofficial, of my Dominions beyond the seas and to express the pleasure we all feel that they are taking part in to-day's opening ceremony. You have said that your object has been to produce a picture of our commonwealth of nations. No one can doubt that this has been fully attained. The Exhibition may be said to reveal to us the whole Empire in little, containing within its 220 acres of ground a vivid model of the architecture, art and industry of all the races which come under the British flag. It represents to the world a graphic illustration of that spirit of free and tolerant co-operation which inspired peoples of different races, creeds, institutions and ways of thought to unite in a single commonwealth and to contribute their varying national gifts to one great end.

"This Exhibition will enable us to take stock of the resources, actual and potential, of the Empire as a whole, to consider where these exist and how they can best be developed and utilized, to take counsel together as to how the peoples can co-operate to supply one another's needs, and to promote national well-being. It stands for coordination of our scientific knowledge and common effort to overcome disease and to better the difficult conditions which still surround life in many parts of the Empire. Think, for example, of the scientific work accomplished in recent years for prevention and treatment of tropical diseases. And it is easy to imagine how greatly the Exhibition can contribute towards progress of our tropical territories and development of the yet unexplored capacities of the Empire.

"Our thoughts go back to the great exhibition of 1851 associated for all time with memories of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort and to the brilliant hopes of growth of international peace and friendship with which it was inaugurated. Our object here is not quite so ambitious and for that very reason, perhaps, we are more hopeful of attainment. We believe that this Exhibition will bring the peoples of the Empire to a better knowledge of how to meet their reciprocal wants and aspirations and that where brotherly feeling and habit of united action already exist the growth of inter-Imperial trade will make the bonds of sympathy yet closer and stronger. Business relations between strangers may or may not lead to friendship, but co-operation between brothers for the better development of the family estate can hardly fail to promote family affection.

"We hope further that success of the Exhibition may bring lasting benefits not to the Empire only but to mankind in general. No nation or group of nations can isolate itself from the main stream of modern commerce, and if this Exhibition leads to greater development of the material resources of the Empire and to expansion of its trade, it will at the same time be raising the economic life of the world from the disorganization caused by the War.

"I declare the British Empire Exhibition open and I pray that by the blessing of God it may conduce to the unity and prosperity of all my peoples and to the peace and well-being of the world."

The speech was transmitted by gigantic loudspeakers to every part of the grounds and was broadcast to every part of the country.

The conclusion was marked by a renewed outburst of cheering and waving of hats and handkerchiefs which was followed by a salute of 21 guns. Simultaneously 300 flags, representing all parts of the Empire, were broken and fluttered in the breeze.

Workmen and Their Majesties.

Their Majesties received a number of engineers and workmen. The King was presented with a memento in the form of a gold model of the world. The Colonial Secretary's daughter presented the Queen with a bouquet. The band and choirs played and sang British music and the massed bands joined in playing "Rule Britannia," which the spectators rose and sang as their Majesties departed.

The exhibition was most brilli- The most enthusiastic was the appearance of Majesties in the arena with ing escort. There were State carriages with four s apiece. The King wore naval uniform and the Queen wore fur cloak. The bands crashed the National Anthem as they lighted. There was profound ence when the slight figure of Prince of Wales rose from the . The Prince's words were pronounced in sharp tones throughout the great arena followed by hand-clapping. Then the King read his reply. Every word was heard with very great ness. After that the Bishop of London offered a prayer. Then followed the salute of guns. There pretty incident at the close of the ceremony when a telegraph messenger ascended the royal dais with a large letter informing the King that the royal speech went round the world in 100 seconds. The boy was loudly cheered as he the arena.—Reuter.

Intense Interest in Overseas Exhibits

London, Apr. 23.

The British Empire Exhibition was thronged all day long. The 80,000 visitors who attended the opening of the Stadium overflowed the Dominions and Colonial pavilions, which were often impassable, especially the smaller buildings of the African colonies and dependencies, Palestine and Hongkong. The novelties of the Hongkong shopping centre cast a spell on many visitors, while the native workers in the walled cities of West Africa were overwhelmed with the attentions of the crowd. The picturesque and roomy Malaya pavilion was thronged, the main interest centring on the arts and crafts display with indigenous talent working on primitive industries.

The clearness of the broadcast transmission of the Stadium ceremony was such that a gramaphone record was taken of the King's speech with a medium-loud speaker. This was broadcast late tonight with His Majesty's permission for the benefit of those who were unable to hear the speach in the morning. His Majesty's words were heard very distinctly. The speech was also broadcast in Esperanto for the benefit of Continental listeners.

The letter handed to the King by a telegraph boy at the close of the opening ceremony was from the Eastern Telegraph Company. It informed His Majesty that his special message: "I have this moment opened the British Empire Exhibition" went round the world in 80 seconds.

Why the Premier Was Absent.

It is explained that the Prime Minister was absent from Wembley for the opening of the British Empire Exhibition to-day because during Easter he was busy at the conference of the Independent Labour Party and had received the sanction of the King to take three days' holiday in order to obtain a short rest before the House of Commons reassembled.—Reuter.

Brilliant Scene at Night.

Later.

Wembley presented a brilliant picture at nightfall, when the main avenues and buildings were illuminated by thousands of lamps. The Stadium was lighted up by powerful searchlights. There were gay scenes in the Hall, where thousands of people danced out the historic day.—Reuter.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN ELECTIONS

Campaign Opened by Speeches of Party Leaders: General Smuts's Programme

Capetown, Apr. 23.

The South Africa election campaign was opened for the Nationalists by speeches by the leader, General Hertzog, and the Cape leader, Mr. F. S. Malan, and for the South African party by General Smuts.

General Hertzog declared that the Republican bogey had never been on the programme of the Nationalists and that he would be a fool to press it unless the English wanted it as much as the Dutch. He was closely heckled over this remarkable assertion.

Mr. F. S. Malan also spoke enigmatically on the subject of independence. Both were endeavouring to convince the electors that the Nationalist policy on this matter coincided with that of General Smuts.

Speaking at Pretoria, General Smuts announced the Government's programme of policy, which embraces a number of broad, progressive measures. He pointed to the Government's past accomplishments including the destruction of racialism by securing co-operation amongst the people of the Union. General Smuts charged the Nationalists with endeavouring to shelve the question of secession temporarily because of the pact with the Labour party. He described the pact as an election dodge.—Reuter.

FRANCE AND GERMAN REPARATIONS

Demand that Reduction Must Be Balanced by Cutting Dues to Britain

Paris, Apr. 16.

A note handed the Reparations Commission says that the German Government consider that the experts' reports offer a practical basis for a rapid solution of the reparations problem. The Government, therefore, declare their willingness to collaborate in the execution of the experts' plans.—Reuter.

London, Apr. 16.

The steady improvement in foreign exchange since the reparations experts' reports has been enhanced by German acceptance of the plans. Sterling to-day reached $4.35\frac{1}{8}$ and Belgian francs 80.37.—Reuter.

Rome, Apr. 16.

It is semi-officially intimated that a meeting between the Premier, Signor Mussolini, and the Italian experts decided that the experts' reports constitute a suitable basis for the solution of the reparations question.—Reuter.

Paris, Apr. 17.

The Reparations Commission, taking note of Germany's endorsement of the experts' conclusions, has unanimously decided to approve, within the limits of its authority, such conclusions, and to adopt the measures contained in the reports to the interested Governments with a view to the plans becoming fully effective at the earliest possible moment.

The Commission has further decided to request the German Government to furnish as quickly as possible bills and decrees destined to assure complete execution of the plans, and to designate the German members of the committees to deal with railways and industrial mortgages, etc.

Apr. 19.

Discussing the forthcoming inter-Allied conversations, the "Matin" states that the French standpoint is firstly, that the German debt cannot be reduced without proportionate reduction of inter-Allied debts and, secondly, that pressure on Germany cannot be given up if the Allies do not determine beforehand the measures to be taken in case of German default.

It is reported from Rome, where Gen. Dawes, the president of one of the expert committees is staying, that he has declared that Germany must make reparation for war damages. He also said that the occupation of the Ruhr alone had made possible the work of the expert committees, and guaranteed the carrying out of the recommendations.—Reuter

French Premier's Approval of Allied Experts' Plans

Paris, Apr. 21.

M. Poincaré has communicated to the Reparations Commission the French Government's attitude with regard to the reports of the Committees of Experts. He says that the Government approve the plan fully as much as the Allied Governments. He invites the Commission to formulate suggestions with regard to the carrying out of the plan.

The Prime Minister expresses the view that a number of preliminary measures must be executed before the present pledges in the Ruhr can be exchanged for others. Such changes must be dependent on previous agreement amongst the Allies on sanctions in the event of default by Germany.—Reuter.

THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS

U. S. President in Favour of Another World Conference to Restore Harmony

New York, Apr. 22.

President Coolidge, in an address at the annual lunch of the Associated Press to-day, announced that with a definite settlement of German reparations firmly established he was in favour of calling another world conference to consider further limitation of armament and modification of international law. The Washington Conference had done a great deal to restore international harmony and goodwill, but the questions of submarines, aircraft and land forces were still unsolved.

The President declared that the report of the expert committee under the chairmanship of Gen. Charles G. Dawes was unsurpassed in importance since the Armistice, and he trusted that it would commend itself to all the European Governments interested as a method of arriving at a stable adjustment of reparations.

The speaker indicated that private American capital would be forthcoming for a loan to Germany.—Reuter's American Service.

AGITATION AGAINST IRAQ TREATY

No Financial Assistance to Meet Ottoman Debt: More Concessions Expected

Bagdad, Apr. 20.

An agitation, largely conducted by lawyers and accompanied by the wildest misrepresentations, has broken out against the acceptance of the Anglo-Iraq Treaty which possibly the Constituent Assembly will refuse to accept without large modifications. Indeed, it is reported that only 14 out of 100 deputies can be depended upon to vote for the Treaty.

The agitators assert that Britain does not guarantee that the Mosul vilayet will not be surrendered to Turkey or the defence of the other frontiers of Iraq, and that the Treaty gives no financial assistance, except the maintenance of British forces in Iraq, while Iraq has to shoulder a large share of the Ottoman Debt and the huge expense of expansion of the national army, which would mean early bankrutcy.

King Feisul and his ministers are doing their utmost to counteract the agitation, but the deputies believe that if the Assembly rejects the Treaty, Britain will make large concessions in order to retain a footing in Iraq.

Apr. 21.

Extremists yesterday stabbed in a street two deputies who were known to favour ratification of the Anglo-Iraq Treaty.—Reuter.

RUSSIA A RELIABLE DEBTOR

Statements by MM. Trotsky and Zinovieff: British Bankers' Demands

Moscow, Apr. 21.

M. Trotsky, in an interview, declared that Russia was a reliable debtor. She wanted to get money from England, but there was no question of "saving" Russia, which could dispense with such aid if necessary. "We want to establish better relations with capitalistic countries, but why should they require us to cease being Communists when we don't demand that they cease to be bourgeois?" The Soviet would try to avoid hostilities with Rumania, he said, provided Bessarabia was given an opportunity for self-determination.

M. Zinovieff, in a speech, declared that if the demands of the British bankers represented England's minimum, there was nothing doing. Russia would make great concessions for a loan, but not so as to be held in thrall.—Reuter.

M. Trotsky Truculent and Also Virulent

Riga, Apr. 23.

Since his return to Moscow and resumption of his duties as the head of the Military Council, M. Trotsky has adopted a more truculent attitude than ever. He has promised to make the British press, which criticized his Tallis speech, sing another tune before long. He described Mr. Ramsay MacDonald as "a banker's clerk" and threw cold water on the Anglo-Russian Conference in London. M. Trotsky also attacked Americans, whom he described as more hypocritically base than the White Guards.—Reuter.

KIEFF TREASON TRIAL

M. Poincare's Ironical Reply to Chicherin: Let Soviet Murder Whom It Will

Paris, Apr. 23.

M. Poincaré has replied to M. Chicherin, who in answer to a telegram from the former indignantly rejected France's attempt to interfere in the Kieff trial on behalf of "spies."

The Premier says that the French Government, in transmitting to the Soviet Government a petition from French savants asking for clemency for their Russian comrades, did not intend to interfere in Russian internal affairs. He adds that the Soviet Government is perfectly free to disregard considerations of humanity and denies the allegation of M. Chicherin that the condemned persons tried at Kieff had collaborated with the French secret service.—Reuter.

CHARGE OF CORRUPT PRACTICES

St. John's, Newfoundland, Apr. 22.

Sir Richard Squires, former Prime Minister of Newfoundland, has been arrested on a charge of larceny of $20,000. Mr. Alex Campbell, former Minister of Agriculture and Mines; Mr. John Meaney, former Liquor Controller; and Mr. Whitford McNeilly, former Clerk of the Crown Lands Office, have also been arrested on charges of larceny of $400, $100,000 and $30,000, respectively.

Sir Richard Squires, Mr. Meaney and Mr. McNeilly have been admitted to bail in $40,000 each and Mr. Campbell in $4,000.

Mr. Alex Rooney, Accountant-General of the Post Office, who is charged with larceny of $3,000, escaped to Canada a fortnight ago.

Mr. William O'Reilly, former Magistrate in Placentia, is being conveyed here on a charge of obtaining $12,000 by false pretences.

The charges have been formulated as a result of the investigation of a Royal Commission, which reported alleging irregularities in several Ministries and a waste of public funds in the period preceding the election in cases like "paying idlers for tasks they did not perform." The report specifically blamed Sir Richard Squires himself and alleged that he received through his secretary $20,000 with tainted history from a Mr. Meaney, Liquor Controller, and that he similarly received $43,000 from the Dominion Steel Co. when the latter were negotiating with the Government for renewal of an ore royalty contract.

Ex-Premier's Denials.

In the course of the inquiry, the former Prime Minister unequivocally denied the allegations, although he admitted that moneys had been put to the credit of his account for the use of the "Daily Star," a newspaper, while he was absent from the Colony between August and December, 1920.—Reuter.

OBITUARY

Signora Eleanora Duse

Pittsburg, Apr. 21.

The death is announced of Signora Eleanora Duse, the famous Italian tragedienne, owing to influenza, at the age of 62.—Reuter.

Born at Vigevano, on the borders of Piedmont and Lombardy, of a family of actors, in 1859 Signora Duse made a romantic first stage appearance, playing Juliet for the first time at Juliet's age (or little more) in Juliet's own city, Verona. By 1885 she was recognized at home as Italy's greatest actress, and this verdict was confirmed by that of all the leading cities of Europe and America. In 1892 she won a splendid triumph at the Karl Theatre in Vienna. In 1893 she made her first appearances in New York and London. For some years she was closely associated with Gabriele d'Annunzio, and several of his plays, notably "La Città Morta" (1898) and "Francesca da Rimini" (1891), provided her with important parts.

But some of her great successes during the 'eighties and early 'nineties—the days of her chief triumphs—were in Italian versions of such plays as "La Dame aux Camélias," in which Sarah Bernhardt was already famous; and Signora Duse's reputation as an actress was founded less on her creations than on her magnificent individuality. In contrast to the great French actress she avoided all "make-up"; her art depended on intense naturalness rather than stage effect, sympathetic force and poignant intellectuality rather than the theatrical emotionalism of the French tradition. Her dramatic genius gave a new reading to the parts, and during these years the admirers of the two leading actresses of Europe practically constituted two rival schools of appreciation.

Last June at the age of 61 Signora Duse was in London. Her hair almost white, her intense and pale face deeply lined and full of suffering (for serious ill-health had kept her off the stage for long periods), she made a tremendous impression in an Italian version of Ibsen's "Lady from the Sea." In an alien country, acting a difficult play, to an audience mainly composed of persons who did not understand one word of what she was saying, it was at once demonstrated that the greatness of Duse was not on the decline. Her rank among the great actresses of history remains indisputable.

Miss Marie Corelli

London, Apr. 21.

The death is announced of Miss Marie Corelli, the eminent novelist, at the age of 59.—Reuter.

 The late Miss Marie Corelli was of mingled Italian and Scottish (Highland) parentage and connexions and was adopted in her infancy by Charles Mackay, the well-known song-writer and litterateur. Brought up in the childhood in England, she was afterwards sent to France and educated in a convent, where she received with other instruction a first-class musical training. Her first book, "A Romance of Two Worlds," was an instant success, and from that time she devoted herself entirely to literature. Amongst her many publications were "Vendetta," "Thelma," "Soul of Lilith," "Barabbas," "The Sorrows of Satan," "The Mighty Atom," "The murder of Delicia," "The Master Christian," "Temporal Power," and in recent years "The Young Diana," "My Little Bit" and "The Secret Power."—Ed.

Gen. Sir John Dunne, K. C. B.

London, Apr. 20.

The death is announced of General Sir John Hart Dunne, K.C.B., at the age of 88

Sir John Dunne joined the Army as an Ensign in the Wiltshire Regiment in 1852. He served through the Crimean War and took part in the battles of Alma, Balaclava, Inkerman and the siege of Sevastopol. He also served throughout the China War of 1860 and carried and hoisted the Union flag at the capture of the Inner North Taku Fort. He was with the advance guard at the action of Changiawhan and Foliatchan and the capture of Peking.—Reuter.

HARRY THAW TRIAL SENSATION

Convicted Man Now Declared to be Sane: New Trial Called For Philadelphia, Apr. 22.

The jury at the inquiry into the mental condition of Harry Thaw, who killed the famous architect, Mr. Stanford White, of New York, in 1906, and was subsequently incarcerated in lunatic asylums, declared him sane and competent to handle his large estate. His mother supported the claim of sanity, but his former wife, Evelyn, and the Thaw estate contested the case. The jury deliberated for seven hours. The opposition have moved for a new trial. —Reuter's American Service.

∴ Few criminal trials have excited such worldwide interest as that of Harry Thaw, an extremely wealthy young American. The crime with which he was charged was that of murdering Stanford White, a prominent New York architect, on the Madison Square Roof Garden, his alleged motive being his wife's protection from White's attentions. At the time the act took place "Madame Butterfly" was being played. Thaw underwent three trials, being defended by the best counsel in the country, while Mr. William Travers Jerome prosecuted. These trials occupied over two years, and on the third hearing Thaw was adjudged insane.

He was then sent to an asylum as a criminal lunatic, but after spending a few years in the asylum succeeded in escaping and with the connivance of friends reached Pennsylvania, where again he was arrested. This last trial arises out of the latest arrest.

THE PUNJAB EMEUTE

2,000 Arrests Made: Need of Inquiry into Sikh Shrines Controversy

Simla, Apr. 19.

The fourth Akali Jatha, numbering 500, has been arrested at Jaito, making a total of over 2,000 arrests, including the third Jatha which was arrested a fortnight ago. The fifth Jatha is starting shortly and probably will also be arrested. A feature of the arrests is the calm submission of the Akalis in response to the recent advice given by Mr. Gandhi not to show violence.

The first band of Akalis were arrested on February 22 after a fight in which 14 Akalis were killed and 34 wounded. They were met on their entry into Nabha State by the British Administrator and a small party of Nabha troops.

The second Jatha arrived at Jaito on March 14 and quietly surrendered to the British Administrator.

Meanwhile, the Punjab Government has appointed a committee presided over by Sir William Vardwood entirely composed of non-officials to recommend legislation to settle the Sikh controversy.—Reuter.

THE IRISH BOUNDARY CONFERENCE

Breakdown of Negotiations: Ulster's Obstinate Attitude

London, Apr. 24.

The Irish Boundary Conference in London has broken up. No agreement was reached.

Later.

A fresh Irish crisis is threatened by the breakdown of the Boundary Conference. The delegates for the present are remaining in London, but a further meeting is not likely.

It is understood that the Ulster representatives persisted in refusal to consider any boundary alteration or to appoint a representative on a boundary commission. It is anticipated that the Free State will now summon the Imperial Government to proceed in accordance with the treaty to constitute a commission. It is suggested in some quarters that Ulster's refusal to participate in it will necessitate the introduction of an amending bill in the British Parliament, which would arouse a storm of controversy.

Feeling runs high in both the Free State and Ulster. The situation is very delicate.—Reuter.

"If England gives us credits we shall repay a moderate percentage, but private property will never be returned to foreign owners. We shall forbid commercial negotiations between British bankers and private Russian capitalists."

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

THORNHAM MILLS DISPUTE SETTLED

The Trifles that Lead to Industrial Upheaval: Influenza Returns: A Manchester Repertory Theatre: Poets in the Lancashire Dialect

From Our Own Correspondent.

Manchester, Mar. 16.

The news of the settlement of the dispute at the Thornham Spinning Companies' two mills at Royton has caused general satisfaction in Lancashire. Lock-out notices had been posted affecting 120,000 spinning operatives. The story of the dispute shows how easily in these days a situation of great gravity may arise from a comparatively insignificant cause. The women operatives in the Royton mill were feeding three "opening" machines; one of the worst paid jobs in the spinning industry. A fourth machine was given them to mind, and the speed of all the machines was slowed down. The output was not increased but the opening of the cotton was improved. The two operatives demanded payment on a machine basis. The employers offered it on an output basis, but agreed to pay an extra 2s. 5d. to each woman to settle the matter. The two operatives affected refused this offer and handed in their notices. Their fellow workers refused to work with the substitutes the employers engaged in their places and stopped work; 280 employees were affected.

The Thornham Spinning Co. brought the matter to the notice of the Spinner's Federation and a special meeting of the affiliated employers was held. This meeting decided that an important principle was at stake and the Master Spinners gave all their employees a fortnight's notice to terminate their engagements unless the dispute was settled in the meantime. The Cardroom Amalgamation realized that the employers were in earnest. They were also of opinion that they would welcome a stoppage owing to the bad state of trade. At first the Cardroom Amalgamation demanded that the two operatives should be paid an additional 10s. 6d. each. They reduced this to 7s. 8d., and the employers increased their offer to 4s. 5d. It would have been better for the operatives if they had accepted this but there were further negotiations and the employers adopted a stronger attitude. The Cardroom Amalgamation then got frightened and completely climbed down. Their President, Mr. Crinion, issued a statement to the effect that while they adhered to the principle of payment by machine they were leaving the matter to be settled between the management and the two feeders concerned. The management have re-engaged the two feeders at 30s. per week, an increase of 2s. 5d., on their old wage, and 2s. less than the amended offer they made when the dispute was on. Work has been resumed at the two mills and Lancashire breathes again.

INFLUENZA'S RETURN VISIT.

But as one trouble fades another looms larger on the horizon. Influenza is paying us a return visit. It has not yet affected Manchester to the extent it has ravaged the neighbouring towns of Bradford and Leeds but it is steadily getting worse. In those towns the tramway services have been disorganized, a considerable proportion of the police forces have been put out of action, and there has been a serious dislocation of business. For a time there was almost a panic in one of the poorer quarters of Bradford by a visitation of acute gastric influenza which disabled its victims in a few hours, reducing them to unconsciousness and semi-delirium. So sudden was its onset that at first the illnesses were ascribed to leakages of gas from the mains, or fumes from a neighbouring refuse tip. There were 72 deaths in Leeds last week directly traceable to influenza.

In Manchester influenza is not a notifiable disease and it is difficult to discover just how great its ravages are. Last week there were 66 deaths in Manchester and Salford from influenza and pneumonia. Most cases of the latter disease are an outcome of the former. Accompanying the epidemic of influenza there is a recrudescence of encephalitis lethargica, the dangerous disease which seems to increase every time there is an influenza epidemic. It is called "sleepy sickness" in Great Britain but it has no connexion with the dreaded beri-beri of Africa—29 new cases of this complaint were notified in Manchester last week, and there were six deaths.

OUR REPERTORY THEATRE.

Manchester has a repertory theatre again. It is true that it is not a very grand affair. Its home is in an old building in Rusholme that was first a riding school, next a picture theatre, and is now—for it was not grand enough for the kinema—the home of the legitimate drama. Its founder, Mr. Belt, addressed a largely attended subscription dinner at the Midland Hotel, Manchester, a few days ago when a society was formed to back the enterprise, and make suggestions as to the plays they wished to see staged. Mr. Belt is a super-optimist. He said that in his opinion Manchester people wanted repertory. It needs some faith and a stout heart to make an assertion like that after the fate of the famous Manchester Gaiety Theatre repertory enterprise. For years, Miss Horniman, at that theatre, offered Manchester the best plays in the world, played by some of the best actors and actresses. The offer was not accepted. Manchester stayed away most of the time, or only came when a "Gaiety play" made a stir in London and was subsequently replayed at home. If, after that, Manchester extensively patronizes repertory in its new home it will indeed show a change of heart. Kinemas, concerts, theatres, and music halls, in Manchester are all beginning to feel the competition of "wireless." More than 39,000 wireless-receiving licenses have been issued in the Manchester area and there are probably more than twice that number of people who have wireless sets but have not yet bought licenses. They are going to buy them "a bit later on," they say.

A LANCASHIRE ANTHOLOGY.

The University Press of Liverpool, in conjunction with Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, have recently published, "A Lancashire Anthology," which may interest the home loving Manchestrians exiled in the Far East. It contains the work of 35 past and present poets who have written in the Lancashire dialect, and is edited by May Yates. Mr. W. W. Gibson, has written an interesting introduction. The poems selected are rather uneven in quality. More than a spark of genius is necessary to make melodious verses in the Lancashire dialect. Some are very beautiful. Many are mere fustian. We have had no poet in Lancashire to equal William Barnes, whose tender joyous poems in the Dorsetshire dialect are far above anything in this anthology. Yet some of the Lancashire poems have a music all there own. Take for instance these two verses from a poem by William Baron.

"Aw'd just stopped to rest me, a bit past th' owd farm,
For t'basket wur heavy, and t' weather wur warm,
Aw'wur listenin to th' woodlark i' t' thicket beyond;
While t' sunbeams danced gaily in t' surface o't' pond.
But all of a sudden a footstep drew near;
An' when I looked reawnd me blithe Roger wur theer;
He smiled—en so kindly, an' bid me "good day,"
Then he axed to goo wi' me—an what could I say"
"We met two days after—aw'd gone deawn to t' well;
But soon aw' discovered aw' were'nt by mizel',
Oh, he mun ha' bin watchin' for me he espied:
An afore aw'd filled t' buckets he stood bi mi side.
"Eh, do let me drink fass," he said wi' a grin,
But he none wanted t' wayter—t'wer me at he'd sin.
An' while aw' hoisted t' well rope, he chatted quite gay.
Then he bent o'er and kissed me—an' what could aw' say."

There is a quaint charm in the way old Sam Laycock handled a theme many poets have sung. Here is the first verse of his, "Ode to th' sun,"

"Hail, owd friend, aw'm fain to see thi'
Wheer has t' been so mony days?
Lots o' times I've looked up for thi',
Wishin' aw' could see thi face.
Thi' little childer reawnd abeawt here,
Say they wonder wheer tha'rt gone,
An' they wanten me to ax thee
T' show thisel' as oft as t' con."

The use of the Lancashire dialect is perhaps happiest when used on a humorous subject. Here is a line or two from Alfred Pearce's, "Mill Whistle."

"Ay, deawn wi' th' mill whistle!
Aw hate it, aw' do,
When aw'm dreomin' it gies' mi the nark,
For just when aw'm kissin' th' rich emporor's dowter,
It screeches eawt, "Get to th' wark"

Those are, happily, verses of the past. The 6 a.m. start in the morning is now abolished and the mill worker has an extra two hours in bed. There is much simple Lancashire philosophy in Allen Clarke's "A Gradely Prayer,"

"Give us, Lord,
A bit o' sun
A bit o' wark
An' a bit o' fun.
Give us aw'
In th' struggle an' splutter,
Eawr daily bread
An' a bit o' butter."

The verses in the anthology are well provided with footnotes explaining the meanings of the more obscure dialect words. The book also contains short biographies of the verse makers. Edwin Waugh, and all the old favourite Lancashire poems, like "Come Whoam to th' Childer an' Me" are to be found here. And if in Lancashire we have no poets equal to Burns we have many humble lyrists who hymn with moving appeal the joys and sorrows of the myriads of Lancashire workers.

"Angels in Ancoats, ay, the feet of Christ Walking in broken clogs the Salford mire."

RETURN OF THE HORSE

Ousting the Motor Lorry for Short Distances

Evidence points strongly to the fact that for short distance service the horse is replacing the motor for conveying goods. For long distances, of course, the motor lorry has made considerable headway during the last few years, but for the shorter journeys farmers, small traders, and others are finding this means of transport too expensive, and are steadily reverting to horse traffic.

A representative of the "Morning Post," who made inquiries at the headquarters of the Shire Horse Society, in Hanover-square, recently, was informed that it was becoming increasingly evident that this was the case. There was a growing demand for geldings, and when such bodies as the Edmonton Borough Council disposed of all their motor vehicles and reverted to horse traction, it became apparent that the movement was becoming general. Further inquiries amongst some of London's big contractors served to confirm this view.

The Commercial Motor Users' Association held the opinion that although horse traffic was cheaper for short distance haulage, and that at the present moment there was an undoubted appreciation of this fact, it did not necessarily follow that this condition would continue. Motor competition had reduced the value of the heavy draught horse, but an increased demand for horses of this type would probably raise their price until an economic balance was reached.

CHINESE CHARGE D'AFFAIRES TO CHILDREN OF ENGLAND

Broadcasting Mr. Chu's Own Story of His Boyhood and School Days in China

The following is the text of the little speech made by Mr. Chu Chaohsin, Chinese Chargé d'Affaires in London, to the children of England through the Central Broadcasting Station. Mr. Chu is thought to be the first diplomatic representative to [illegible]

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, March 21.

If every one of the children of China on whose behalf I am now speaking sent their best wishes to you, the children of England, each of you would get about ten messages, for the population of [illegible] that of England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland.

You will understand, then, that [illegible] children in China and China is such a big place that I cannot tell you a great deal about it in the few minutes' talk, but I will do what I can to show you where we of the old land of China are like you in the West and where we differ from you.

When I was a boy in Canton, the school I and other boys went to was of the old-fashioned sort, such as had been the rule in China for hundreds of years. In those schools the children studied nothing else but classics, particularly the Four Books by Confucius, the great Chinese teacher who lived in the year 400 B.C. They could repeat every word, every sentence, every paragraph and every chapter of the book: they were required to recite word for word before the teacher, so that every child in the old days had this solid foundation of the [illegible] Confucius taught.

Nowadays, however, the children study in the new schools, and they [illegible] to Chinese literature, but have to learn almost as many different subjects as you children in England. The [illegible] turned out more real scholars—but children in the modern schools learn something useful for their future [illegible] practical men for the country and [illegible]

Chinese [illegible] taught by their [illegible] to be [illegible] A [illegible] should [illegible] and [illegible] listen to his teacher. He must stand up when he is asked a question. When out of school hours he must be polite to [illegible] in the street, he should stand aside until the teacher passes by.

I [illegible] my school life in the early days. The students were confined to the class-rooms all day long and were not allowed to play. The teachers were very strict in preventing the pupils from [illegible] however it is different. The schools have been modernised. The boys play football, baseball, cricket and other games [illegible] the same as over [illegible]

The [illegible] look forward to the great festivals and holidays. Chinese [illegible] of the Western nations in only having the first day of the month. We make [illegible] in China, and observe our old New Year Day, which is a movable date, just like Easter is in other countries.

This year the old Chinese New Year came on February 3. The Chinese children got presents from their parents like you do at Christmas and they had plenty of fireworks and crackers. At night every house was illuminated with lanterns, hundreds and hundreds of them. You would even see dragons walking down the streets, great paper monsters with lots of legs. If you looked closer you would see that these legs were rather like men's legs, and as a matter of fact these dragons were really like some of the animals you see at your Christmas pantomime—when they come in half you find they are only men dressed up.

Of course the children of China drink tea, for it was from China that tea first came to Europe. But they never have any milk or sugar in it, nor do they drink milk at other times. Coffee and cocoa they do not know of, and they never drink cold water. Plain rice soup is generally taken at breakfast, and at other meals they have rice and vegetables with a small portion of meat. But they are very healthy and happy, even with this simple living.

FILIAL PIETY.

One of the chief things Chinese children are taught is filial piety. This is the same command as you learn to "Honour your father and mother." This is considered important. Children must obey their parents. A filial son must always show a happy face and have a soft voice whenever he attends to his parents. In the winter the son should warm the quilt of his parents, and in summer cool their bed. Each morning the son should call on his parents, and before retiring at night must see whether they are comfortable.

A filial son knows how to please his parents. Let me tell you an anecdote about Tan Tze, who is known as one of the "Twenty-four Filial Sons" in Chinese history. When he himself was 73 years of age, his parents were still living. He never felt he was an aged man, and always tried to do his utmost to amuse his aged parents. One day when he thought they seemed miserable he put on a beautiful coat with five colours, and played in a childish manner in front of his parents just to amuse them. While begging some drink to eat, he purposely fell down and cried like a child, for he thought his parents would be grieved to be reminded of the time when such things actually happened.

There is another quaint old story which is told the children of China. It is of the dutiful son who cheerfully accepted his mother's beatings, even when he was a grown man. One day, however, after a beating, he burst into tears. When his friends asked him why, he replied: "Formerly I felt pain when my mother beat me, but this time I didn't. I am afraid, therefore, my mother is getting [illegible] weak. And therefore I weep."

THE REPENTANT STEPMOTHER.

Another anecdote is that of Min Tze-chien, one of the followers of Confucius. He was ill-treated by his stepmother, who had two sons of her own. The stepmother gave her sons two cotton coats made of good material, but the one she gave to the stepson was made with some dried grass inside. The father did not notice from their outside appearance the differnce between the cotton coats. One day Min Tze-chien was driving his father, when he dropped the reins and fell unconscious, on account of being so cold. His father took him home and found that the cotton coat possessed no cotton inside, but was made of some sort of dried grass. He was, therefore, very angry and decided to send away his wife, but Min Tze-chen knelt down and appealed to his father, saying "Kindly do not send my stepmother away; when she is here, only one son is suffering, but if she is sent away, suffering will come to all three sons." The stepmother heard him, and being ashamed, confessed she was wrong before, but she promised to treat in future all the three sons alike. Finally, she became a very kind-hearted woman.

These stories may seem curious to you and they certainly are amusing, but the history of China, which goes back four thousand years, has been built up in its family life and its love of parents for children and children for parents. Confucius taught that you should be good so that your family may follow your example.

I think this is a very good rule, don't you?

Good-bye—children of England.

CATS AND MEN

Torn from his comfort by the kitchen blaze,
Plunged forth upon the coldness and the night,
Kim, the philosopher, arched to full height,
Accepts the shift of fortune. All his days
End thus. He has grown used to human ways.
He knows that men, though strangely they delight
In such caprices, yet design no spite
And will to-morrow welcome him with praise.
Sometimes he looks exactly as if he must
Be smiling at the thought that, soon or late,
Men to the darkness and the chill are thrust—
Like cats the victims of descending fate.
Nay, smile not, Kim; for, once outside the door,
Men come back to their House of Life no more.

THE Governor General of Indo-China, M. Merlin, is expected to come to Peking about June 1 for a two-day visit. In taking this trip to Japan and China, M. Merlin is the first Governor-General to make a visit to the neighbouring countries. He will come to Peking by way of Korea and Mukden.

A letter found near Kobe on the 12th instant is believed to be connected with a plot for counterfeiting notes of the National Bank in Honan Province to the extent of Y.30,000,000. The forgers' den is believed to be at Tokio and it is surmised that some Japanese are in the game. The letter, it is alleged, further referred to a Chinese now at Kobe assisting in the plot, and wanting money (Y.1,500) for his work, to be remitted through the Chartered Bank. The letter concluded with an injunction to burn it when read. A passenger, from Sannomiya-cho, Kobe, of the O.S.K. Baikal Maru was apprehended at Dairen by the Customs there on a charge of carrying copper-plates intended for the forging of notes of the same Chinese bank. When examined by the Dairen Water Police the [illegible] stated, a Kobe journal says, that he had been requested by a Chinese at Kobe to make the plates and hand them at Moji, on his way home, to some Kobe Chinese

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

"Prince of Scotland:" Suggested Revival of Title: Memories of Tea Clippers

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, Mar. 5.

The suggestion of the "revived" use of the title Prince of Scotland continues a subject of discussion North of the Tweed, but it cannot be said to have aroused much enthusiasm. Now that the title of "Prince of Ireland" is discovered to be another right of the Prince, most people are inclined to think that the controversy should be quietly dropped. It is becoming too complicated. We Scottish people indeed are quite pleased with the Prince as he is and with his title; it would make no real difference to us whether we toasted him as of Wales or of Scotland. Affection does not need these artificial aids; it is personality that counts. Another rumour is current to the effect that Prince Henry may be created Duke of Edinburgh.

It is rather curious that the title of Prince should be so highly regarded in this country and is kept exclusively for royal personages, whereas in Latin countries and in Germany a Prince is of rank inferior to a Duke. Going back to origins, a Prisceps is small alongside a Dux. In Thackeray's "Newcomes," when the Princes de Montcontour (née Miss Higgs of Manchester) became by succession la Duchesse d'Ivry she declined to "descend" from being a Princess to become a Duchess. She was quite wrong, except perhaps in the social atmosphere of Manchester. Even in Britain the inferior status of a Prince is recognized when a royal personage is created a Duke—for instance, we have the Duke of York and the Duke of Connaught. In Scotland, the Prince is always toasted as Duke of Rothesay, and in the Western Duchy as the Duke of Cornwall. In the ear of a Frenchman the title Prince is inferior to that of Duke. The small fry of the French royal family might call themselves princes, but the big fish were Ducs, and the biggest of all used no titles of nobility—the heir was simply le Dauphin, and the eldest brother of the King was "Monsieur," tout court.

I had an interesting experience some dozen years ago which showed the French indifference to titles of nobility and the British worship of them: I was staying in a small French hotel, and after lunch one day in walked the late Duke of Argyll. "Hullo," he said to me, "what are you doing here?" I explained, assured him of a decent meal, and then made my farewells. I had met him several times before. Word spread among the British visitors that a real live Duke was lunching in the hotel, and they clustered around the door just to look at him. The French patronne and her daughter, simple peasants, treated the Duke exactly as they would have treated any other casual guest They addressed him simply as "Monsieur," which must have pleased him. When he had fed and gone I found myself an object of envy and almost worship among my fellow-guests because I actually "knew a Duke."

WALLACE AND WESTMINSTER HALL.

Among the reconciliations of history there is none more dramatic, and certainly none more appropriate, than the commemoration of Sir William Wallace in Westminster Hall. More than six centuries have passed since he stood before the ancient judgment seat of the Kings of England and bore himself undauntedly in presence of Judges who had been appointed not to try but to condemn him. Edward I. had spared no effort to secure his capture and the large rewards given to those who betrayed and took him prisoner are still on record. While he was being carried to London, special arrangements were made for bringing him to trial without delay, and preparations for his execution seem to have been made contemporaneously with those for his trial. It is all very long ago; but loyalty and courage never become antiquated, and it still stirs the blood to read of the chaplet of laurel leaves with which they crowned in mockery the head of a hero who was to die a martyr to the sacred cause of freedom. The indictment which was read was largely a true bill. When Edward I. conquered Scotland, Wallace had raised an army, had recovered Scottish castles and strongholds, had defeated an English force, had governed Scotland, had led [illegible] France, had ravaged the northern counties of England, and, on his defeat by Edward, had refused to accept the English King's terms of peace, and had continued to uphold the banner of Scottish independence. For these things we love and honour him; for these things, 600 years ago, he was condemned to die with the universal approval of a nation which, since then, has done perhaps more than any other for the cause of liberty. It is strange that so many years should have passed before placing an inscription in honour of Wallace on the floor of Westminster Hall, for Wallace is the national hero of Scotland. He is its greatest and purest patriot. When portions of his mangled body were exposed to ignominy—his head in London and the quarters at Newcastle, Berwick, Stirling, and Perth—those who killed him believed that his life and his work had ended in failure, and that his name would go down to posterity as that of a criminal. Another entered into his labours, and, building upon his foundations, achieved what he had died to gain, and the nation which, in spite of seeming failure, he served has never ceased to treasure his memory. If he did not come to the grave with honour, yet the whole soil of a free country is his sepulchre. No nobler name can be associated with the Hall in which he was a friendless victim of the revenge of a cruel monarch and of a nation whose military ambitions he had withstood. He represented the ideals which have long ago united his own people and those who were then his people's enemies in service for mankind. If his greatness is not even yet fully appreciated in England, it is because distance of time has obscured his story and his achievement.

SCOTS PEER'S REMINISCENCES.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen have for some time been engaged writing their reminiscences. The task, it is understood, is now practically completed, and the book will be issued in the course of the spring publishing season. The earlier part is a collaboration, but in the later stages separate sections have been written by the authors.

SCOTLAND CHANGING HANDS.

The Duke of Sutherland is the latest of the large landowners of the country to put landowning on a new basis. It is announced that the Duke has converted his estates into a joint stock company, the intimation being as follows:—Sutherland Estates Private Co. for the management and improvement of landed estates. Capital £100,000 in £1 shares. The Duke is the largest landowner in the Kingdom.

The past dozen years have witnessed a mighty upheaval. In Central Scotland, for example, the great Breadalbane estates have been broken up. Many other landlords throughout the country have taken advantage of the opportunity to form their estates into joint stock companies, so as to obtain certain benefits in regard to taxation, particularly in the assessment of income-tax and death duties. And, apart from all these, many of the smaller estates have been sold in recent years, and names which were household words in the countryside have entirely disappeared from the lists of landowners.

A FAMOUS CLIPPER CAPTAIN.

Memories of the old windjammer days are recalled by the death in Dundee at the age of 92, of Captain John M'Kay, a veteran son of the sea, whose proud claim was that of having commanded a ship which beat the famous tea clipper Cutty Sark both to and from Sydney, New South Wales. Captain M'Kay was at that time in charge of the Aberdeen clipper Ann Duthie, a full-rigged ship of about 1,000 tons. She was bigger than the Cutty, but could go like the wind in a good gale. The first race was on the homeward journey from Australia. The Cutty Sark, under Capt. Tiptaft, loaded at Newcastle, New South Wales, while the Ann Duthie loaded at Sydney. Both left the same day, but Captain M'Kay arrived in London about eight days ahead of his rival. The return voyage was more exciting. Both ships left London at the same time, and spoke to each other on four occasions during the voyage. For days at a stretch they lost sight of each other, and then they would come together for a brief spell. On the last occasion they met both ships had every stitch of sail on. A good deal of chaff and banter passed between the rival captains, and, taking advantage of a good going gale, the Ann Duthie shot ahead and bade a last good-bye to the Cutty, arriving in Sydney two days in advance of her. His best week's run was 2200 miles, while his four quickest passages to Australia were done in 72, 72, 73, 74 days.

HOMELY FARE.

One evening last week some Labour members who were disgruntled by the proceedings in Parliament found unexpected solace in the dining room. The caterer of the House of Commons, with a flash of insight, had put haggis in the menu. In the London Press recently a Sassenach alleged that Scotsmen never eat haggis. That man should have seen what happened at Westminster. A crowd of Scotsmen consumed the "Great Chieftain" with gusto, and so successful was the experiment that haggis is to be one of the standing dishes every Tuesday evening in future. This is the second direction in which the influx of Scottish Socialists has made gastronomic history at Westminster. Last year it was "saps," bread soaked in hot milk, and this intriguing dish is still available for late suppers, or, if occasion demands, for early breakfasts.

EMIGRATION FROM SCOTLAND.

A report issued by the American Bureau of Immigration for the past six months gives some surprising figures as to the composition of the immigrant current. For the first time in many years the British element has again first place, there having been in six months 149,507 British immigrants 67,536 Germans, and 49,777 Italians. The most surprising fact of all, however, is the size of the Scottish contingent, 49,106, as compared with 64,961 from England and the Dominions. Apparently in this time Scotland has sent about as many emigrants to the United States as England with her eight times greater population. The great increase in the British emigration is doubtless a consequence of unemployment and as you are aware the industrial belt in Scotland and the Western Highlands has been heavily hit of recent years.

COACHMAN WHO HAS DRIVEN FIVE POPES

Recollections of Rinaldo Jacchini

The oldest member of the Pontifical household in Rome is the coachman, Rinaldo Jacchini, a sturdy old man of 80, who still takes Pius XI. for his daily drive in the Vatican gardens. Jacchini entered the service of Pius IX. as postillion in 1844, and was afterwards promoted to be coachman. He likes to recall the pomp and splendour of the Papal equipages of those days, when the Pope constantly appeared in public, and the fact that it was he who held the reins when Pius IX. took his last drive through the streets of Rome on September 19, 1870, the day before the Italian troops stormed Porta Pia.

Jacchini has a good deal to say about his different masters, all very unlike in character. Pius IX. was very good-natured and affable in manner, though clouded by sadness in his later years. Leo XIII. was cold and aristocratic, a great contrast to his gentle, unassuming successor Pius X. Benedict XV. could be quick-tempered at times. The present Pope, for whom Jacchini has a great admiration, never fails to speak a kind word to his aged retainer.

OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER

Prime Minister's Disappointing Reception: His Promises of Preference Waning: Statement That Singapore Base is Not Indefinitely Postponed

From Our Own Correspondent.

Melbourne, Mar. 12.

Mr. S. M. Bruce arrived back in Australia during the last few days. The newspapers describe his reception as cordial, but it was certainly a personal and official welcome, and bore no resemblance to the triumphant entry into Melbourne of his predecessor W. M. Hughes, who was met by returned soldiers in their thousands and drawn to the Town Hall in a horseless vehicle.

The press reports hardly do him justice. Particular reference is made in most cases to the Prime Minister's appearance which, we are told, gave no indication that he felt that his mission had been a failure or that he had suffered defeat. It is in the implication that the cruelty of the comment lies. Mr. Bruce himself far from admitting defeat is disposed to claim a victory. But he is greeted with some very harsh reminders of the manner in which the administration has been carried on in his absence. He has supplied "interviews," but apart from these declines to talk about his visit to London or the work of the Imperial Conference. He says he must first of all report to Parliament, though there are members of his following who believe that he should first report to a joint meeting of the members of the Nationalist and Country parties in the House of Representatives. Such an undertaking, even if Country members would attend, would be a difficult one, and wisdom has probably prompted him to avoid such an occasion.

MR. BRUCE'S OPTIMISM.

The Prime Minister has told his interviewers that possibly he did not gain all that he had hoped for, but he expected that so far as preferences went the House of Commons would carry the economic conference's proposals by overwhelming majorities. But already the British government has jettisoned the proposal of a permanent economic committee to watch and advise.

It is the treatment of the economic committee proposal which raises a doubt as to whether Mr. Bruce's optimism is well-founded. He told the conference that the Murray River irrigation and settlement scheme would in the next five years put some 750,000 people on 2,000,000 acres of land, but that if these settlers, chiefly fruit-growers, were not to be assured of a market for their produce the whole Murray Valley scheme would have to be slowed up. He stated that of the output of dried fruits in Australia the Dominion at present consumed 80 per cent. and had to export the other 20; but that with the completion of the scheme the position would be reversed and Australia would only consume 20 per cent. of the output and markets abroad would have to be found for 80 per cent.

He foretold a similar position in connexion with tinned fruits. The late British government definitely promised to increase the preference given on certain British Empire fruits. As this would not increase the taxes of the people of the Old Country, but rather reduce them, that promise is likely to be carried out.

BALDWIN'S GOVT.'S PROMISES.

But there were other promises to increase the duties on some fruits, with a view to admitting similar products from the Dominions free of all duty, giving them 100 per cent. preference. These promises might or might not be carried out. The late government also pledged itself to denounce the treaty with Greece regarding currants, to be followed by increased duties and 100 per cent. preferences. It proposed, however, before finally destroying the treaty that the Dominions should plant currants and show that they had sufficient supply in hand. It need only be said that Dominions which acted upon this promise might, if the new government did not feel itself bound to honour the promissory notes signed by its predecessor, find themselves in a parlous position, with over-cultivation of currant grapes and no profitable market to which to send them.

Such considerations as these may account for Mr. Bruce's optimism as to the ultimate fate of the resolutions passed by the Economic Conference.

SINGAPORE BASE CRITICS.

There is no question that the chief interests which centres round the story which the Prime Minister of Australia has to tell about the late Imperial Conference is what there is to be said about the Singapore Base. Australia generally holds with the idea of guarding effectively the gateway between the Indian and the Pacific Oceans.

Admiral Field, commanding the Special British Service squadron, has already appealed to Australian sentiment by describing Singapore as a station on a pass through mountains, as an oil base, which must be guarded if we are to control our oil supplies. Australians have been appropriately reminded of the famous change stations in the interior of the great coaching firm of Cobb & Co., stations where the horses were fed, relays obtained, and passengers refreshed after long and arduous stages. The protection of those changing stations was among the first duties of the government's myrmidons. Singapore, on a far greater scale, is a changing station on the road between the Indian ocean and the Pacific. The idea has not completely sunk into the minds of the leaders of Labour. They still visualize the insult offered to Japan, and fear that the Base means the employment of cheap coloured labour in some way leading to the exclusion of their own trades unionists.

The frequent statements that British Government has abandoned the whole idea of creating the Base, and has come to an agreement with the Admiralty that the work on it shall be indefinitely postponed, have been referred to Mr. Bruce, and his reply is somewhat reassuring. These statements, he says, are merely shots—sighting shots it is undertood—"because I am perfectly certain that they (the newspapers) do not know the position." Australia must await the event, but impatience will manifest itself if the waiting is made too prolonged.

SPLIT IN COUNTRY PARTY.

The Western Australian elections for the State Legislative Assembly take place on the 22nd instant. A good deal of interest has been taken in the result.

The Country party is represented in the Cabinet of Sir James Mitchell, and that ministry has done far more for the people on the land than any previous government. However, the Country political organizations have demanded that all Country politicians must pledge themselves first to obey the executive of the combined organizations rather than go to the electors on their own pledges or in support of Sir James Mitchell. This has created a split, and the Country political bodies are putting forward men in opposition to Sir James Mitchell and his Country colleagues.

It is thought in many cases that this will hand the control of Parliament over to the Labour party, from the grim effects of whose rule the State is only just now emerging. It is a curious fact that the candidates put forward by these organizations which profess to represent the man who walks between the handles of the plough are in almost every case men who are middlemen, and could not draw a furrow to save their lives.

Farmer Hayseed, as the Americans like to call him, cannot complain if he is lampooned. He deserves all he gets for he is never weary of doing his best to defeat his friends and place in power those who have already proved themselves his worst enemies. It is only a few years since the financial position in Western Australia was so bad that a farmer could not rise a £5 loan on his freehold, while his taxes were abnormal. But he has forgotten this, and is once more plunging into the mire because he thinks that he knows more about politics than those who have made that abstruse subject a life-time study.

COMMUNIST INVASION.

Not only has Mr. Bruce warned the Nationalist and Country party politicians that serious dangers await the Commonwealth if they by their divided counsels hand the government of the country over to the Labour Opposition, but the Labour itself fears disaster unless it can rid itself of Communistic elements which are, to use Labour's own phrase, "white-anting" the trades unions political movement.

This fear of the Communists is not the result of a vivid imagination. It was the extreme or revolutionary elements which tried to drag Australia out of the late war, and brought about the schism in the ranks of political Labour which resulted in its exclusion from power in the Commonswealth and all the States but Queensland since 1917.

It was the Communuists who insisted upon putting into the forefront of the Labour programme what they called the Red Objective, namely, the socialization of all industry, production, distribution and exchange. This objective hangs like a millstone round the neck of political Labour. The latter cannot explain it; and the Communists continue to preach, with it as the text, confiscation, the rule of the proletariat, and the beauties of Sovietism. In other words the Communists are out to capture the Labour movement. Leaders of political Labour see themselves driven out of the well-paid Labour offices, with their chances of political preferment doomed. It is not unfair to say that they are thinking of the effect of this Communistic teaching upon the Labour rather than upon the country generally. The struggle goes forward vigorously in New South Wales, where the Communists have been declared "outside the Labour movement" by an executive upon which they had secured seats. These expulsions are being used to create dissensions in the party, which is part of the white-ant process.

Mr. Lang, the State Parliamentary Labour leader, has lost all patience with the Communists and has deliberately warned the trades unions that the disturbers of the Labour peace are a gang of "blasphemous political cut-throats."

REGENT'S CANAL OR ROAD

London Liberal M. P.'s Big Scheme

A scheme to convert the Regent's Canal into a fast motor traffic road eight and a half miles long, linking up the London Docks area with the principal railway companies' goods yards as far as Paddington, and giving employment to 6,000 men for a year at a cost, excluding the figure for the purchase of the canal, of £2,888,000, was discussed at a meeting of London Liberal members at the House of Commons recently.

The project was explained by Mr. F. J. Laverack, M.P. for Brixton, who has developed the plans from an idea supplied by Mr. Miller, one of his constituents.

The land occupied by the Regent's Canal throughout its length averages about 60 feet in width, and it is proposed to build in its place a motor road giving direct and rapid connexion between the whole of the dock area and the railway goods yards, thus considerably easing London's traffic congestion.

This proposed 60 feet wide road will be lighted by light standards placed in the centre of the road, and 20 feet on either side of the centre line will be taken up with the fast-travelling ingoing and outgoing traffic. The remaining 10 feet on both sides of the road will be used for loading and unloading the motor-lorries which serve the factories and business houses whose premises are situated upon the banks of the canal. Water gas, and drainage will be carried under the road in the usual manner.

The promoters of the scheme contend that the Regent's Canal at present does but little work, and the work that is now done by it will be more efficiently done by converting the canal into a road.

The scheme will be placed before London Liberal members in greater detail at a further meeting at the House of Commons.

A NEW LOCOMOTIVE

Ingenious Invention by Italian Engineer

An important experiment has been made on the Rome Northern Railway line for a distance of 25 miles of what is described as a "new thermo-aero locomotive," invented by the Italian engineer, Fausto Zarlatti, which has already excited the interest of mechanical engineers in most parts of the world. With the new system, it is claimed, the Italian State railway would reduce their traction expenses by 70 per cent., and the transformation of the engines could be accomplished with an expenditure of only 600 lire per horse-power, which would be compensated for by the savings in less than two years. It is calculated that the entire savings in expenses for the Italian State Railways would be about 500,000,000 lire per annum. The High Commissioner for Railways and leading scientific experts took the greatest interest in the tests. The great advantage of the invention consists in the fact that existing railway material can be utilized, and the only change in the locomotive is the suppression of the coal furnace and grate, etc.

The invention consists in an ingenious utilization of the combined efficiency of hot compressed air and steam, both produced by an internal combustion motor of the Diesel type fed with heavy oil. Compressed air engines have, of course, been in use for many years, but hitherto there has been no ingenious combination of compressed air and steam, which in the Zarlatti invention is said to give perfectly astounding results. All the advantages of the steam locomotive are retained. The locomotive may be stopped without stopping the motor, and power may be increased for up-grades at will. To show the ease with which existing traction material may be transformed, Signor Zarlatti undertook to convert an old discarded shunting locomotive, which was used successfully for the recent experiments, and gave remarkable results, pulling a train of 15 heavy goods truck up a steep grade. The additional advantages of the new system consist in the suppression of smoke, soot, and ashes, almost perfect cleanliness, and a great saving in repairs. The cost of transformation is vastly less than that of electric transformation of existing traction. In fact, any ordinary locomotive may be supplied with the new thermo-aero motor by placing the latter on the tender. Spain has already taken great interest in the new invention, and it is said that the system may be employed on the Spanish railways.

A "NEW" MURILLO

At the Museum of Historic Art in Vienna a beautiful new picture by Murillo is now on view, which has been lent from a private source. It shows the Immaculate Conception, which Murillo painted in quite a number of variations. The very youthful-looking Virgin floats on a halfmoon in clouds, surrounded by a crowd of charming little angels. The work had been painted over, and it is only recently that the surface picture was removed.

THE highest tower in London is now being erected. It is the central feature of Selfridge's new buildings and is 450 feet high, twice as high as the Victoria Tower. It will be decorated with sculptures, and surmounted by a figure representing Commerce, 30 feet high.

THE MAN WITH TWO TALENTS

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, on Sunday evening, March 17

Text: St. Matthew XXV 22. "And he also that had received the two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst to me two talents, Lo, I have gained other two talents."

Two of the men who are figures in this parable one hears enough about. The man of five talents we hear enough about him. Indeed—he is usually so powerful and influential that he can take good care that he is not lost sight of. He gets into the limelight, or, if he can, into the electric-arc light. His light will not be "hidden under a bushel," if he can help it, and he generally can. He is the great genius, the "captain of industry," the head of a vast business, the great scientific investigator, out of whom and his discoveries the great financiers hope to make a lot more money. And no doubt, we cannot very well do without them, if we want to progress. We should not have much to read, if they had not written books, and we should still go to the seaside in carts unless one of them had given us railways. There is a great deal to be said for the man with five talents. If there is not, then all our monuments to them are a sheer vanity. No doubt we do right to be thankful for them, when the real ones come so rarely; for it was Andrew Lang who said, no doubt truly, that "it will be ten thousand years before a man is born with as much humour as Charles Dickens."

Then we hear enough about the man with one talent. He has received more attention from preachers than either of the others. I fear that that is rather a reflexion on the audiences that preachers address. Often enough, alas, the man of one talent does not bring back the one talent that was given him. He has "spent all," and as Ruskin once said, "he brings back only the dust of his body and the wreckage of his soul." Though whether he does that more frequently than the man of five talents I am not sure. Several five-talented men have got into prison lately for mishandling money entrusted to them. When Mr. Five-Talents goes wrong, he goes very wrong.

BETWIXT AND BETWEEN.

The man with two talents is mostly entirely neglected. He comes "somewhere betwixt and between his two brilliant and prosaic-colleagues. He is between the great genius and the man with the "corner grocery." It is very seldom that a word is said for the poor fellow. He is passed by as "too dull and stupid for anything." We like men picturesquely good, or picturesquely bad. Yet our Lord, who "knew what is in man," seems to have thought quite well of him. He treats him as having done quite as well proportionately as his Five-talented financier. He had not attained the modern ideal of the two-talented man making five talents. But he had doubled his money just a much as the brilliant brother had done. And, if all I am told about business is true, it is far easier to run a business on five talents than on two, on £50,000 than on £20,000. So we take the man with two talents to represent the "average man." He is the man without great ability, but with a sufficiency to do well. He is not the great saint in the church, but the good average member, who is the very backbone of a church. The saint of two talents is apt to make a blaze; the man of two talents keeps it nice and comfortably warm. There are endless detractions of this average man. Jokes are made about him. I wonder average people do not, like the poor slavey, "wish they were dead." Yet the Lord thought well of him. A man who can make cent per cent. cannot be altogether useless.

UNSUSPECTED DEPTHS.

Now all this detraction of the man with two talents is wrong and more, it is wicked. There is a book, lately recently published, the name of which I will not give as I do not want to advertise it, that I call a wicked book. It is a volume of Essays. One is on the average man. He is steadily depreciated. The average man is "plain," he is "unimaginative;" he "doesn't do striking things," or say them; there is "nothing to put on his tombstone but, that he lived and died;" if I remember rightly the author "wonders why God made him." The author might have seen that he is on the wrong line, by a difficulty, that he feels. It is that the average man won so many V.C's in the war. That difficulty ought to have taught him that there are depths in the average man that make him the equal of Mr. Five-Talents at times. I like the late President Roosevelt much better than this haughty essayist. He says. "There are two kinds of success. There is that of the man who can do what no one else can do, the genius," the man of five talents. "Then there is the average man, the average statesman, the average public servant, the average business man, who is successful, but is not a genius," the man of two talents. And this is a very good definition of the man of two talents; "He has the ordinary qualities of his fellows developed to more than an ordinary degree." The man of two talents could not possibly be described more accurately than that. He is the average man raised to a higher power. And there is no kind of man, who gets so depreciated as he. Why? The Lord's disciples were men of two talents. He could not have done with a band of 12 Pauls. And they did well. I once clipped a paragraph out of the "Outlook," which I am sure our Lord would agree with. It says, "It is our glory, that we (that is, the United States), have hundreds of thousands of men of the second class. Much of the best and most permanent work of the world is done by the men of two talents. That is so, and it is time it is acknowledged. The man of two talents bears the heaviest burdens of the world; he faces its difficulties and conquers them; he has the best families of the world; is the deepest thinker; he plans and runs industries; he carries on the professions; he gives more to charities than the others; he makes more sacrifices for the education of his children than the other classes. The men of two talents are like the infantry in the army, the men who do the real fighting.

THE BACKBONE OF STATE.

Now let us turn to the application of this to the present day. The man of two talents is a very pressing problem. We call him in the mass, the Middle Classes. They are the people in the mind of the writer in the "Outlook," A Mr. John Corbin has written a book, "The Return of the Middle Classes." He says they are "the mass of people between the geniuses and rich capitalists and the working people, and the proletariat," to use a hideous word. Without depreciating the other classes, he truly says that they "are the backbone of any nation." That is true. He says that Rome perished from want of them. Under the Empire there were the noble and rich landowners on the one hand, and on the other slaves. The want of Middle Class salt ruined the state. That is true enough, and yet foolish people are always girding at them, as if they were a class of useless bloodsuckers, contributing nothing to the greatness of the commonwealth. Our Lord praises the two-talented man. Why, then, is he always being depreciated? We are always hearing discussions on the relation of "the mass of people between the capital to labour, of Five Talents to One Talent, why never, or hardly ever, the relations of the others to the man of two talents? As Mr. Corbin says, Capitalists and Trades unionists talk as if they alone existed." But the people of two talents are "the public," the huge mass that is never heard of; that doesn't strike, but takes its suffering manfully when troubles and shortages come, that doesn't organise, doesn't shout, but just goes on year by year, using its two talents honestly and faithfully, to the best of its ability. It is "the huge army of clerks, shopkeepers and their assistants, dealers and merchants and their helpers, lawyers and doctors, and the army of teachers, and marine officers, and all the thousands of women and children dependent on them." "This is the huge speechless army of the men of two talents," As Mr. Corbin says, "These were the people, who froze with cold in the colliers' strike of 1920 and 1921, not the others. The man of two talents was wearing the same suit in 1918 after the war, that he wore in 1914." True. What with war-profits and big wages they had struck for, the capitalists and labour people had all got new suits. They rode in cars; the man of two talents trudged on foot to his office. Yet, really, the middle classes are not a class, as the others are. They are found in all classes. They are the nation. They are too scattered to strike, and so they suffer and plod on, with the magnificent privilege of subscribing to soup kitchens when the other two classes get at loggerheads.

SQUEEZED OUT.

Now there seems to be general agreement that the Middle-Classes are being squeezed out. According to Mr. Gompers, if Five and One Talent quarrel, Mr. Two Talent had no rights at all. It he freezes and starves, let him. When wages go up for the labourers, the cost is passed on by Mr. Five Talents to Mr. Two Talents to pay them. The Middle Classes suffered most in the war. Their regular salaries did not go up. A typical case of men of two talents is that of curates and the mass of Nonconformist ministers in England during the war. How did they live and bring up families? It was a triumph of thrift and self-denial, and poverty borne in silence for Christ's sake, that must have caught the eye of their Lord in heaven, but failed to catch the eye of Five and One Talent on earth. One thing that is destroying the Middle Classes is that everything is being done for the others, but little for them. Mr. Corbin tells of a head clerk in New York, who was thrown out of work. Unable to get a position like the one he had lost, he went and took rooms with an Irish labourer, and went and worked at street work. He was a bit stiff at first, but soon got into it, and then everything was easy for him. As a labourer, he found endless things freely done for him; free education, free Maternity ward for his wife, free clinics, and so on. And all mostly paid for by the Middle Class he had left.

SI MONUMENTUM QUAERIS.

Now let us consider the effects of the elimination of the good man with two talents. First it is a serious thing for the nation in many ways. Take a journey round Great Britain You pass through splendid city after splendid city and each one of them is a monument to the honesty, the labour, the enterprise, the solidity of the man of two talents. London itself, Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, Glasgow; who have made them; all suggest Middle Class names. Bradford the Salts, Manchester the Rylands, Sheffield, the Mappins, Newcastle the Armstrongs, and so on. So it is in America. The business men of these cities, not the nobles, have made them what they are. Take eminent men. In what families have they been born? Most of them in the homes of the men of two talents: Darwin's father was a doctor, Tennyson's a clergyman, Stevenson's a lighthouse builder, Gladstone's a merchant, Longfellow's a lawyer, Johnson's a bookseller, Milton's a scrivener, Newton's a farmer. This is the reward Middle Class parents have for making more sacrifices for the education of their children than any other class. Take public benefactors. In the United States and in Canada the Middle Classes have been lavish in public beneficence, as in the case of the Stanford University. In Great Britain the titled classes, all of whom have been educated at University, have done nothing for them. And while the same classes have drawn large revenues from the cities, it has been the men of the Middle Classes, who have given the great public institutions; as the great Rylands Library at Manchester, the Mappin Art Gallery at Sheffield. And, if we look back on history, we see that the men of two talents have been the champions of public rights. They fought the battle against hereditary privilege, ending in the Reform Bill; they fought for religious and civil liberty. This men of one talent often forget.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Finally, we come to the religious life of our countries. No doubt all sections have adorned it by their character and service, but it has always struck me that the men of two talents, the Middle Classes, have been the most loyal to the Saviour and His Gospel. It is true of every church. The Church of England has most of the British nobility among its members. But, as far as I have ever seen, they do not form a large number of its workers and large givers. Its hosts of churchwardens and Sunday School teachers and workers are of the Middle Class. Nor are the working classes numerous. Indeed it is generally admitted that the working classes have left the churches. And if this is true of the Church of England, it is still more true of the Nonconformist churches. Their membership, their officers and officials, their workers and givers, their local preachers, their steady faithful people, who are the backbone of the church are mostly men of two talents. Turn to the missionary field. Pass your eye down the lists of men and women in remote, lonely and even dangerous places. you don't find many earls and viscounts among them. No. Nor many rich men. No. They came mostly from the Middle class. Cast your eye down the subscription lists of the great missionary and other great religious societies that support the workers in the field, send Bibles out in five hundred languages, and doctors for hospitals in heathen lands, you will find that they are made up of medium subscriptions, such as five shillings to five pounds. If we pursue this line of inquiry we shall find ourselves wondering, what, if the Men of Two Talents, are squeezed out, will become of the kingdom of God on earth.

LESSONS IN GOLF

VII.—Concerning Grips

(By Harry Vardon—Six Times Open Champion)

Early in this series of lessons, I said that where a player's manner of gripping the club has possibilities of producing the desired results and is more or less ingrained in his golfing constitution, I do not believe in altering it.

At the same time, it happens frequently that a bad grip is the cause of nearly all the adversity that a person may suffer on the links. Where his shots are repeatedly going wrong and he never seems to make much progress, a change of grip often promotes better results.

It is the first point that an instructor considers in connexion with the methods of his pupil, and sometimes it is absolutely necessary to suggest an alteration if the player is to advance at the game.

AN AWKWARD PROBLEM.

A new manner of holding the club is always in the nature of an awkward problem to the individual concerned. He has cultivated a habit, and to make a fresh habit take the place of an old one is, at the outset, invariably difficult.

I can assure the reader from a long experience, however, that the natural and easy grips are not the best for golf. Whichever principle the player may select, the mastering of it will usually cost him a little patient endeavour. The hands must work together in perfect unison, and to make them do this requires forethought and practice.

Among the multitudes of club golfers, the grip most often seen is that in which the [illegible] is under the shaft, [illegible] deeply in the palm [illegible]. The back of the left hand more or less faces the line of [illegible]. is the simple kind of grip might come naturally to a [illegible] and a few geniuses have [illegible] success of it.

For the great majority, however, it is unquestionably [illegible]. The chances against the hands working together as they should do are enormous when the learner adopts this system. If he is satisfied with his golfing [illegible] I would advise him to [illegible] overlapping grip, [illegible] though it may seem in the early stages of his experiments [illegible] with it.

HOW TO OVERLAP.

It may be that he has already tried it and given it up because he could not get on with it Many people have done that, and in the majority of instances, the reason has been a misunderstanding of the true principles of the overlapping grip.

It is generally realized that the prominent features of this grip are to have the right thumb resting on the left thumb and the little finger of the right hand resting on the forefinger of left—thus creating the overlapping effect. But numerous players appear to think that if they do these two things, the rest can be left to look after itself, whereas they have merely observed elementary — although conspicuous — points in the principle and may have violated others that are essential to the success of the scheme.

For instance, it is possible to overlap in the manner described and still exercise what really amounts to a palm grip. If the backs of the hands are so disposed that they are inclining towards the under-part of the shaft, not actually under it but tending that way, the club will be held in the palm.

I am convinced that the best grip for golf is that which appeals to one as being a finger-grip exercised with the thumbs and fingers; the palms not actually pressing on the shaft at all during the swing unless they do so involuntarily at the impact. To promote this finger-hold, the backs of the hands should be inclined in a very slight degree upwards rather than downwards, which would tend towards putting them under the shaft. Only in an exceedingly small measure should they be tilted towards the over-the-shaft position; just sufficient to keep the palms free from the shaft.

This is as important a detail of the overlapping method as any, but it is frequently ignored. To obtain the correct position, take the club in the left hand, and turn the wrist slightly so that you can see the knuckles of that hand. The natural result of this movement will be to make the thumb go round the shaft. But you do not want it round the club. You want it on top of the shaft; straight down the top of the shaft. So bring it back and place it there. This may seem rather awkward at first, but custom will soon make it easy, and it is an indispensable condition of the grip.

The other fingers take their positions naturally. We now have the left hand properly arranged.

THINGS SEEN AND UNSEEN.

The first thing to do with the right hand is to see that its thumb rests solidly on the left thumb—well over it, so that the fleshy part near the base covers the bottom of the left thumb and leaves only the end of the latter exposed to view.

The first three fingers of the right hand hold the shaft, and the little finger of the right hand presses on the forefinger of the left. Assuming that you have observed the details herein indicated, two interesting circumstances present themselves if you examine your grip by looking down at it when in the act of addressing the ball.

The thumb and forefinger of each hand form a V down the shaft. None of the other fingers of either hand can be seen, because the slight upward tilt of the backs of the hands has hidden those fingers from view.

If you can see the tops of the fingers of the left hand, then that hand is a little too much inclined to be under the shaft. Draw it

A CONTROLLED SHOT.

...The back spin iron shot is in ... a controlled shot. It is ...ed with the object of ...abling the player to hit the ball ... a certain area, and make it ...op within a few yards of where ... alights.

...Here let me remark that it is ... principle adopted by all good ...rofessional golfers with every ...nd of iron club—even very often ...ith the niblick for bunker shots ...and certainly by the most ac- ...mplished amateurs. There are ...me players who execute their ...rives and other wooden club ...ots, as well as their iron strokes, ...this manner, although in the ...se of the full drive, most of us ... not mind how much run there ... on the ball, because we are out ...r all the distance we can obtain, ... long as we can obtain it in ... straight line.

...Those who practise the back- ...in shot with all their clubs do ... because they find it so fas- ...nating and dependable that they ...n never leave it alone.

...Naturally, it calls for a dis- ...active method of execution. We ...ill assume that the player is ...ying it with a cleek or a driving ...on, which, by the way, should ...ve a slight degree of left on it ...cause any shot with a straight ...ced iron is so difficult as to be ...itable only for a person very ...nerously endowed with golfing ...ility.

...The ball must be addressed with ...e hands slightly in front of it—...most, if not quite, an inch in ...ont of it. That is to say, the ...aft is inclined in a very small ...gree towards the line of play; ...is leaning forward a little, so ...at the club-face, too, is tilted ...rward towards the ball.

WHERE THE WEIGHT MUST BE.

...So much for the manner of ...ddress for the promotion of the ...st results. The player needs to ...and nearer to the ball, and swing in a more upright way, than for the ordinary lofted iron-shot; he needs to stand well over his work, so as to secure control over the ball. Consequently, his cleek or driving iron for this back-spin stroke can be quite two inches shorter than the club of the same nomenclature which he uses for the simple iron shot. He is now standing nearer to the ball, and therefore more over it, so that a rather shorter shafted club is an advantage.

Now we come to the most important detail of all. During the address, and throughout the swing, the bulk of the weight of the body must be on the left leg. The player must be conscious of the fact when he is learning the shot that most of his weight is in front of the ball. An easy stance, which enables him to preserve his balance without the slightest risk of losing it, is essential. But while, to secure this effect, he will permit a slight pressure—sufficient to beget confidence and security—on the right leg, he must have the feeling that most of the weight is on the left.

Thus disposed during the address, the player should maintain the same distribution of weight throught the swing—always forward. As a result, he will pivot less at the hips than for an ordinary stroke.

He should aim at the middle of the back of the ball—not the ground immediately behind the ball.

He will thus make the impact the instant before the club-head reaches the bottom of the arc of the swing, so that the club-head will shave off the grass just in front of where the ball has lain.

This is the essence of the stroke—to stand with the weight forward, and hit down on to the back of the ball instead of behind it.

POULTRY RAISING IN CHINA

Methods in China and America Compared: Sugestion that British Interests Should Improve Quality of Eggs Handled for Export

By a Correspondent in America.

Some years ago I was travelling on the Tsinpu Railway with an American and an Australian as companions. When we were passing through the egg-raising districts of Anhui, my Australian friend, noticing a whole junkload of eggs being poled down one of the canals, exclaimed.

"Look at the eggs! Eggs!! More eggs than you can shake a stick at!" (I never could understand this stick-shaking accomplishment of the Australians.)

But the Americam was unmoved. He was a Californian, he told us. He came from the place where they really raised eggs, and you should see, and you should do this or that—and if you did you would not be inpressed with the small industry in Anhui. Little did I think the time would ever come for me to see the egg regions in California to which he then so proudly referred us. But it did come. I have, as a matter of fact, just returned from a trip to a place in Northern California called Petaluma, which claims to be the veritably undisputed home of the hen. Indeed, one would really think this to be the case had he not been in Anhui, Hunan and other of the Yangtze provinces, where eggs are produced in remarkable bulk. Whereover one looked in Petaluma he saw closely-herded flocks of hens, and amid all the cackling it was hard to think. Eggs, eggs—everywhere eggs, and running to as high as fifty cents per dozen, American gold!

CHINA'S EGG PRODUCTION.

I was sufficiently interested when I got home to look up statistics of the volume of eggs and products of the egg that are exported from China to foreign countries, and I got the same sort of jolt that the average "North China" reader would get if he were to do the same thing. I was astounded to find that since the year of the Revolution of 1911 China's contribution of eggs to the world has risen from considerably less than five million taels' worth to nearly thirty million taels' worth. I wonder how many Shanghai people would have been able to tell me that without first having looked it up? In 1912, so my reference shows me, eggs and egg products—that is, albumen and yolk, fresh, preserved and frozen eggs—were sold by China abroad to the tune of Hk. Tls. 4.6 millions, which by 1922 had risen to the extremely creditable total of Hk. Tls. 29.8 million. I do not know the output annually from Petaluma, but I would hazard a guess that certain collecting districts in the Yangtze Valley, such as Tsinghiangpu, for example, would rank her pretty close.

But what a difference in appearance and quality. I wonder whether there are any old Singaporeans in the China ports who will remember eating any number of eggs from a dozen upwards at one sitting at a curious institution of the colony in those days called the "egg club." What the club existed for none of us used to care; all we knew and cared about was that the Chinese in charge of the club supplied unlimited quantities of eggs. I daresay that there are men in Singapore at the present day who are still taking similar risks—for most of those eggs could not by any stretch of human imagination be called fresh—and eating many more than a dozen eggs at a sitting, if the club has not closed down. No, those eggs, and the average China egg, cannot stand comparison for quality and appearance with the Petaluma variety.

And as I strolled round the poultry farms there I thought that it would surely be a fine investment for those interested in the China egg trade (and there are very few in the monopoly) systematically to undertake, by methods that have proved profitable in Petaluma, a general improvement in the egg produced by the hen and the duck in the supplying districts in China. Improve the quality of the commodity, and you improve the price abroad. Great Britain takes by far the greater bulk of these eggs and egg products from China, the trade being almost entirely in British hands, and an opportunity is presented, therefore, for the Briton in China to buckle down and improve a trade which has grown from absolutely nothing a couple of decades ago to the proportions above quoted.

COMPARISON OF PRICES.

I suppose that you are paying about 18 to 25 cents a dozen for eggs which you buy through your cooks in Shanghai to-day. Eggs in the San Francisco markets are selling about 39 cents gold, and in the winter the price sometimes runs as high as 70 cents and higher. I have bought in inland cities and small towns in China as low as one and a half cash apiece, but that was before the days when the paid collectors of the foreign hongs in the trade appeared on the scene to force up prices.

Two factors that weigh heavily in Petaluma poultry farms, which scarcely enter into computation at all in China, are nearness to markets, and available supply and net cost of feed. Petaluma has developed phenomenally as an egg district principally because farmers have gone into the raising on a strictly scientific basis, and because the city is situated near to important consuming markets like San Francisco and other large towns in Northern California, and also because there is efficient transportation, while grain can be purchased from harvest fields near by at lowest wholesale prices. So far as the foreigner who is conducting the business in China is concerned, however, he has no cause to worry over these factors, as he is not at all interested in the domestic markets and is buying, grading and packing and preparing eggs and egg products purely and simply for export abroad. The matter of feed is generally the raiser's affair, transportation does not give any concern to the foreign merchant, and all that he has to worry over is the price he can buy eggs at, with attendant regard to fluctuations of native exchange. Sounds simple, but the trade undoubtedly has its worries like all others. In my time in China this trade was conducted roughly as follows—all the work was done in the collecting areas by accredited Chinese compradores, who collected the eggs from the small supplying farmstead and delivered the cargo to the door of the warehouse or handling station, and the product was paid for at so much a picul either before or after grading had been done, the foreigner paying through these Chinese compradores, sometimes in silver dollars or sycee and sometimes in native cash at the rate of the day. What a gigantic graft for the Chinese, the go-between for the supplier and the exporter! As the trade increased tremendous strides were made by the farmers who supplied the eggs in relation to quantity, but I question whether the quality has been stressed as it might have been. I am of the opinion that if this egg trade were systematically developed under foreign supervision China would very soon become the greatest egg producing country in the world.

SIZE OF A MODERN FARM.

In this connexion it may be of interest to state that I found at Petaluma the size of the average poultry farm is from five to 20 acres. A ten-acre farm can accommodate from two to three thousand adult fowls and allow for the growing of green feed and young stock to maintain the adult flock. As high as a thousand or more fowls per acre are kept on some commercial farms, but not more than 500 per acre is greatly to be preferred if the land is to be kept free from contamination, the stock in continued good health and a most permanent success secured. Too great crowding is unprofitable. I was informed, I admit to my surprise, that poultry raising requires good farming land, because the green feed, at least, must be grown and because forage crops should also be raised as much as possible in the poultry yards if the soil is to be kept sweet and free from disease spreading contamination.

I noticed also that the value of resting the land from poultry and sowing to green crops—every few months, I understand—is so well recognized that the use of double "yards" for each pen of fowls is becoming more general.

Alkali land and barren hillsides are entirely unsuitable for poultry raising. Fowls will do well on practically any well drained agricultural soil. Light sandy and gravelly loams are preferred to the heavier soil types because of a more rapid drainage of surface water and the drying of the surface soil. For example, on sandy soils with good underdrainage, heavy rain will sink into the ground about as fast as it falls, the surface will be dry enough for fowls to use the yards soon after rain ceases, and such soils do not become sticky when moist. Sticky soil surfaces adhere, of course, to the feet of the fowls; they track this into the nests, and then the trouble commences.

What Petaluma has done at least a hundred places within a hundred miles from the banks of the Lower Yangtze could do, and those great cold storage plants at Nanking, Hankow and other places could become the greatest shipping points of the best eggs in the world. They may be the biggest handlers of eggs and egg products in the world to-day, for aught I know. What I want to stress is that the quality of the China egg might well be improved in appearance and size.

THE HILLTOP

To-day, on grey and silver wing,
The sun went early westering.
Sapphires and emeralds gleamed again
On grassy mound, in rutted lane.

The unclad willows, graceful-limbed,
Leaned where the shining river brimmed,
And, like a sudden shaft of blue,
The kingfisher went darting through.

Then how the clear sky seemed to call!
And purple hills perpetual.
Lured my slow feet till, stair by stair,
I clambered to the cleaner air.

And as the keen insistent wind
Left the warm valley far behind,
Something within me groped afar
Towards, then past, the evening star.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

On one occasion R. L. Stevenson made an interesting confession to Lloyd Osborne. "I am not a man of any unusual talent, Lloyd," said he. "I start on a line with many members of the race, my success has been due to my really remarkable industry—to the capacity to put [illegible] to the extreme end. What a man [illegible] to accomplish with ordinary gifts and decent opportunities, if only he has the energy to stick to his task! Everybody knows it; it's a commonplace, and yet how rare it is to find anybody doing it—I mean to the uttermost as I did. What genius I had was for work!"

A volume of "Essays in Early Christian History," by Dr. E. T. Merrill, Professor of Latin in the University of Chicago, will be published shortly by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. It is believed that this book will take rank as a cardinal contribution to the history of the circumstances surrounding Christian origins. It is marked by high critical scholarship; it is written in an eminently lucid and attractive style, and it is entirely free from the prejudices of both the ecclesiastical and the anti-ecclesiastical mind. An essay which may be expected to attract particular attention treats of the problem of St. Peter's residence in Rome, and effectively disposes of the fundamental Roman Catholic claim that the Apostle was the first Bishop and founder of the Roman Church. In connexion with this claim Professor Merrill's conclusion is that "the historical base is not rock, but incoherent sand."

We all know by this time that Mr. "Richard Dehan," who wrote "The Dope Doctor," is a lady, Mrs. Clotilde Graves. She has just finished another story with the pretty title, "The Pipers of the Market Place." It concerns a very strapping and gifted heroine called Marvina, who is comparable to such famous heroines as Maggie Tulliver, Rhoda Fleming, and Mercy of Charles Reade's "Griffith Gaunt." She is so big, so brave, so beautiful, so forthright, that she almost fills the whole of "The Pipers of the Market Place."

Mr. Stephen Graham, the well-known traveller and student of life, must have had a theme after his own heart when he was writing "In Quest of El Dorado," which will be ready in March. When he set out on this new venture his idea was "to make a sentimental journey and trail an idea across the world." He followed in the footsteps of Columbus and all the explorers who sought the New World. He takes us first to Spain, whence the early seekers of El Dorado embarked. From Cadiz, like Columbus before him, he sailed on a Spanish ship and followed the explorers' keels over the waters to Porto Rico, Haiti, Cuba, San Salvador (the first land sighted by Columbus). He visited Panama, climbed a peak in Darien, and saw the Pacific for the first time as Balboa saw it. We are invited to follow the fantastic adventures of Coronado to the Seven Cities of Cibola and the Shalees Dance at the "centre of the earth." We visit Mexico, following the historical track of Cortes, and finish this quest of El Dorado at the ancient pyramids of the Anahuac plateau and the ruins of Mitla near the border of British Honduras.

We have, perhaps, no English district so rich in associations with men and women as the Thames Valley between London and Windsor. In our own day it has had associations with Meredith, Swinburne, De Morgan, and Blackmore, who had a market garden at Twickenham. Mr. Gordon S. [illegible] has made a careful study of the Thames Valley as thus indicated, in order to write a book entitled "The Author's Thames," which Cecil Palmer is to publish before long.

DOWN DEVON WAY

The Hon. John W. Fortescue, the distinguished historian of the British Army, has in "My Native Devon" (Macmillan. 10s. 6d.) written a book of considerable charm, containing sketches of [illegible] with delicious scraps of [illegible] like the following account of a casual meeting between a cavalry officer, named Raymond, home on leave, and Jimmy, a small boy of the village:

"You'm to school, I reckon, Jimmy. Do you like schooling?"

"No," answered Jimmy, with decision. "Vather saith as there's too much schooling nowadays, both for boys and maids. Maids be growing tu vine to wash their own shimazes," he added oracularly, "so vather saith."

"Have you any sisters, Jimmy? Do they wash their own chemises?" went on Raymond.

"Tu," replied Jimmy, "Anne and Mary. They'm too small to wash yet, but I reckon they will."

There is a perfectly done portrait of a family butler of the old school, who brewed beer. When the foxhounds met at his house he was in his element. "He was proud of recording that at one lawn-meet the guests consumed 93 quarts of small beer and 22 of ale, which he took as a high compliment to himself."

A TRAVEL RECORD

24,000 miles in South America.
27,000 miles in Africa.
20,000 miles in Alaska and Yukon.
100,000 miles in the Southern Seas.

The above is not a complete record of the journeys of Mrs. Charlotte Cameron, O.B.E., F.R.G.S., the author of "Wanderings in South-Eastern Seas" (T. Fisher Unwin, 15s.), but it is sufficient to indicate the strength of her publisher's claim that she has the greatest travel record of any woman. Her pages bear the stamp of one who has a wide experience as a writer as well as a traveller, for this is the latest of several books. One is tempted to quote freely—there are any number of titbits. For instance, the story of the English traveller who asked a Chinese to explain the custom of his countrymen of putting false money into a coffin in order to propitiate the gods. The reply was: "He dead, he no savee whether good or bad coin. As the samee, you put flowers on grave—he no smell."

Mrs. Cameron gives a rather surprising description of the home of the wife of a native chief in Pango, American Samoa:—

I went in and sat in a yellow-painted rocking chair, truly American. On the floor were plaited mats. The beds, covered with thin tapa matting, looking like huge divans, stood at one end of the home; a sewing-machine and gramophone spoke of up-to-dateness. The other part of the room must have been the culinary department, for here were an ice-chest and a wire-screened cupboard, various cooking utensils completing the furniture.

A 1924 GUIDE FOR ADVERTISERS

The 1924 edition of the Newspaper Press Directory is just to hand. The Directory has been appearing year by year since 1846, and can claim to have made newspaper and advertising history. The new edition includes a complete record of the newspapers, magazines and trade publications of the Empire, together with those of the principal foreign countries with which British traders do business.

The directory has established for itself a reputation of present an extremely much valuable information and statistics in respect to Inter-Imperial trade. In this issue, therefore, arising from the Imperial Conference of 1923, the publishers have pleasure in presenting an article entitled "Australia and Empire Development," by the Prime Minister of Australia, the Rt. Hon. S. M. Bruce, and also one entitled "New Zealand and Enpire Trade, by the Hon. Sir James Allen, High Commissioner for New Zealand. An article entitled "Britain's Export Trade" deals with the subject from a board of Trade point of view, and indicates some of the activities of this Department in the interest of British manufacturers. An informative article, "Inter Imperial," discusses in detail the general conditions and prospects on improved trade within the British Empire. Immediately preceding the gazetteer of each country is a review of the trade of that country, with classified lists of tariffs, duties, etc., showing the preference given to British goods where operative. It is doubtful if the whole range of trade information can be found so complete and comprehensive in any other one volume.

The Newspaper Press Directory is compiled and published by Messrs. C. Mitchell & Co., Ld., 1 Snow Hill, London, E.C. 1, and will be sent post free for 5/- (abroad 6/6). It contains over 650 pages, and is a wonderful five shillings' worth for the advertiser, the agent, and the journalist.

AUCTION BRIDGE

The Laws of Auction Bridge. As revised and adopted by the Committee of the Portland Club, January 1, 1924. De la Rue. 2s. 6d.

The revised laws are slightly shorter than the old ones and a good deal less ambiguous. The changes that have been made are not important, but the introduction of a penalty of 50 points for "looking at the last trick" is an interesting innovation which may do a good deal directly and indirectly to get rid of that rather tiresome laxity with which the game is often played outside the regular clubs. It is to be hoped that this and other minor penalties will be strictly enforced. Players often hesitate, especially when their opponents are their guests or their hosts, to exact penalties for careless breaches of the laws which do not actually affect the play of the hand. This is a mistaken indulgence. The careless player is a nuisance, and it is to his own interest, as well as to that of the game, that he should always be brought to book for his lapses. It would be a good thing if players read the Laws more often than they do; very few can do so at any time without being reminded of something that they have forgotten.

THE CHINESE STAFF OF LIFE

Rice. By Edwin Bingham Copeland, Professor of Plant Physiology and Dean of the College of Agriculture retired, University of the Philippines, author of "The Coconut." With Plates in Colour and other Illustrations. 8vo.

Professor Copeland points out that rice, "the world's greatest crop," has never before been the subject of book treatment in any Western language—a fact which gives special importance to the publication of this volume. It is a practical book for the grower and the merchant, as well as a text-book for the student, for the author has tried wherever possible to explain the details of field practice by their physiological effects, and he never loses sight of the general principle that all practice, and all advice, must be judged by business considerations. Separate chapters are devoted to the botany of rice; climate, soil, and water; diseases and pests; seed and varieties of rice; rice in the United States; rice in the Philippines; rice in other lands; the uses of rice; with a final chapter of general conclusions. The book is well illustrated and comes before the public as the work of a scientific expert who, as Professor of Plant Physiology in the University of the Philippines, has had special opportunities of studying the subject.

BRITAIN AND AMERICA

The Contrast. By Hilaire Belloc. (Arrowsmith. 12s. 6d. net.)

British American Relations. By J. D. Whelpley. (Grant Richards. 14s. net.)

The two books to be considered here are of rather more than usual interest in their category. Working towards approximately the same end, the authors have written from exactly opposite points of view. The opposition does not arise from the fact that one book is by an Englishman (the argument that Mr. Belloc is a Frenchman is in the present instance largely academic) and the other by an American. The difference lies more in type of mind and motive. The fact is that there are two schools of thought as to the methods to be pursued in accomplishing an entente, or natural and sympathetic understanding between the two peoples. Both schools are well defined; both are partly right; and both err in their own directions. Mr. Belloc belongs to the one which says that America is now such an essentially foreign country that the only way we shall be able to get on with her is to treat her as a foreign country and to stop thinking of her as somehow English and a cousin with family loyalties. Mr. Whelpley, on the other hand, holds the more traditional view that the fundamental similarities are greater than the differences and insists that mutual explanations can effect and are in fact effecting a diminution of the superficial misunderstanding which has so often tended to undermine the basic sympathies of the two peoples in the past. Mr. Belloc talks in the manner of the European politician; Mr. Whelpley sounds more like the plain but understanding man of the people.

Mr. Belloc's book is brilliant, alarmist, and often misleading. The last adjective is justified because so many of Mr. Belloc's statements are inaccurate and superficial. Not that they are intentionally so, but rather inevitably, for it is practically impossible for one man to know and understand two countries equally and thoroughly well when one of them is his own. Moreover, "The Contrast," of course, contains all the good old Belloc phobias and complexes—the Jews, the Catholics, the Army, Monarchy, etc. Then, too, the theme of contrast has been greatly exaggerated, doubtless from well-intentioned propagandist motives. It will be seen, therefore, that this book should be read with extreme caution and should not be accepted as gospel by the ardent uninitiate. Although Mr. Belloc's point of view is not new (younger American writers have often expressed it) it may appear so to orthodox minds. There is nevertheless something to be said for it, and it should not be peremptorily dismissed by those whose affections are so strong as sometimes to cloud their vision.

Mr. Whelpley's book, as indicated, is of a very different character. By no means brilliant in the sense that Mr. Belloc's book is brilliant, it is nevertheless and fundamentally more sound. As far as it goes and it goes much further than "The Contrast"—it is thorough, documented, based on fact and common sense, good-tempered, and honest. The fact that Mr. Whelpley repeats himself a good deal and misses no opportunity to split an infinitive should not prejudice the reader against his matter and his conclusions. He is neither flawless nor unprejudiced. He errs, moreover, on the side of optimism. But on the whole there is much more to be said for his views than for Mr. Belloc's. He seldom engages in meretricious generalizations, but keeps to attested facts and faces logical difficulties rather than avoiding them. In fact, the courage and frankness with which he faces grave problems are the qualities which specially recommend his work. He traces the history of British-American relations up to the present day, discusses the influences as he sees them at work promoting or inhibiting understanding, and points cautiously to the future.

If the reader can be prevailed upon to read both of these books, he will gain a considerable understanding of the problems involved in a relation which must affect every one of us. If he can read but one, let him read "British-American Relations." He will get less fireworks at his entertainment, but more food.—Joseph Brewer in the "Spectator."

EUROPE'S LITEARY TREASURES

Morgan Library at Disposal of Scholars and Students

Mr. John Pierpont Morgan recently announced that as a memorial to his late father, Mr. Pierpont Morgan, the great financier and collector, he has made a gift of the great Morgan library in New York (valued at between seven million and twelve million dollars) for the use of scholars from all parts of the world.

The library which consists of 25,000 books and manuscripts, etc., is to be turned over to a board of trustees, to be entrusted with its maintenance, and with the princely gift goes the building which contains it and the grounds, valued at $8,000,000.

The terms of the gift explain that the use of the library must be confined to scholars and students, and will not be available to the general public owing to the fragility of the books and manuscripts.

SOME OF THE TREASURES.

The collection was probably the most splendid private one in the world. Here is a short list of a few of the treasures:

The Ashburnham Gospels.
The Golden Gospels of Henry VII.
Many Caxtons.
Rare Byron Manuscripts.
Blake's drawings for the "Book of Job."
Originals of Horace Walpole's Letters.
The Manuscript of Keats's "Endymion."
Shelley's Notebook.
The Manuscript of "A Christmas Carol."
Ten volumes of Dickens's Letters.
Letters of St. Francis de Sales, and other Saints.
Many originals of Burns's poems.
Manuscripts of Dr. Johnson.
The earliest existing letter of Napoleon.
Sir Walter Scott's diary and MSS. of some of his novels.
The MS. of "Vanity Fair."

The "Golden Gospels" was given to Henry VII by Pope Leo X., and the binding is supposed to have been designed by Holbein. The Gospels are inscribed on purple vellum in letters of burnished gold. The writing was most probably done by an Anglo-Saxon scribe for the Archbishop of York about A.D. 670.

Among other treasures are several shelves of Aldines and Elzevirs; books which have belonged to Kings and Queens, including one bound for Henry VII. and Catherine of Aragon; Elizabethan and Jacobean first edition; and Chaldean, Assyrian, and Babylonian tablets.

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

MRS. MILTON PURDY

Her Views on Woman's Suffrage

By Elizabeth Pepys.

"Why not talk about something really interesting?" was the modest way in which Mrs. Milton D. Purdy, wife of the newly appointed Judge of the U. S. Court for China, smilingly parried the efforts of our representative to interview her. No matter how inquisitive we tried to be, nor how personal our interest we found the dialogue adroitly directed to the general themes of China, politics, art or music, until we discovered that we had met a woman with a curious distaste for talking about herself. Well informed on all current topics, she turned the conversation down so many alluring byways that it was impossible to keep it to what should have been its central theme—herself.

With great determination, however, I returned to the charge, urging, "It has been said that you are an able and enthusiastic club woman."

"Now, who could have started that report?" sighed Mrs. Purdy, shaking her head deprecatingly, "At one time I belonged to a number of clubs, but I was only a worker in them, not one of the leaders." By that very admission, had she but realized it, she ranked herself as a genuine club woman, working for the common good and not for individual honours, which have, nevertheless, been forced upon her. But this is a digression, for Mrs. Purdy continued: "I became so much interested in the question of suffrage and the work of the Association that it absorbed all my energies and I resigned from my other activities. Since the granting of the suffrage to women I have retained my interest in the League of Women Voters, that unpartisan (no, not non-partisan) organization and I believe it is doing a very valuable work.

POLITICAL EDUCATION.

"The schools of political education which have been organized since the suffrage Amendment was passed have been tremendously useful. In Minnesota no less than 80 schools were organized the summer after the Amendment was passed in small country towns and women came from the farming countries around for perhaps a week's intensive course in citizenship, its duties and privileges. The Democratic and Republican women worked on practically the same lines and the result has been that women are making a much more intelligent interest in the affairs of their country.

"Not only that, but their enthusiasm has spread to their husbands as well and the table talk the children hear is far more educative so that they will grow up in an atmosphere conducive to open-minded citizenship. Yes, I'm an enthusiast on this subject.

"The Chinese women? I'm not prepared to say anything on that score but I look forward with interest to learning how they are working out their own problems as well as finding out how American women in the Orient keep in touch with political matters at home."

CHITS WE SHOULD LIKE TO SEND

To All Theatre Managers

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Gentlemen,—I have often wondered whether you read the newspapers, and have concluded that perhaps your vision is like mine, selective, and that your blind spot may cover things you do not wish to see. Pardon me, therefore, if I touch a sore spot in bringing to your notice the fact that the prompt comers to the theatre get rather annoyed at being walked over by the unco' late who will not even sit or stand in the rear until the scene is over. It really is rather horrid to miss the whole first act through no fault of one's own. I quite understand how you may have overlooked this fact and feel sure that now I have brought it to your attention you will correct this abuse at once, since it is so patently within your power. That's that.

And just one more thing, or at most two. Could you, without too much inconvenience, replace all squeaky or otherwise ill-mannered chairs in the auditorium so that enjoyment of beautiful music need not be marred by the creaking chairs of those who are unfortunately not entirely spellbound by the sweet strains discoursed? I might suggest a professional seat tester, to try out the chairs before each performance. Even a little oiling would help.

QUIET PROGRAMMES.

The last favour is that you print the programmes on non-rattling paper. It may not be easy to find non-rustling mediums, but I think it might be done. Couldn't you get some efficiency expert to eliminate the noise and this waste product to the Chinese theatres, or save it up until applause was needed? It has been estimated that the amount of rattling wasted during the course of a season's concerts would be sufficient for the imitation of a stormy night at sea or the gale that almost blows the Old Homestead down, if it could be properly conserved.

Trusting that you will find it possible to act upon these simple suggestions, I remain, as always.

THE PERFECTING TRIFLE

It is the Little Things that Count —Specially in Clothes

Looking back, a long way back, upon my childhood I seem to hear the sound of many voices, speaking in the accents of governesses, aunts, grandmothers and mother: "Remember, my dear, it is the little things that make the difference." The sayings of relatives and intimates are easy to disregard until the hard-earned experience of later years brings you up with the thought, "Why, that was what they were always telling me," and then you wish you had believed your elders a little sooner.

For it is the same thing that the modistes and the fashion magazines are dinning into our ears again, the dictum that we strive unsuccessfully to impress upon our Chinese tailors—"Be careful of details." Parenthetically I might remark that to me employing Chinese tailors seems only a wilder form of gambling. Not being able to demonstrate convincingly the effect I desire obtained, the results are problematic. If we lose we squander materials as well as the cost of making; but if we win (and stranger things have happened), Oh! the mad exultation.

It is the "little more and how much it means" particularly in dealing with tailored suits. One might expect the tailored vogue to remain stationary, and so perhaps it does, except for the details—ah, those little details that spoil the effect! The new shoulders, I understand, are an example. You must not have a drop-shoulder nor yet a normal armhole, if you wish anything highly distinctive just a cross between the two. This gives a slightly elongated effect. The unbelted frock, too, calls for looseness under the arm, a very necessary point, since the aim is to give the appearance of slim hips by increasing the width at the shoulders and under the arms.

The girdle, whether seen or not, must always influence the gown—that is, whether only a part of it appear in the disposition of the gathers over the hip, as a buckle, or the heading of the apron panel, there must be something to reassure one that it was not overlooked in designing the frock.

HOUSEBOAT GLIMPSES

Scene I.—Morning by the Canal.

By Elizabeth Pepys.

A houseboat moored in a quiet inlet off the main canal, in the shade of a grove of elm trees, fluttered by soft breezes. To the right at the water's edge a wooden fence with barred gateway leading into a grave-yard, granite-guarded. Weeping willows droop their amber-green fronds against this background, and pensively regard their reflexions in the quiet water at the foot of the granite steps. To the left, beyond the grove, an impressive widow's pailou.

Over the deck of the houseboat an awning is stretched beneath that a table but recently deserted, for the fragrance of bacon still lingers on the fresh morning air. The Shanghai houseboy moves about in immaculate white amongst the blue-garbed boatmen. Across the canal stretch wide fields of golden rape blossoms, banded with strips and squares of mauve clover, while the exquisite perfume of the bean blossoms are wafted on the light breezes.

SCENE 2.—WOODS AND MEADOWS.

Across the gang plank and out upon the dewy grass file the campers, ready for a long tramp, the men courting sunburn in jerseys and shorts, the women knickered but sunhatted, all with stout sticks. Off through the dewy grass they move, across the fields, skirting the patches of clover, though little groves of pines, or elms, marking the more or less formal burial mounds. Buttercups and dandelions, "mock lilacs" and a variety of flowers fleck the grass with colour.

Under a matshed stone masons are blocking out granite slabs for still more graves. No matter how desperate a struggle for existence the survivors may have, no matter how little genuine respect or affection these elaborate tombs betoken, the clutch of the dead hand is impossible to break. Out here in the peace and beauty of the country one can be thankful that the rites due the dead at least bring the living out into these sylvan surroundings and furnish an excuse for what seems like a jolly family outing. See the food and wine placed round the tomb, the heaps of paper money, the family standing about from tiny tots to grandfathers, while the head of the house makes obeisance.

SCENE 3.—MID-DAY.

The trail has long since left the woods at the foot of the hills and winds around to the summit, through thickets of wild azealias, purple, mauve and yellow. White lilacs wave in the breeze which comes cool off Taku Lake. The sun is hot as one toils upward, but beneath the shade of the rest house the wind is piercing. Still higher up and the pagoda crowning the summit of the first peak left far behind. A temple extends over the top of the furtherest hill, its solid walls standing firm against the roughest gales of winter, little trails leading up to it from all the scattered hamlets lying below in the valley, and one wide stone road, overgrown with grass.

A curious mixture of new carvings and crumbling ruins within the temple. Smoke curling out of the great incense burner in the court yard, though there are no worshippers about; another burner pitched into a corner as refuse. Tables and stools in the main temple, with steaming tea brought to visitors as soon as they enter. The usual collection of Buddhas, drums, bells, embroideries and candles.

Two worshippers who have made the long, hard climb apparently on business of moment. One a toothless grandmother, the other a straight young slip of a girl, both poorly dressed. The priest lights the three red candles the girl has bought, the women chin-chin joss, the younger one reiterating her requests, then taking the fortune-telling bamboos and after more prayers shaking out a piece, and twice again until the priest gives her a bit of paper with characters marked upon it from the well-filled racks at the side, where prayers are also written. The final interpretation seems lucky, the old woman is especially delighted and after more devotions the two go off smiling. During this time two other foreign visitors have entered, one group leaving Pilsner beer bottles behind.

Out into the sun again and along the ridge of the hills towards the valley again. Chinese figures are hunting the hill-sides and putting their finds into tins and bottles Blue-green beetles are the quarry, ground up for 'cantharides and used in melicine, the Naturalist tells us.

SCENE 4.—SUNSET.

The crest of another hill awaiting sunset. A rosy glow suffusing the whole sky and reflected in the little patches of water dotting the valley. A rustling wind, chill with the approach of night. The impatient evening star hardly waits for the sunset before displaying her own brilliance. Other stars prick through the pale blue sky. The moon lingers for a spectacular entry. The night-jar chugs in the distance, the young hylas tune up. Down the hill, picking a stumbling way along a path where a water course has deposited loose stones, through the pine woods redolent with the fragrances drawn out by the wooing sun, and back to the houseboat again, just in time to see the moon rising, a vast orange round, through the trees on the western horizon. Quiet, save for the distance barking of dogs in the village, and the laugh of the villagers revelling in the warm spring night.

STYLE SUGGESTIONS

Straws Which Mark the Winds of Fashion

The words "strictly tailored" strike terror to the heart of the woman who cannot absolutely rely upon her tailor or modiste. But there are ways and means of circumventing the difficulties which surround the tailleur, and clever tricks which will give a tailored effect to what is really nothing but a dress. The setting in of the sleeve, as we indicated in a previous article, is a crucial matter, making or marring the whole jacket. What then? Doing without the sleeve is one way of solving the problem.

For instance, the sleeveless coat, made of the same or a contrasting material and slipped on over a frock will solve many a problem. Collars may turn up or down, according as one wishes to wear the dress at home or on the street, and deep gauntlet cuffs may be added to give an extra air of formality. The sleeveless Breton jacket over a smart frock buttoned the full length of the front is another useful device,, and even a long coat with a scarf collar may be sleeveless.

The cape is another handy way of transforming a dress into a street frock. A triple shoulder length cape may snap underneath the dress collar or a sleeveless cape falling to the knees may be cut with a flaring line. Another sleeveless coat is cut like a blouse, buttoning around the hips, and with a scarf collar, or one may even button on a front floating panel with a scarf collar, which falls flat and loose below the waist and gives the line of a tunic coat. By just such little touches one's wardrobe may be indefinitely extended without much expenditure, and a smart street appearance achieved without burdensome weight.

SPRING SONG

Make me over, mother April,
When the sap begins to stir!
When the flowery hand delivers
All the mountain-prisoned rivers,
And thy great heart beats and quivers
To revive the days that were,
Make me over, mother April,
When the sap begins to stir!

Take my dust and all my dreaming,
Count my heart-beats one by one,
Send them where the winters perish;
Then some golden noon recherish
And restore them in the sun,
Flower and scent and dust and dreaming,
With their heart-beats every one!

Make me over, mother April,
When the sap begins to stir!
Fashion me from swamp or meadow,
Garden plot or ferny shadow,
Hyacinth or humble burr!
Make me over, mother April,
When the sap begins to stir!

Make me over in the morning
From the rag-bag of the world!
Scraps of dream and duds of daring,
Faded colours once so flaring,
Shreds of banners long since furled!
Hues of ash and glints of glary,
In the rag-bag of the world!

Let me taste the old immortal
Indolence of life once more;
Not recalling nor forseeing,
Let the great slow joys of being,
Well my heart through as of yore!
Let me taste the old immortal
Indolence of life once more!

Only make me over April,
When the sap begins to stir!
Make me man or make me woman,
Make me oaf or ape or human,
Cup of flower or cone or fir;
Make me anything but neuter
When the sap begins to stir!

BLISS CARMAN in "Songs from Vagabondia."

MORE MOTHER GOOSE

Sing a song of ricshas
A pocket full of dollars
Give the coolie forty cents
And then he always hollers.
But pay a dime and three cents
Which is his proper fare
He'll pocket it and walk away
And will not even glare.
Sing a song of Hongkew
A pocket full of tar:
Four and twenty Chinese
Packed in a car.
When the car was opened
They all were stuck together.
Oh! Wasn't that a pretty sight
All in the hot weather.

YOUNG CHINA'S PECULIAR ABHORRENCE.

NEW LIKIN STATIONS ON THE RAILWAY

Merchants Forced to Send Goods to and from Nanking by Water to Avoid Crushing Tax : Trade Crippled While Revenue is Filched

Will the Likin authorities persist in their intention to enforce the likin with all the rigour of which they are capable?

This is a question which merchants all over China are asking themselves to-day, and unhappily the answer appears to be in the affirmative. New tax stations have been established on the Shanghai-Nanking line and collectors have been put in and ordered to extort every cent the law allows them. The tax was ever an exorbitant one, but in the past it has always been collected in a very casual sort of way with the result that beyond general murmurings and occasional protests the merchants have never proved troublesome. Furthermore, by making arrangements with the various transportation companies outside of the railway, they have been able to a large extent to get out of the tax, for it is a well-known fact that by means of "private arrangements" with the likin authorities the transportation companies have secured reductions whereby they have been able to transport goods for the merchants more cheaply than the merchants could have got it done by going straight to the railway authorities, since with the latter there is no question of "private arrangements."

THE MERCHANTS ENRAGED.

With this latest move, however, this more or less happy state of affairs comes to an end. The merchants are enraged and find it impossible to send goods by rail without losing money. Consequently they are making arrangements at Nanking to send their goods by water, by which means they come under the Maritime Customs, whose taxation is not so heavy. The evil that is being done is obvious. The railways lose money, and are helpless to act in the matter; the merchants still lose, though not so heavily, and the actual taxation collected must of necessity work out at considerably less than has been the case in the past. At the present time we are informed by the railway authorities in Shanghai that the only goods being loaded at Markham Road and Shanghai North are goods sent on transit passes, exemption certificates, and perishable goods. Nothing which comes within the likin is being transported by rail.

Neither are these the only serious consequences likely to arise out of the tax people's action. New industries will be crippled in infancy and many of them ruined. As an example of this, take the new cement and lime works at Lungtan. The enterprise is a new one and was started with every prospect of success. The last news we had of it was that rioting of a serious nature had occurred, arising out of the enforcing of the likin tax. Dozens of incidents of a similar nature could doubtless be cited. The tax is an unpopular one and the only way to meet the wishes of the people will be to reduce it or abolish it.

HUGE DEFALCATIONS.

The whole question should be re-considered, for the position was a Gilbertian one in any case. Probably something like 40 per cent. of what should have been collected on the tax was collected, and only 10 per cent. of this, again, found its way in to the coffers of the Government. There has always been a huge leakage, and unless Chinese officials change their characteristics there always will be. The obvious and common sense course is to reduce the tax considerably first; and then set about enforcing it. This would probably meet with the satisfaction of the merchants and bring in more revenue to the coffers of the Central Government. The only opposition probable would be from the transportation companies which have been making quite a successful thing out of it.

It is interesting to note, also, that during the discussions on the subject of the proposed 2½ per cent. Custosm Surtax, with all the talk of abolishing likin in return for this surtax, the likin officials were quietly making arrangements for its more rigorous enforcement. The present position could not be made much worse whatever action is taken. The railways are losing business, the merchants are losing money, the tax authorities and the Government are losing revenue, and on the top of all, riots are occurring in different provinces and young industries are being crippled by reason of it.

THE RAILWAY POWERLESS.

It should be clearly understood that the arrangements the merchants are making with the ferry people at Nanking for the transportation of their goods by water do not amount in any way to a boycott of the railways. It simply is that they cannot possibly afford to use the railways and at the same time pay the likin. The railway authorities, of course, are powerless to act in the matter at all, since the quarrel is purely one between the merchants and the likin tax authorities. They are simply the innocent victims of the dispute.

PROTESTS BY KIANGSU MERCHANTS.

The action of the likin authorities has resulted in an extraordinary meeting of the various transportation companies. The meeting was held in Shanghai and representatives from Ningpo and Wusih were in attendance. It was decided to send a delegation to the authorities requesting them to use their influence to put back the date of enforcement five days in order that the companies might confer with their customers.

THE TUCHUNSHIP OF KIRIN

Gen. Chang Tso-hsiang to Succeed the Late Gen. Sun Lieh-chun

A CHANGE OF TITLE

Peking, Apr. 26.

According to reports from Mukden, the death of Gen. Sun Lieh-chun, Tuchun of Kirin, has brought forward two prominent aspirants for the post of Chief of the Kirin Administration. With the death of Gen. Sun the title of Tuchun lapses, and his successor will no doubt be called Vice-Commandant of the Three Eastern Provinces, the rank conferred on Generals Sun and Wu Chun sheng (Heilungkiang) by the Provincial Assemblies, after they had appointed Marshal Chang Tso-lin Commandant of the Three Provinces to give him a rank independent of the Central Government.

Gen. Chang Tso-hsiang, Commandant of the 27th Fengtien Division, appears likely to get the vacant post, but Gen. Chang Hsiao-liang, eldest son of Marshal Chang Tso-lin, is also a candidate. In the event of the former being appointed it is thought likely that General Chang Hsueh-liang will take over the 27th Division.

Apr. 29.

Gen. Chang Tso-hsiang has been appointed Military Governor of Kirin in succession to the late Gen. Sun Lieh-chun. Marshal Chang Tso-lin's son, Gen. Chang Hsiao-liang, succeeds Gen. Chang Tso-hsiang in command of the 27th Fengtien Division.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Wholly Untrue Report of British Govt.'s Policy

Peking, Apr. 30.

The British Legation emphatically denies a report in the local press to the effect that at a meeting of the British, American, French and Japanese Ministers on April 22 Sir Ronald Macleay, having received instructions from the British Government that policy of the Consortium was in contravention of the policy of the Labour Government, explained to his colleagues that the British banking group would have to modify their policy.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MONGOLIA ARMING

Peking, Apr. 24.

The Chinese Fress reports that a meeting was held in Peking on the 16th instant of Mongolian princes and notables under the chairmanship of Prince Kalaching. Several resolutions were passed, the most important of which was that each Mongol tribe should organize a well armed and equipped force for local defence. Other resolutions referred to education and industrial improvements.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE BANKERS' CONFERENCE PRESSING FOR SURTAX

Review of National Chaos, Poverty, Unwieldy Armies, Bad Trade and Consequent Brigandage : Powers Urged to Grant Customs Increase

Peking, Apr. 23.

The Fifth Annual National Bankers' Conference held its closing session yesterday morning at the Peking Bankers' Association. Besides making final touches on various decisions reached at the previous sessions, the delegates assembled passed the following declarations to be issued to the public. Before the session was adjourned, Nanking was chosen as the conference place for the 1923 sessions.

The declarations read as follows:—

"The political turmoil of the country as prevailing both at Peking and in the provinces has resulted in one unique and unfortunate situation, namely, the increased hardship of the people's living and the fearful abundance of the bandits and outlaws. The principal causes of such a situation are attributed to the fact that an overwhelming amount of national revenue is disposed of every year for military purposes and hence the financial state of affairs of the country is rendered into disorder and tumult. As a consequence, commerce and industry have been greatly disorganized and starvation has become a common phenomenon, thus the mass of people are being helplessly driven to no other living except brigandage. The economic entity of the nation has been virtually broken down, and a remedy for the situation has been long sought for.

PEKING'S DEFICIT.

"Realizing the seriousness of the situation and the importance of financial reorganization, the Government appointed some time last year a Commission for the Readjustment of Finance to study details of all problems of financial difficulties of the nation. A preliminary report covering China's principal receipts and expenditure was published recently by this Commission. The chief features of the document show that the net income of the Central Government represents only 7 per cent. of the amount that it ought to have received, and the amount spent for administrative purposes is only $7,000,000 a year, less than 5 per cent. of the actual receipts. The total expenditure every year reaches somewhere around $120,000,000, an amount nearly as big as 17 times the meagre amount that is at the free disposal of the Government, that is, $7,000,000. Besides, the figure of the unsecured indebtedness, domestic and foreign combined, amounts to more than $723,000,000, a sum of liability China has to liquidate sooner or later. The only ray of hope that these financial difficulties of China can adequately be solved rests in the 2½ per cent. additional Customs surtax, and yet there is no sign that the Special Customs Conference as promised by the Washington Conference will be held in the immediate future. Such being the financial conditions of the country, there should be no doubt that these problems should be the common subject of worry of all well-wishers of China.

NATIONAL CREDIT.

"The national credit is the foundation of all financial undertakings of a country. China's credit has been suffering great impairment lately, and there is no hope that it can be restored as long as her vast amount of indebtedness remains unliquidated and unadjusted. Until her credit is restored, she will have hard times to get funds needed for her reconstruction and her people will not dare to make investment along industrial and commercial lines. The amount of yearly interest for her total indebtedness of $723,000,000 requires no less than $30,000,000. Therefore further delay of the Special Customs Conference means further delay of the readjustment of her unsecured indebtedness.

"It has been stated that the postponement of the Special Customs Conference is due to the unsettlement of a few diplomatic questions. It seems that diplomatic controversy should not be allowed to entangle with the Special Customs Conference, as the unsettledness of every diplomatic question has its particular reasons, while the Special Customs Conference has long before been authorized by the Washington Conference. Then, take the diplomatic question into consideration. It again seems that any question of importance should not be put aside indefinitely and that the Government should observe the public opinion and judge the respective importance of these unsettled diplomatic questions and render quick and responsible decisions upon them.

PROVINCIAL FINANCE.

"The financial situation in different provinces is also in bad state. The overflowing of unredeemable notes as well as bad silver and copper coins, the inefficiency of communication and transportation systems, the unsafety of travelling, the ever-increase of prices and the like all contribute towards the causes of poverty and social upheaval. The relation between a nation and its provinces resembles that of the trunk and the branches of a tree. The soundness of provincial finance is the basis of the soundness of national finance. We as people of the country should pay attention not only to the financial affairs of the Central Government but also to those of the provinces. It is important that we should pay attention to the receipts, expenditure and indebtedness of the Central Government; it is still more important that we pay attention to the problems of currency and transportation systems of the provinces. We should deal with these problems without partisanship, without prejudice and without fear. We should pass a fair and sound judgment upon the same.

"The question of China's finance often has close international relationship and hence international obstruction often arises. In our opinion, this is an erroneous policy on the part of our foreign friends. China's huge amount of foreign liability and her big volume of international trade are vital not only to the economic life of China herself, but also to the business enterprises of foreign nationals. If we look forward for the smooth and prosperous economic dealings between China and other countries, international co-operation is of primary importance, especially on the question of readjustments of China's finance.

THE IDEAL SOLUTION.

"In summarising the above points, the Fifth Annual National Bankers' Conference wishes to take this opportunity to make clear to the public that in our minds, the following problems should be immediately dealt with by the Government, by the people and by our foreign friends.

"1. The Government should announce a practical programme of financial readjustment at the earliest possible date, hasten the opening of the Special Customs Conference in order to straighten out the unsecured domestic and foreign indebtedness, and improve the communication system as well as readjust the liabilities of the Ministry of Communications.

"2. The people of all walks of life should devise ways and means to hasten the readjustment of provincial finance and to prevent the disorderliness of transportation and currency systems in the provinces.

"3. Our foreign friends are hereby requested that they should give their fair and just attitude towards the convening of the Special Customs Conference.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PREMIER AND FINANCE MINISTER

Rumoured Conflict of Opinion as to Gold Francs Case and German Bonds

Peking, Apr. 29.

Conflicting reports regarding the alleged impending resignation of the Premier continue to be circulated by Chinese news agencies and papers. It is stated on the one hand that Mr. Sun has resolved to go abroad and is merely awaiting a grant to cover his expenses for a tour during which he will sound the Governments concerned regarding a preliminary conference on tariff affairs. Agencies and papers more in touch with the Premier affirm that he has no intention of resigning, although he is much concerned over the financial outlook.

Independent quarters are of opinion that conflict of opinion between the Premier and the Minister of Finance is likely to end in the withdrawal from the Cabinet of one of these two Ministers. The main points at issue between them are said to be the gold francs case and the German bonds, the settlement of which would have an important bearing on the financial position.

May 2.

Gen. Wang Chen-ping, the Civil Governor of Chihli, has submitted his resignation. Gen. Wang recently was thrust into the position of intermediary between the President and Cabinet on one hand and Mr. Tsao Jui, Mr. Wu Ching-lian and Gen. Chang Ching-hua on the other, while Marshal Wu Pei-fu, to whom he owes the greatest allegiance, it is reported, recently reproached him for playing up to the Tientsin clique more earnestly than was necessary. President Tsao Kun is endeavouring to persuade Gen. Wang to retain the Civil Governorship.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FOREIGN GUNBOATS IN CANTON WATERS

A Provisional Withdrawal

KIANGSI-TULI IMPEACHED

Peking, Apr. 25.

The House of Representatives today passed a chaban against Gen. Tsai Cheng-hsun, the Tuli of Kiangsi, on the ground that he had established an opium monopoly in the guise of an anti-poison bureau. The House resolved to forword the chaban to the Government with a request for immediate action.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, May 1.

It is reported unofficially that the Government contemplates recalling Gen. Tsai Cheng-hsun, whose opium monopoly has created trouble in Kiangsi, and appointing Gen. Chang Hsi-yuan Tuli of Kiangsi. It is reported further that Gen. Tsai Cheng-hsun will be made Minister of War, the present Minister, Gen. Lu Chin, becoming Tutung of Chahar. It is understood that these proposals have been submitted to Marshal Chih Hsieh-yuan and, if he approves, a mandate will be issued making the appointments.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

REPORTED CHANGE OF HANDS OVER FOOCHOW

HOW CIVIL WAR DESTROYS TRADE AND INDUSTRY IN KUANGTUNG

Dr. Sun's Troops Claiming Another Victory over Chen Chiung-ming: Piracy Rampant and Crime in Canton: Further Taxes to Fill the War Chests

Canton, Apr. 17.

Reports from the allied "constitutionalist" troops on the Eastern front indicate that they have succeeded during the last few days in getting control of the Canton-Kowloon Railway and driving the followers of General Chen Chiung-ming towards their stronghold at Waichow. Dr. Sun's men also claim that Poklo has fallen.

The people of Fatshan, a city ten miles west of Canton, after having closed their shops for five days as a protest against further taxation, finally ressumed business on April 16, upon assurance that the new imposts would not be emforced. This city, with a population of nearly 500,000, was occupied by Yunnanese mercenaries in January, 1923, and it has remained a Yunnanese spoil of war ever since. The other day the transportation companies and shipowners operating at Fatshan were ordered to make an extra charge of 20 per cent. on their freight and passenger rates and to turn the additional proceeds over to the Yunnanese commanders.

Owing to the prevalence of piracy along the West River and the extension of commandeering by troops from steam launches to small junks, very little business is being done, and the refusal of the ship-owners to pay the further tax was early this week supported by all merchants in Fatshan, they having gone as far as to stop shipments altogether as a protest against the many new taxes.

The merchants in Canton, however, may be unable to avoid the 20 per cent. increase in rates for their transportation. In Canton the tariffs of both the Canton-Samshui and the Canton-Hankow (Kuangtung Section) Railways have been more than once increased, the present rate being from 44 to 59 per cent. higher than a year ago, in order to provide funds for the war.

A TAX ON RELIGION.

Among the new taxes proposed this week is one of 30 per cent. on sums paid to priests for prayers for the living or for the dead. The proposed law also provides for a licence fee of $30 yearly from every priest holding religious services for the people. It is not believed, however, that the proposed tax can be enforced, as it would greatly burden the mass of the people. They would have to spend $1.30 in the future for every dollar they spend now for their worship in old style temples or in ceremonials where a priest is necessary. Many people fear that the priests would go on strike upon enforcement of the proposed new tax, bringing misery and discomfort to many persons.

The leading commanders of troops in Canton have jointly issued a statement assuring the people that they will no longer press men on the streets for the military transportation service but will ask a people's committee to engage coolies for them. It is understood that the people's committee has decided to enlist coolies at a wage of $20 a month.

LOKCHONG SHOPS CLOSED.

The merchants of Lokchong, a city in Northern Kuangtung, are still keeping their shops closed to avoid further taxation. It appears that the mercenaries stationed there are establishing tax collecting stations along the principal trade routes, sometimes charging as high as 25 per cent. tax on the value of the goods in transit. There are more than 50 such stations, including salt tax stations.

According to reports reaching Dr. Sun's headquarters the Hunanese mercenaries have taken the city of Hoyuen from General Chen Chiung-ming, whose forces appear to have withdrawn partly to the northeast and partly towards Waichow, which is now besieged.

General Chen Chiung-ming's men are also active in Southern Kuangtung. Dr. Sun Yat-sen is sending a detachment of the Anhui Army under General Fan Chung-hsiao to the south. As General Fan's troops will pass over territories now under other military commanders, right of way is being arranged so as to avoid possible conflict. A fortnight ago when General Chen Tien-tai, a Kuangsi mercenary commander, was leading a division for the south-west, his army was attacked and practically routed, and now General Chen is threatening to resign as a protest against the non-punishment of the Cantoneese forces who scattered his power.

SILK MEN FURTHER BLED.

The silk embroidery guild, the Kan Lun Tong, is being asked by the military authorities for a loan of $150,000. The guild is hesitating to comply, claiming that the silk merchants have been paying more than their sales have amounted to and that at present the silk market is not by any means bright.

To protect the life and property of Canton residents, Dr. Sun Yat-sen has ordered that troop commanders and groups of soldiers may not arrest any civilian without the aid of police, but so far his order has had but little effect. The local newspapers are filled with stories of murders, kidnapping, robbery, and other outrages committed by persons calling themselves soldiers. The latest method of extortion is for a soldier to hand a package to a laundryman for service and then return in a couple of hours to claim that a gold watch has been left in a coat pocket and he wants to have it back. As the laundryman never can return a watch which he has not received, an arrest follows and a fine is a matter of course.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MR. LIANG SHIH-YI IN LONDON

"The One Link Between Old and New China:" League of Nations Representation

London, Apr. 29.

A dinner, given last night in London by the Chinese Minister, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, to the former Chinese Premier, Mr. Liang Shih-yi, was attended by a gathering which Mr. Chu described as probably the most distinguished assemblage of those coming from China, connected with China, or interested in China, ever held. The guests included Baron Parmoor, Sir William Joynson-Hicks and Sir Charles Addis.

Mr. Liang in his speech referred to the rather sudden advance of latest democratic and economic developments in China. He stated that China looked for the assistance of the League of Nations to uphold China's rights and place her in a better position among the nations.

Baron Parmoor agreed with the Chinese Minister that the Council of the League of Nations ought to have a larger representation. It was a great loss not to have China on the Council. He sincerely hoped that China would have a permanent place on it.

Sir Charles Addis reminded China of the great need of financial co-operation from the outside and that capital only flowed where it met with security. Foreign capital alone could set in motion the machinery for China's development. He described the guest of the evening as probably the only link between old and new China and said that he believed that his visit would have a great effect.—Reuter.

THE BANKERS' LOST OPPORTUNITY

Apr. 28.

NOTHING could well be more disappointing than the address which the Chinese Bankers' Conference has issued at the conclusion of its session in Peking. Their failure to say anything of real value to the country in this most critical stage of its history is proportionate to the importance of the occasion, the influence they wield and their own undoubted perception of what is wrong, which is clearly visible between the lines. Again and again they come within an ace of putting their finger on the true cause of China's ills, only to shy off from it like a frightened horse. No doubt Peking is not quite so comfortable a place as Shanghai would be in which to launch denunciations of the country's despoilers. Even more important people than bankers have found themselves unexpectedly in the capital's gaol when they were too plain-spoken. But the Government has so much need of the help of Chinese banks when festivals come round that it would hardly dare to risk offending them by resenting criticism and the Association of Bankers is of so much real influence that a clear call from it to the nation could not have failed to have useful results. The only call actually heard is to the foreign Powers, to grant something which the bankers know perfectly well could only add to the general confusion. It is the old device of trying to fasten upon foreigners the blame for China's misfortunes and to get them to do something for her which can never be done till she does it herself.

So far as outward symptoms are concerned the bankers' analysis of the general situation is true enough. Political turmoil and extravagant expenditure on armies results in excessive taxation, bad trade, crippled industry and people "taking to the hills" because official oppression allows them no other means of earning their living than as bandits. But when we are told that "the only ray of hope" lies in the granting of the 2½ per cent. surtax, it is time to register a very strong objection indeed. That this suggestion should be made, so closely after the publication of the Financial Commission's report (dealt with last Monday) excites suspicion that the bankers have secretly yielded to official pressure in advancing it. Peking, it is clear, is making a strenuous assault upon the Powers to grant the surtax, relying upon the influence in Western capitals of holders of unsecured Chinese loans, hopeful of being paid out of the proceeds. And this attempt every foreigner who has the true interests of China at heart should most strenuously resist. For, first and foremost, the surtax was never suggested as a means of solidifying China's unsecured debts but chiefly as a quid pro quo for the abolition of likin. This is perfectly clear from the terms of the Nine Powers Treaty signed at Washington. Secondly, the Bankers' adroit insinuation that the postponement of the Customs conference is "due to the unsettlement of a few diplomatic questions" is in the main groundless. France's refusal to ratify the Treaty is certainly due to Peking's equivocal behaviour in the gold franc question. But the Powers generally are perfectly well aware that to give Peking more money to play ducks and drakes with is to make matters worse rather than better. China's own request to the Powers that they would postpone the sending of the Commission, promised at Washington, to inquire into her fitness for the abolition of extraterritoriality, was a confession of general unfitness which has naturally had its effect in other directions. And lastly, the bankers know very well indeed that when Peking wants $121,000,000 annually to balance its books, a tax estimated to yield $25,000,000 is not going to solve anything.

There is, of course, only one solution, as the Bankers' Association must be perfectly well aware. Why is Peking over a hundred and twenty millions short annually and seven hundred and thirty millions in debt? Why do the provinces send no money to the capital and yet, though they are receiving far larger funds than ever they did under the Empire, are full of depreciated paper and bad silver and copper? We all know the answer: political intrigue; armies, the pawns of the politicians in their interminable chicanery; and "the spoils of office", flagrant unblushing theft of public funds. Even now Peking would be considerably nearer solvency if it were not for the swarm of sinecures in every Ministry where, one hears and can easily believe, that the number of employees is so great that, if all of them attended office at once, there would not be room for them to sit down. To attempt to make foreigners responsible for this state of affairs, because they are reluctant to agree to trade being further burdened with unproductive taxes, is unworthy of the bankers' reputation for common sense. The only line for the foreign Powers to take, if they would show true friendship to the people of China, is to withhold any monetary assistance in any form to the Chinese officials, with a view to compelling China to live upon her own resources, as she very well could. That is the only solution and nobody knows it better than the Bankers' Association.

ARMED ROBBERY AND SMUGGLED ARMS

Apr. 29.

AT no time since Shanghai was a settlement have armed robbery and the smuggling of arms been so prevalent as they are to-day. It is hardly too much to say that a regular state of war prevails, with the additional complication that political motives must frequently be supposed to be at the back of assaults recorded. During the past ten days four Chinese men and one woman have been shot down—three of them with fatal result—and in only one case would it appear that robbery was the cause of the crime. In respect of the Chinese found shot in Myburgh Road last Thursday, who died in hospital, and the man shot in Fokien Road on Saturday, no explanation for the attack has been found. It almost seems as if we are returning to the days of the Paris Apaches of twenty years ago, among whom it was considered a capital joke to "faire une pante", to stick a knife into some poor fellow asleep on a Champs Elysées bench just for the fun of the thing. Certain it is that the Chinese armed malefactor of to-day is utterly callous and ruthless. He shoots at sight and to kill. And unfortunately it is but too clear that he has no difficulty in obtaining arms and ammunition. One cannot but express once more one's deep admiration for and sympathy with the police of all branches in the hourly peril in which they go from these desperadoes. Many of them, those who have made a speciality of hunting down armed robbers, literally carry their lives in their hand. Their devotion and courage are worthy of all praise.

In these circumstances the new rule recently introduced at the Mixed Court that all armed robbers must be represented by lawyers, for whom presumably the Court pays, cannot but be viewed with some doubts. The question is an extremely delicate one, inasmuch as it is the first principle of justice that a man is assumed innocent until proved guilty and that he should be given every opportunity of rebutting an accusation. But the circumstances in which the Mixed Court tries a charge of armed assault are not quite parallel to a similar accusation elsewhere. It is safe to assume that the police will not bring such a charge without being fairly sure of their facts; and if there be any weakness in the latter, the Court has ample experience and, if we may venture to say so, intelligence, to detect the flaw. Furthermore, the Mixed Court is to some extent a court of first instance—in which accused men are often advised to obtain a lawyer, though none is provided for them—in respect of armed robbers: it cannot sentence to death, it cannot order the "cat" (undoubtedly the most effective punishment against gentry of this type), and even the terms of imprisonment it can pass are strictly limited. The present Military Court at Lungwa was instituted by the late President Yuan Shih-kai expressly to try crimes of violence, at the request of the Shanghai authorities. It is presided over by a very able magistrate, who is certainly in no hurry to convict blindly, but goes over every piece of evidence against men sent to be tried by him. There appears no danger of injustice being done in handing over at once to this Court prisoners against whom a primâ facie case has been established, as indeed is the practice in all Concessions elsewhere, and to do so would save the time of the much overworked Mixed Court. If this method of procedure is deemed impossible, then we would urge most strongly the introduction of the "cat". As matters now stand, there is not the slightest doubt that armed robbers have been greatly encouraged by the prospect that a clever lawyer will get them off on a legal technicality and the police proportionately discouraged.

To turn to the question of smuggling, there is here an urgent case for action by the Diplomatic Body. Scarcely a week passes without the seizure of arms and ammunition in some vessel and when, as in the case of the Paul Lecat, in which thirty Mausers and 175,000 rounds of ammunition were found on Saturday, a previous seizure has also been made at Hongkong, it is safe to conclude that what is actually found is nothing compared with the total quantity that gets into Shanghai and that there is some very serious lack of supervision on ships. No arrests can be made as matters stand—except in rare occurrences like that of the three men caught bringing arms from the Chambord last week, who were so foolish as to complicate their case by resisting the police—and the obvious remedy is some ruling whereby the captain of a ship on which smuggled arms had been found, or the ship herself, were made responsible. This could, we imagine, be done by the Customs with the support of the Diplomatic Body. It is a drastic remedy, perhaps; but we cannot overlook the fact that the circumstances of the time are abnormal and call for proportionate action.

JAPANESE EXCLUSION IN AMERICA

Apr. 30.

THE news received yesterday that President Coolidge has plainly intimated his intention of vetoing the new immigration restriction measures, unless Congress removes the obnoxious Japanese clause, is quite what was to be expected. Discrimination of this particular kind is no new thing. In the course of the past two decades it has more than once been advocated in Congress, though it has never yet been pushed to such lengths as in the present instance. The situation now is embittered on both sides for special reasons. California, which is and always has been the stronghold of antagonism to the Japanese, has been enjoying a time of unparalleled prosperity, and that harvest the Californian labour party are quite determined to keep for themselves; they dislike the Japanese who, they say, undersell them in the labour market and are "bad citizens," spending nothing in America but remitting all they can to Japan. The general feeling in the United States against the past excessive admission of "undesirable aliens" has given them their opportunity. On the Japanese side, in addition to the prospect of large material loss and the indignity put upon them, there is the feeling that they are being "hit when they are down" after the earthquake. As the chorus of protest in leading American newspapers and from religious bodies shows, Congress, not for the first time, has proved itself completely out of touch with the best feeling in America and President Coolidge will have the support of a large body of sober public opinion if he vetoes the objectionable clause.

The new measure, regarded as a whole, appears to be an attempt to remove some of the anomalies which have arisen in the United States since the Dillingham Act regarding the admission, as immigrants, of aliens into the country became operative. It has been recognized, as much in America as elsewhere, that in some respects the quota system is unfair in that it does not adequately recognize the post-war changes in the political map of Europe. Undoubtedly, since it became operative, there has been a decided falling-off in emigration from Europe to the United States. It may not generally be known that under this law the number of emigrants admitted from any one country is limited to three per cent. of the number of people from that country who were resident in the United States in 1910. The new bill is planned to supersede the prevailing system by one under which admissions will be classed as (a) Quota Immigrants and (b) Quota Relative Immigrants, the numbers being determined as follows: a basic quota of 200 plus two per cent. of the number of foreign-born individuals of such nationality resident in the United States in 1890. Quota relative immigrants will be admitted to the same number. The net result of this would be a reduction of 20,000 in any one year, with Britain (having a total quota of 125,000) benefiting to the extent of 48,000 as compared with the number allowed at present under the Dillingham Act, and Germany by over 35,000; while Russia and Poland would each be allowed about 20,000 less each, and Italy 34,000 fewer than at present.

Leaving quite apart the question of the effect on Japan of the proposed legislation, it would be interesting to know exactly under what line of reasoning the new measure has been worked out. The logical presumption is that it is desired to eliminate as far as possible the admission of those whose entrance will not have a lasting benefit to the country. If so, the further exclusion of Russians, with a consequent lesser possibility of the introduction of masses of the Bolshevik element, is understandable. With regard to Italy the reason is much more obscure. We believe we are correct in stating that the average Italian immigrant to the United States during the last half-century has been at least on a par with those of other nationalities, and some of the great railway systems of the country are a standing and imperishable monument to the skill and energy of imported Italian labour. It is possible that the real reason may be found in the patriotism of the Italian: Once an Italian always one at heart, nationalization as citizens of the United States notwithstanding. It is said to be almost a rule that the Italian entering the United States always keeps his heart in Italy, and if and when a sum has been accumulated sufficient to ensure retirement in Italy, the United States is left and forgotten. In the aggregate, this exodus of Italians to their mother country once they have become reasonably rich, must mean an enormous sum in negotiable dollars leaving the New World for the Old, and there is little doubt that this practice too has had an influence in bringing about legislation which appears to be unfair to some countries and extremely favourable to others.

CHINA THE FALSE AND THE TRUE

May 1.

In spite of possible to exaggerate, it would certainly be fatal to ignore, the seriousness of Mr. Rodney Gilbert's articles on the assault on Mr. Campbell and the growing anti-foreignism of which it is to be regarded as a symptom. For the outrage on the Peking city wall clearly cannot be regarded as an isolated incident. The perpetrator has been hailed as a hero and martyr and his arrest been made the excuse for foaming denunciation of the British Minister. Revolution and the disintegration of all government have brought to the fore a class contemptible indeed, but whose mouthings cannot be disregarded. For some years past the Powers by common consent have pursued towards China a policy of studied consideration, of allowing her every possible opportunity in which to prove the fitness of her new system; and they gave the most public expression to this policy at the Washington Conference. While this conciliatoriness has been received merely as a sign of weakness by Chinese politicians, they have made a ghastly mess of their opportunities. They realize that the Powers have found them out, and none can be so venomous as those who have been tried and have publicly exposed their ineptitude. It has caused surprise among foreigners that the bandit and other outrages of recent have not excited more reprobation in the Chinese Press, for, looked at from any point of view, they were a disgrace to China's good name. The explanation is to be found in the mad resolutions passed by a meeting of political inebriates in Central Park, in [illegible] Mr. Campbell's assailant. These are the people who control large sections of the Chinese Press, not only outside treaty ports, and their influence for mischief cannot be underrated.

There was, however, one sentence in Mr. Gilbert's article yesterday to which we would specially draw attention. "The average Chinese", he wrote, "whom one meets in ordinary life is not of this ilk. He is a gentleman, whether he happens to be up or down." This sentiment, we are sure, every foreigner will cordially endorse. In Russia, the out-and-out Bolsheviks were estimated never to exceed six hundred thousand. In Shanghai to-day the professional agitators do not probably exceed a couple of hundred. In all China the political class might be numbered at a few hundred thousand. As always in times of disorganization it is a minority which arrogates to itself all power and, like the Jubjub, "lives in perpetual passion"; and while the average Chinese, from coolie class to scholar, remains what he has ever been, a gentleman in every sense of the word, he passively allows himself to be misrepresented and trampled upon by creatures whom he would not suffer to pass his front door. For, be it remembered, whatever complaint foreigners may have against the professional politician, the Chinese people have a far greater one, and it is a constant subject of thought by all foreigners who love China and grieve at her sunken state whether they could not in some way manage to make common cause with the Chinese people [illegible]. At all times the contrast between the official and other classes in China has been a commonplace. Even in the past this official nexus was closely woven from the Throne downwards and it was impossible to get past it. To-day the politicians, as between party and party and province and province, are far less coherent than of old, while there appears reason to believe that the people's patience is very near the breaking point and that with encouragement they might well be nerved to throw off the incubus of the class that has battened on them since the revolution.

And in this connexion we would repeat what has been said more than once in these columns. The word Tuchun is commonly synonymous for everything that is corrupt and oppressive. We believe that conception to be almost entirely wrong. No doubt there are or have been exceptions; they were conspicuous. But we make bold to believe that the majority of the Tuchuns are probably as anxious to do well for their country as others could desire that they should be. The first-hand experience that we have of their doings in this province and Chêkiang is not so discouraging that we might not give other Tuchuns the benefit of the doubt, especially remembering that travellers from their provinces are by no means ungrudging in commendation of their work. But just as the old-time Chinese magistrate was a slave to "his sisters, his cousins and his aunts",—in other words, the whole family tribe for which he had to find jobs,—so the modern Tuchun is bound in the web of political intrigue and conventional patronage and in the floating mass of adventurers that surges about the yamên and the Provincial Assembly hall. We know that the cigarette tax in Chêkiang was clapped on without the knowledge of Marshal Lu Yung-hsiang and that both he and Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan of Kiangsu are opposed to it. But they are not strong enough to have it repealed. In how many other of the flagrant injustices that we see throughout China, the Tuchun is the scapegoat for those about him, one can only guess. But we venture to think that it would profit both China and the Powers if the latter could get into touch with the principal rulers of the different provinces for a general adjustment both national and international. To do that, of course, requires recognition by the Powers that China is for the moment not one but eighteen or more separate states. But that they will be compelled to recognize sooner or later.

LABOUR'S FIRST BUDGET

Anyone who had ventured to predict, three or four years ago, that the first Labour Government's first Budget would have been received with acclamations all round and an immediate strengthening of the stock market would certainly have been regarded as a madman and probably eyed askance as traitor to the cause of all that has made England terrible abroad. Yet once again it is the unexpected that has happened. Departing for its Easter holiday amid the [illegible] Conservatives, the Labour Government has reopened Parliament in a blaze of triumph. And there is nothing in Mr. Philip Snowden's Budget speech, as cabled yesterday, to suggest that the triumph is not deserved. It is true that, for the surplus which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has to play with, the Conservatives are mainly to be thanked; and it is a commonplace that the general outlines of any new Administration's first Budget are more or less fixed by its predecessors, the extent varying with the date at which the new Government comes into office. But Labour has been quite long enough in power to have seriously affected the year's showing, if it had been set upon the wild schemes advocated by its most extreme followers, and which its more implacable opponents still believe it will one day spring upon us.

That the food duties have gone or been notably reduced is as popular an announcement as it deserves to be. The reports that reach us of the food conditions of the average working-class family are not pleasant reading and improvement in that respect is to be welcomed. The disappearance of the McKenna duties is open to doubt. Watches, taxed or untaxed, would seem to be cheap enough, judging by the now almost ubiquitous appearance of the wrist watch. As regards cinema films, it is now clear that the popularity of a film does not depend on the fact that its producers may have spent a million dollars on it, in which respect nobody can attempt to compete with the Americans. Good acting, good photography and a good story can hold their own against mere Gargantua, and if British film producers can succeed in these respects, there appears no reason why foreign films should not be taxed to provide revenue. Most doubtful of all, however, is the removal of the duty on motor-cars. It is a curious fact that, since the war, the only British industry which has done consistently well has been that of motor-car manufacture and it has been heavily protected. So far from British makers taking advantage of this to put up prices, the development of cheap cars in Britain is one of the most remarkable features of the time and the excellence of British cars is second to none. Why take off the duty, especially when manufacturers say that to do so will mean the dismissal of hundreds of workers? To meet this danger we are told that the duty is to be continued until August 1, though there is no explanation as to what the effect of this postponement will be. The Government, which has lately obtained powers to lay down five cruisers in order to provide work for unemployed, can hardly risk throwing other hands on the market, and one can only conclude that the danger of this resulting from removal of the duty is not acute. But motor-cars are in a different category from raw materials and articles of necessity, and one does not see that the vote cast at the general election implies any obligation on the Government to remove the duty on them.

The general tone of Mr. Snowden's speech is admirable. Clearly, he says, available resources must be devoted to redemption of the country's debt: the maintenance and improvement of British credit was a matter of very vital importance. The italics are ours to emphasize a saying which ought to be of general reassurance, especially coming from the second Minister in the Kingdom, the controller of all its finances. There are many who believe firmly that the Labour Government has acted as it has done hitherto deliberately to lull us all into false security; it seeks to "dope" us all that it may then go through our pockets at leisure, they say. Surely that is a bitter and unworthy charge to bring against men like Mr. MacDonald and his chief colleagues, whose moral integrity whether we like their politics or not is above reproach. And in any case can we really believe so Machiavellian a design? No man, certainly no Briton, with ability to rise to the position of a Minister of the Crown can be unsusceptible to the lesson of the wonderful financial showing which Great Britain makes. In but four years of almost unparalleled depression, of grave international fears, of internal anger and strife, she has reduced her total indebtedness by £650,000,000, she discharges her liabilities to America, without a penny's worth of help from those who have liabilities to her and supports an army of old age and war pensioners. This truly wonderful performance is due to sound finance, cautious provision in advance for every debt contracted, dour resolution and endurance. It is impossible to believe that Mr. Snowden, Mr. MacDonald or any other Labour man now or ever likely to be in power will cast away these tried methods to go a-wild goose-chasing.

BOLSHEVIST MENTALITY

May 3.

On April 14 last the first meeting took place at the Foreign Office between the Soviet Mission and British representatives. Since then we have heard of various sub-committees being formed to examine various questions—much like Xenophon's soldiers marching forty parasangs and having breakfast—and that is all we know about the negotiations. On the other hand, we have heard several things which make more and more slender the chances of any material outcome of those negotiations and reveal new surprises in the mind of that strange creature, the Russian Bolshevist. These it may be of interest to recall.

Beginning at the end of March (about the time when the Soviet Mission would have been packing its portmanteaux) we find Zinovieff stating in Moscow that Britain's claims amount to some 10,000 million gold roubles, with three milliards for arrears of interest. But, he added,

> Russia did not intend to make concessions in this respect and she had presented a counter-claim exceeding Britain's demands.

Next comes Trotsky's famous apothegm at Tiflis on April 11, three days before the two sides met in London, that,

In other words, Mr. MacDonald's recognition of the Soviet Government was merely a vote-catching device. There is nothing like insulting your vis-à-vis as much as you can in order to open negotiations in the best spirit, especially when you want to get something out of him.

The day before the Foreign Office meeting, leading London bankers sent a memorandum to Mr. MacDonald explaining that if the Russian Government wished to restore its credit in Britain, it must disgorge the property it had stolen, respect private rights and the sanctity of contracts and leave private trading untrammelled: as for a loan, the memorandum reminded the Soviet that that depends, not upon Governments or banks, but upon the confidence of private investors. All very simple and obvious, but it has stirred the good Bolshevik to frenzy. "This is to bid us cease being Communists" exclaimed Trotsky at Moscow on April 21. "Why do they require that of us, when we do not require them to cease being bourgeoisie?" Even more furious was the All-Russian Council of Trades Unions. "To ask us to recognize our debts," they cry, "will degrade Russians to the level of coolies."

> "If England gives us credits we shall repay a moderate percentage, but private property will never be returned to foreign owners. We shall forbid commercial negotiations between British bankers and private Russian capitalists."

The answer to Trotsky is, of course, that nobody cares whether he calls himself a Communist or a worshipper of Central African Juju; but if he wants to do business abroad, he must comply with the terms on which business is done. Rakovsky, head of the Soviet Mission in London, tried to neutralize the effect of the Trades Unions' declaration by explaining that they had no official status; and coming straight to the point, he pleaded for a loan, at the same time carefully pointing out that the bankers' terms were quite impossible; they constituted an impermissible interference with Russia's internal affairs; and, of course, no private property could be restored, though it might, perhaps, be leased to its former owners. The effect of these speeches and communications is in no way mitigated by the recent report of the jamboree at Moscow's Propaganda University which accompanied the sending forth of a fresh batch of Communist agents specially trained to foment revolution in Central Asia and India.

So now we all know exactly what to expect of the Soviet Mission in London and the sooner it gets back to Russia and stops wasting the time of Foreign Office clerks the better. Except for barren recognition, there is clearly nothing to hope of relations between Great Britain and the Soviet; and we should not be surprised if Mr. Ramsay MacDonald were beginning to be sorry that he was ever deluded into thinking otherwise, just as this paper is sorry. Yet there was a time when the evidence appeared at least very strong that the Soviet mind was changing; and had Lenin lived, it is possible that something might have been done to revive Russian credit in England. But with men like Trotsky, Zinovieff and Chicherin dealings are impossible. The issue is very clear, it did not really need the bankers' memorandum to explain it. "Credit" is only based on confidence, and if the Soviet wants to borrow money, it must convince lenders that they can trust it.

OFFICERS' PIRACY INSURANCE

May 3.

THE information which Reuter cabled from Hongkong on April 26 regarding the scheme of insurance of ships' officers against piracy inaugurated by the Hongkong Government has now been supplemented by the receipt of the Government Notice (No. 223) promulgating the scheme. The Notice reads as follows:—

> It is hereby notified for general information that grants will be made by Government in the event of the death or disablement of officers of ships on the Hongkong register by reason of piratical attacks, provided that, in no case will a grant be made unless Government is satisfied that the Piracy Regulations have been properly observed.
> In the event of death the equivalent of two years' actual pay will be credited to the estate of the deceased, and in case of disablement an allowance equivalent to the actual rate of wages of the injured officer will be paid so long as he is certified by a Government Medical Officer to be unfit to perform his duties, up to a maximum period of one year. . . . .

This is one of those regulations which everyone must hope never will need to be brought into operation, providing, as it does, for an eventuality which inevitably must spell bloodshed and suffering if it materializes. None the less, it constitutes a just provision and one that is absolutely necessary. The officers have been clamouring, and understandably so, for some such scheme for months, and its inauguration should dispel the dissatisfaction on this matter that has been so prevalent. A point worthy of notice is that while the Hongkong Government shoulders all of the financial responsibility of this particular scheme, it is made clear that the shipowner is by no means absolved from the inception of something on similar lines. Opinion among shipowners on this point is stated to be somewhat divergent, for while some are said to be definitely opposed to the payment of any insurance premia on behalf of their officers, on the ground that in paying taxes they pay for adequate protection, others are inclined to insure their officers. We know of one firm which already has each of its officers insured against the effects of piracy to a large extent, the premium being $360 a year for each officer and the insurance being effected with one of the biggest insurance concerns in the Far East. The clause in the Government scheme to the effect that in no case will a grant be made unless the Government is satisfied that the Piracy Regulations have properly been observed leaves a loophole for the Government, though it perhaps is uncharitable of us to say so. In the event of a piratical attack, it is conceivable that, owing to force of circumstances, the Regulations will be either disregarded or wrongly construed by some one on board, perhaps without serious consequences; such things have happened before and are likely to happen again. Let us hope that the Regulation means that if a master or an officer gets killed or wounded in repelling a piratical attack and it is afterwards proved that he personally complied with the Regulations to the best of his ability and opportunity, the grant will not be withheld.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Singapore Base

By this time most members of the British national societies will have received a circular asking their views on the question of the Singapore base—whether they are in favour of Great Britain proceeding with it or not and why they hold their particular opinions. The Navy League has been instrumental in securing the widespread publicity which the circular thus receives, and in doing so it has done a courageous and admirable piece of work. People who have lived out in the Far East and travelled its trade routes may be expected to envisage the question better than the man who has never been outside Europe and their opinion, whichever way it may go, deserves consideration from the authorities at Home. We trust, in the circumstances, that the circular will not be cast aside, but that a full and free expression of opinion may be given. While it is not our wish to attempt to influence opinion on the matter, we may point to one or two of the facts of the case and above all suggest that people answering the question may hold themselves free from all sentimentality. There must be none of that latter quality when discussing any military question which this undoubtedly is, but we must consider all the possibilities. The first point to remember is how the different trade routes in the East radiate from Singapore, and then to realize the position of neutrals in the Great War, how, for instance, Dutch and Norwegian steamers were sunk. We may some day find ourselves neutrals with an unscrupulous belligerent in these waters who will carry out the same policy, but he will do so only if we have no means of protection. With our Fleet based on Singapore he would not dare to do so, and our ships would sail the oceans free. We shall, doubtless, be asked who are the Powers likely to be engaged in such a war, and to this the reply is that any military authority who does not daily take into his calculations the "hypothetical enemy" will find himself sooner or later in a very bad way. "Hypothetical enemies" in the Far East have been freely and openly discussed by all the authorities in the world, and we need not go into that aspect any more, except in one respect. Japan—one of the category—is said to be down and out because of the unhappy earthquake disaster, but it is quite arguable that this theory is only on a par with that of the economists who said that a European war could not last longer than three months because the nations would be bankrupt. Let us remember 1914-18 in this respect. There is one other point, the oil in the Dutch Indies, which it is believed any nation engaged in a Pacific war would hasten to seize. If neutral and with a base at Singapore, Great Britain could forbid such a raid, but without a fleet there she would be impotent. The fact is, according to certain of the authorities, that with a base she could localize a conflict, while without it there might readily be another world conflagration, worse than the last, for not only Asia but Europe would be involved in it. The other point of view is that by fortifying Singapore we are simply provoking the animosity of other nations, and that is not to be ignored. Great Britain, however, in the past has not benefited by any policy of unpreparedness, and has the time come to try it again? It is a matter of opinion, just as much as the correctness of the assumptions stated above must be.

China Defaulting

A few weeks ago we were informed that the London Stock Exchange had decided not to quote certain Chinese securities owing to China's persistent refusal to pay interest on the German issue of the Hukuang Railway loan and default on certain other loans. "The Times" of a little before that date gives some interesting details of the default on the two issues of what are technically known as Chinese Eight per Cent. Sterling Treasury Notes. The larger of the two, that issued originally to Vickers, Limited, consists of an outstanding principal of £1,803,200 on which no interest has been forthcoming since April, 1922. The other issue, known as the Marconi Loan, amounts to £600,000, on which default has existed as and from August, 1921. The question of redemption will also arise shortly as the first drawing on the Marconi Notes is due to take place in August next, and the first drawing on the Vickers Notes should occur in October, 1925. "The Times" goes on to argue that the preliminary conference to discuss matters relating to the 2½ per cent. surtax, which China is very anxious to have called, would be a suitable time "to press home the need for a settlement of the claims of the noteholders." We sincerely hope that nothing of the kind will be done. Sir John Jordan, it will be recalled, recently protested strongly against any such idea. In the first place the time has not nearly come to discuss the surtax at all, nor will it until there is convincing evidence that the Government in Peking represents the country. In the second place, when the surtax is imposed it should be for something that will really benefit the country (Washington mentioned the abolition of likin) not for a mere liquidation of unsecured debts.

America's Mixed Population

In his letter, which appears to-day, our correspondent in San Francisco draws attention to the fact that it was probably not until the Great War that America actually woke up to the very mixed population that make up her one and one-tenth millions. The awakeningg came when Americans were forced to the realization that the country, "instead of being a homogeneous whole, was a jumbled-up mass of undigested racial material." Indeed, he quotes from an American writer who says that it was learned at that time that the country was no longer Anglo-Saxon nor Protestant, and that in some localities there were indications that it might not continue to be English-speaking. This may be a little far-fetched, but there can be no doubt that the population of America is made up of all sorts and conditions of men, many of them from the undesirable classes that came into the country in swarms about ten years or more ago when unlimited immigration was the advocated order of the day. One thing is certain, that, while native Americans have not intermarried to any great extent with these undesirable newcomers, in the long run intermixture is almost inevitable. Social and legal restrictions of miscegenation will postpone the evil day, but when two races live side by side they will eventually amalgamate. Propinquity leads to miscegenation. We believe that among Americans of the true type the danger is regarded with considerable alarm. It is not merely a matter of stopping immigration, however, because there are already in America large bodies of people who are racially incompatible with native Americans, and who are rapidly replacing the latter. Moreover, the death-rate in America continues to increase while the birth-rate continues to decline, and statistics show that the promotion of the true Americans into an upper class, resting upon strata of aliens of lower standards, is having the effect of reducing the native American birth-rate. In 1917 the literacy test was passed over President Wilson's veto by a vote of 287 to 106 in Congress, and a vote of 62 to 19 in the Senate. The present law was passed by a vote of 276 to 33 in the House and 78 to 1 in the Senate. But the difficulty, it appears, is not in passing such legislation when once before Congress, but in formulating the law, for there are large interests concerned not only in opposing further restrictions but in breaking down and making unpopular existing laws.

An Act of Indemnity

The case reported elsewhere in this issue in which Mr. Eric Moller consented to judgment for the sum of Tls. 157,000 cannot but call for sympathy for the unfortunate debtor, who is one of that small coterie of China Coast shipowners whose vessels were requisitioned by the Hongkong Government during the period immediately preceding and following the Armistice. It will be remembered that in respect of the requisitioning the owners were awarded tramp Blue-book rates, and that, while operating the ships for and on behalf of the Hongkong Government, meant to the owners the loss of many thousands of dollars, the Hongkong Government, from their commercial interest in the ships, benefiting to the extent of more than two million dollars. The owners (not unnaturally, it would seem) asked for all or some of this money to cover their own proved losses and to give them some of the profits which, without requisition, would wholly have been theirs. The Hongkong Government countered and countered, and while countering passed an Indemnity Ordinance which completely and for ever precluded the owners from even suing for the money. In the circumstances one can understand and appreciate the remark of counsel for the debtor who, in stating that his client consented to judgment, remarked that his client "would not, if he could, pass an Act of Indemnity."

THE CHINA

Architects and Builders Compendium

CHINA is one of the few countries in the world where no attempt has been made to collect and classify in book form the mass of local information that should be at the elbow of every architect, builder, civil engineer, and prospective or present house or land owner. The demand for such a work has been increasingly felt for a number of years, and the Compendium now published will meet that demand.

Shanghai, in common with many other Treaty Ports of China, is under divided control—International, French and Chinese. In the International Settlement there is a number of Consulates at which land may be registered at varying fees and under numerous regulations. The Compendium classifies these fees and regulations and also contains a mine of information relating to water, gas and electricity rates, costs of local material and labour, etc., that not only every architect must possess, but that is necessary to every prospective landlord and house owner.

Part I.—General Information connected with Land Property and Buildings:—

- MUNICIPAL ASSESSMENT SCHEDULES.
- NOTES ON LAND REGISTRATION AND PURCHASE IN SHANGHAI.
- INFORMATION AS TO TAXES AND MUNICIPAL COUNCIL FEES.
- CHARGES OF WATERWORKS CO., TELEPHONE CO., AND ELECTRIC LIGHT DEPT.
- CONSULAR FEES.
- SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL BUILDING RULES.
- ARCHITECTS' CHARGES AND SURVEYORS' CHARGES.
- BUILDING CONTRACT FORMS, LEASE FORMS, MORTGAGE FORMS.
- LAND REGULATIONS, PLANS OF SHANGHAI.

Part II.—Technical Information for Architects, Builders and Civil Engineers:—

- MEMORANDA AS TO STRENGTH, WEIGHT AND PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS.
- PRICE LIST OF BUILDING MATERIALS AND LABOUR.
- INFORMATION AS TO LOCAL CONDITIONS (i.e., SOIL, WATER, ETC.)
- REQUIREMENTS AND USEFUL DATA FOR ESTIMATING COST OF BUILDINGS.
- NOTES ON ARTESIAN WELLS, ETC.

Part III.—A Directory containing:—

- LIST OF ARCHITECTS AND CONSULTING ENGINEERS IN SHANGHAI.
- LIST OF ARCHITECTS AND CONSULTING ENGINEERS IN OUTPORTS.
- LIST OF BUILDING CONTRACTORS IN SHANGHAI.
- LIST OF BUILDING CONTRACTORS IN OUTPORTS.

Part IV.—Catalogue of Building Material, etc.

- ALPHABETICAL INDEX OF ADVERTISERS.
- CLASSIFIED INDEX OF GOODS ADVERTISED.
- ADVERTISEMENTS OF BUILDING MATERIALS AND SUPPLIES CLASSIFIED IN SECTIONS.

In addition to the above, the Compendium also contains

Maps of Shanghai and Hankow.

The subscription to the Compendium is TEN DOLLARS MEX. Future editions will be supplied at FIVE DOLLARS per copy provided that the previous edition is returned.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

THE ASSAULT ON MR. CAMPBELL ON THE PEKING CITY WALL

Symptom of Grave State of Feeling: The Growing Anti-Foreignism of the Element that Has Climbed into Power on the Wreck of Government in China

From Rodney Gilbert

Peking, Apr. 24.

Conditions in this country are rapidly coming to the point where it will be impossible for foreigners to reside anywhere but in fortified and garrisoned ports available to foreign gunboats. The only alternative to such a state of things within the next few years will be a punitive war. It is very doubtful indeed whether an international punitive campaign in China will be possible even within the next few years, so foreign residents throughout China might as well be prepared to pack up and leave or take up their residence in concentrated communities in fortified ports. "The North China Standard," an official Japanese organ published in Peking which voices the sanest and soundest editorial opinions expressed in this community, this morning remarks: "That an anti-foreign spirit is growing in China is now generally recognized by all observers except a few foreigners who, for reasons of their own, are still shutting their eyes to even the strongest evidence," and in another sentence, ". . . .—the authorities themselves . . . . are prepared to go to any length to prevent justice from being done." Neither the writer, in his opening remarks, nor the editor of the "Standard," in his leader, is inspired by panic or bilicusness but has reached these conclusions, as the majority of foreigners in Peking have, from observation not only of incidents and the official attitude towards them but of the temper of the people in the streets as well.

THE ATTACK ON THE WALL.

The particular incident which has brought these impressions to the surface is the Campbell incident. According to the Legation Quarter regulations, which have been on paper for a score of years, but have been very loosely applied, no Chinese soldier in uniform, whether armed or unarmed, is allowed in the Legation Quarter except as one of the retinue of a high Chinese official calling at a Legation. Thanks to the Diplomatic Body's time-honoured policy of letting everything slide, this rule is daily broken by hundreds of soldiers who saunter about the Legation Quarter on no particular errand and whose presence in the Quarter is never challenged. The section of the city wall which bounds the Legation Quarter, and which has been used for many years as a promenade by foreigners, is also forbidden by another ancient regulation to Chinese of the lower classes and in actual practice all Chinese have been excluded except when special permission was given for one reason or another.

The Sunday before last a very stalwart ruffian in uniform, by the name of Li, who is one of the Ministry of War guards, after assaulting two other foreigners, entered the Legation Quarter where he had no business to be, mounted the wall, where again he had no business to be, and set out to pick a fight with a foreigner. His first encounter was with Mr. A. K. Campbell, a British commercial traveller. Mr. Campbell is not only a big man in excellent physical condition but an expert amateur boxer as well, so the truculent one was knocked down in the first encounter. Mr. Campbell, instead of finishing a good job, strolled on, with the idea that the incident was closed, but the soldier pulled himself together and with a bag of copper coins assaulted Mr. Campbell from the rear, beating him over the face and head. After this the struggle was naturally much in the soldier's favour and there is no doubt that he would have made an murderous end of it if an American non-commissioned officer and two of the Legation Quarter's Chinese police had not interfered and overpowered the ruffian. He was taken to the Legation Quarter police station and the Legations were notified.

A WISE RETENTION.

The ordinary practice, of course, would be to turn the man over to the Chinese authorities at once, but under existing conditions this would simply mean that he would be made a hero among his fellows and that if his punishment were insisted upon he would be allowed to disappear or be transferred to some other post where he would be given preferential treatment. At the time of this affair Dr. Wellington Koo was still unable to arrange with the military for a proper trial of the Colonel Ch'en, brother of a presidential concubine, who made such a brutal assault upon Mr. Bessel at Fengtai, so it was rightly assumed that unless the Government were first pledged to try this man who had deliberately assaulted a foreigner in the Legation Quarter there was not the slightest chance that he would receive any punishment.

The prisoner was therefore held for six days, not because the Legations had any desire to retain such a guest but simply because the military could not be brought to promise that treaty stipulations would be recognized and that he would be tried before foreign official witnesses. That it took six days to exact such pledges is sufficient evidence of the official attitude towards foreigners and towards China's treaty obligations. During the period of his incarceration the prisoner certainly showed no signs of meekness or repentance. He remained truculent and bellicose. Neither was he in any degree insane. He had set out with a perfectly clear mind to help China put the foreigner in his place. For this reason the Chinese press has espoused his cause, has made a martyr of him and is daily launching the most vituperative attacks upon foreigners in general and the British in particular.

OUTRAGEOUS RESOLUTIONS.

To cap the whole affair, a number of Parliamentarians and radicals—nearly a hundred all told—held a meeting in the Central Park on Tuesday and passed a series of resolutions which merit reproduction in full. It is hard to believe that supposedly rational articulate bipeds could in conference initiate and endorse such nonsense, but the Chinese reports of this valuable meeting were practical identical in all Chinese papers yesterday.

The resolutions were as follows:

(1) That the British Minister should tender an apology to the Waichiaopu for his action in refusing to surrender the Chinese soldier to the Chinese authorities for several days, which is a grave insult to China; (2) That all famous places in the British concessions in China should be thrown open to Chinese; (3) That the British Minister undertake to offer no similar insult to China in the future; (4) That the Government should not defer to the wishes of the British Minister to in[illegible] punishment on the [illegible] of Li, a telegram should be addressed to the Lung Ch'ih Pa[illegible] and those present at the meeting [illegible] the British Minister; [illegible] the British Minister should be [illegible] forth the matter [illegible] and has brow[illegible] Chinese soldier [illegible] that the Chinese people may realize the majority of the Russian [illegible] That the Waichiaopu be directed to demand the surrender of the Russian who [illegible] with the Chinese soldier and that the stage be cleared out to [illegible] as to the soldier; (6) That in case the above demands fail of attainment the Chinese Government should put up the signboard "English men and dogs not allowed" at various places of historical and scenic interest.

It is not easy to make adequate comment upon this document. Each reader can do that for himself, but since the writer has made more than an ordinary effort for some years to think in the Chinese way and to follow the workings of the Chinese mind, a few interpretations of the Chinese attitude towards this case may be acceptable.

THE NEW CLASS IN POWER.

If the trend of thought revealed in this document were limited to an isolated group of cranks it would be easy to find it amusing and forget it; but it isn't limited to any such group. It expresses the feelings of a vast majority of those Chinese who can read newspapers and form opinions of their own. It is evidence of a movement in all the upper strata of Chinese society which is much more dangerous than the Boxer movement ever could have been. It is not inspired by patriotism, in the ordinary sense of the word, but is the outgrowth of cowardice and cowardly resentment. The most dangerous man in society anywhere is the coward, accustomed to cringe and petition, who finds himself immune from control and in a positions to swagger and swank and play the bully. The average Chinese whom one meets in ordinary life is not of this ilk. He is a gentleman whether he happens to be up or down. But the ruling caste which has been thrown to the suface during the political turmoil of the last 10 or 15 years is made up almost wholly of truculent cowards, swaggering misfits who, in their high positions, become more and more insistent upon the preservation of their dignity and their "rights," the more they make a hopeless mess of their country and forfeit all rights. The man who is conscious of his inferiority and of the mistakes which he makes through sheer incompetence is always the most vociferous champion of the innate equality of all mankind and the most earnest advocate of a sentimental regard for the unfit, the degenerate, the lazy, the weak-minded, and all the other discards of civilization.

Fear is the demon which inspires such documents, and it is a demon which is bound to inspire much more serious demonstrations unless it is checked. Fear is the whole inspiration of the new Chauvinism which has sprung up in China during the past few years and has been fostered by a limited group of intellectual cowards in the first instance and by the official caste, in the second place, because it diverts attention from officialdom and turns the tide of discontent against the foreigner, in much the same way that the Manchu Court in 1900 turned an anti-dynastic movement into an anti-foreign movement.

The present movement is much more significant than the Boxer movement for several good reasons. In 1900 the Chinese had many legitimate grounds for complaint against the foreigner. China had then a working Government which was being heavily imposed upon by many Powers greedily seeking concessions and busily nibbling away at China's territories and her "sovereign rights."

Under real provocation the only elements which responded in 1900 to the anti-foreign call were the downtrodden and exasperated peasantry of a few northern provinces and the most degenerate element in the worn-out Manchu aristocracy. Atrocities were of course perpetrated, and also counter-atrocities, but there are few foreigners of long residence in China who have not felt for many years past that the Boxers were in some degree supporting abstract justice and who have not therefore been inclined to lighten the huge burden of debt imposed upon China as indemnity for the Boxer enterprises. The situation now is entirely different. What purports to be the intellectual element and the ruling element in China is starting a new anti-foreign movement on the basis of concessions granted by foreigners, of treaties violated by Chinese, of a collapse of Chinese discipline in both political and military life, and of the country's inability to live up to her obligations, political, financial or moral. The worse things get, the more sovereign rights the Chauvinists unearth.

CHINA A CONFESSED FAILURE.

The man who assaults a foreigner now under provocation or in a state of temporary insanity is a poor simpleton who may easily be done away with; but the Chinese who attacks a foreigner without provocation, preferably in a settlement or a delimited Quarter, is a national hero and, if punished, a national martyr. Every conciliatory step taken by the Legations is interpreted by the Chinese of this feather-brained Chauvinistic school as a sign of relaxed discipline and is inevitably followed by trumpet calls sounding the "charge" throughout all the ranks of the official unfit. If Chinese soldiers can stroll through the Legation Quarter and can edge foreigners into the gutter unchallenged, the Chauvinists have a gleeful war-dance and decide that Chinese ought to walk on the Legation Quarter's section of the wall. The diplomats meet about this, disagree because someone has an arms sale in view, and decide to be deaf, dumb and blind, so the Chinese walk the wall and belabour foreigners with bags of coppers as a pastime. If one of them should happen to be interrupted in such festive horseplay, such interruption would of course constitute a breach of China's sovereign rights. If a particularly audacious soldier were to sneak into the British Legation and sand-bag a British Minister when he was looking at his lilacs, the incident would prompt the majority of China's intellectuals to demand the abolition of extraterritoriality on the spot and, if it were not granted, the Chinese press as a body would advocate a British boycott.

The whole difficulty of course is that the major nations of the world have for some years been united in their determination to give China a square deal and an opportunity to pull herself together. For this China was grateful until she discovered that the capacity for pulling China together did not exist within the nation. China is a failure but not a confessed failure. Rather than confess failure and incompetency China will strut and swagger and turn criminal. She has now turned criminal, as frankly and openly as ever a bank defaulter turned safe-blower, and she nurses precisely the same grudge against the world at large that the criminal cherishes against the police department that tracks him down.

DEGENERATE AND CRIMINAL.

The mental attitude of the people who met in the Central Park and drafted their seemingly asinine resolutions is precisely that of any group of degenerate criminal outcasts in any of the world's great slums. It is nothing to laugh at; it is no funnier than the Bolshevik doctrine of the rule of the unfit which Lenin and Trotsky brought back into Russia in 1917. It is dangerously criminal, but since it serves to divert Chinese attention from the hell that the present rulers are making of China it is only natural that the present rulers will boost it, as the Imperial Court did in 1900, and that they will then repudiate the whole performance when the big guns begin to bark, as the Manchus tried to do in 1901.

The writer has deplored in all previous articles every suggestion of intervention, not so much because conditions did not indicate intervention as because political conditions in the Occident did not seem to warrant such action. Conditions here do not yet warrant united action. There are still elements within the Legation Quarter in Peking that would rather compromise with Chinese anarchy in the hope of extracting a little profit from turmoil than undertake the protection of their arms-smuggling, opium purveying nationals. There are Ministers in Peking whose nationals have less vested interests in China than the rental and upkeep of their Legations but who, in the hope of winning Chinese tolerance for such strange enterprises as their few nationals promote, will always disrupt a diplomatic meeting. When they have not the "face" to appear in person and make personal objections, they write letters to the Doyen, stating what they will or will not agree to.

BEYOND REDEMPTION.

It is in the attitude of such Powers as these that the Chinese Chauvinists find their joy and strength. It was from such an attitude on the part of Soviet Russia that they hoped to derive the courage to give us all a generous smack in the face. If it had not been for Karakhan's inexperience and uppishness we might already have been roosting on our roof-trees supplying target practice for the Metropolitan Guards and the Christian Army.

Things have now gone so far, largely through the inability of the Legations to act together and apply the tradition that the cure in time saves nine, that we can only look forward to intervention as a cure of any sort. A certain number of our chers confrères will regret interference with their profitable game of stirring the puddle when such intervention comes. The Chinese will bluster and then submit to it quietly and pay the price. They would rather do that than attempt to check their own officials. The Russians will expend unlimited current in a great variety of wave lengths to demonstrate by wireless that the capitalistic Powers are again imposing upon Asia.

THE ANGLO-SAXON....

In the meanwhile this frightful hybrid, mixed-breed English language of ours is the most terrible enemy to Chinese officialdom that the Chinese Chauvinist has to face. He does not fear the French champion of the Gold Franc nor the Japanese claimant for security for the Three Bank Nishihara loans. But he is afraid of the tolerant, patient, good-natured, but ever-insistent Anglo-Saxon, whose sympathy and charity never outrun his sense of justice and who makes no allowance whatever for freakish conceptions of sovereign rights. No peoples in China used to be so assiduously cultivated and are now so well hated as the British and Americans. The way to get along with a Chinese official of the modern school is to make believe that he has deceived you. Some races find this qualification a light burden. Most of us who happen to speak English from birth find it rather difficult. The whole truth is that we cannot play the game of Oriental make-believe without losing heavily because we are not fitted for it and we had better drop it. That "honesty is the best policy" is such an ancient truism that it will probably be painful in repetition to most readers, but it does happen to apply with peculiar force to our several relations with China. Plain speaking seems to be the only possible first recourse and, if vernacular English still fails to carry weight in the Far East, we shall have to try the traditional Nordic heavy hand.

Mr. Campbell's Assailant to be Tried by Tahsing Magistrate

Peking, Apr. 25.

The forthcoming trial of the Chinese soldier who assaulted a British merchant on the wall overlooking the Legation Quarter and an American citizen and an Italian subject outside the Quarter, has been given consideration by the Chinese judicial authorities since the Minister of Foreign Affairs gave the assurance that the man would be tried by a civil court with a foreign official observer present. Chinese official circles point out that their consideration was directed solely to the question of the application of treaty rights to new Chinese courts and that there has never been any thought of thwarting the foreigners in connexion with the trial of the soldier.

More than one old treaty give foreigners the right to have official observers present in cases in which Chinese are defendants and the complainants are foreigners, foreigners having the right to protest if the penalty inflicted is not deemed sufficient to meet the ends of justice. Since these treaties were enacted the new Chinese judicial system has not been brought into effect, with the establishment of more modern courts. Chinese officials are of opinion that the treaty provisions referred to do not apply to the new courts, whereas the foreign authorities see no reason for not continuing to apply the treaties to all Chinese courts.

CONSTITUTION OF HSIEN COURTS.

The first intention was that the soldier Li should be tried by the Procurate Court, but when the case was referred to the Minister of Justice the latter realized that if this procedure were allowed it would establish a precedent in favour of the foreign view. The Ministry of Justice then decided that Li should be tried by the Tahsing Magistrate.

There are 24 hsiens in the Metropolitan area, and the Magistrates in 22 have retained their judicial functions, while the Magistrates of the Tahsing and Wenpong districts, inside the city wall, have not exercised such functions since the establishment of the new judicial system. It seems to be an open question whether or not they have legally lost their status as judicial [illegible]: hence the Chinese [illegible]ering to the trial of [illegible] a Special Court will [illegible]ed under the Tahsing [illegible] Trial by the Tahsing [illegible] would not limit the [illegible] to sentence, for Magistrates functioning under the old system have unlimited authority in that respect, subject to appeal to the nearest High Court.

In the case of Colonel Chen, who is to be retried for his part in the Bessel outrage, it is understood that a special court martial will be convened at Fengtai. The report that Colonel Chen had fled from Taku is officially denied. Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CHEFOO-WEIHSIEN "RAILWAY"

Post for Its Director At Last on a Real Railway

Peking, Apr. 30.

Mr. Chu Ting-chi, director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway, has resigned. It is reported that he will be succeeded by Mr. Chow Teh-san, director of the Chefoo-Weihsien line.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

 We do not know what Mr. Chow's natural capacity may be; but his practical experience for the Kiaochou railway is small if he have none of railway work but what he has gained on the so-called Chefoo-Weihsien "line." For there is no such railway, there never has been and so far as we know there are no prospects of one. A few years ago we believe the merchants of Chefoo did buy a few sleepers, but we have never heard that the "line" got further than that. There is a road from Chefoo to Weihsien, somewhat "of sorts" on which motor cars run. That is all. To have a "director" of such a "line" is a glaring example of Chinese politicians' delight in shams and scandalous waste of public money.—Ed.

FRESH BANDIT OUTRAGES IN S. E HUNAN

The Sack of Lanshan: Post Office and Mission Premises Looted: Whole Countryside Deserted: Brigands' Fiendish Cruelty: Hunan Getting Ready to Resist Northern Annexation

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chenchow, Hu., Apr. 19.

Within the past few months the city of Lanshan in southern Hunan has suffered from repeated attacks by bandits.. The gates have been barred ten or more days at a time, and the people within the city have kept watch night and day. Once at least the timely arrival of some of Shen Hung-yin's army saved the city from being robbed.

Recently Shen's soldiers left the city and within a short time afterward the bandits forced their way in again. The Chinese Post Office was sacked. That is all the news which has come through, for since then the city has been cut off from the outside. Without doubt the city suffered the same or a worse fate than did Kiaho a few months ago. We are expecting word to leak through any day that the entire city of Lanshan has been looted by these outlaws. Of course the unprotected country districts around Lanshan have long since been robbed. The fields are not under cultivation for there are no cattle to plow them, and the people dare not leave their hiding places and return to their devastated homes. The Lansham district usually produces large quantities of excellent rice, and is able to transport considerable quantities to other less favoured districts. But under present conditions there is sure to be a great shortage of food throughout this entire district.

LEADER A SHANGHAI LAW STUDENT.

Bandits operating in the Lanshan, Kiaho and Ningyuan districts are under Chen Yang-te, a native of Lanshan. He is a young man not much over 30. For a number of years he studied law at a Shanghai law school. He also acquired some knowledge of the English language at Changsha. He is considered quite well educated. Several years ago he lived in Chenchow with his family. Although he tried to find employment that suited him he was unsuccessful and he and his family were almost reduced to poverty. He took his family to Lanshan, and he has since become the head of the bandits. Under him are 18 other robber leaders who are more or less subservient to him. Their headquarters are on a high mountain quite central to the three cities named above. From his central locality the bandits are within easy reach of any of these cities and the surrounding districts. About one half of these bandit chiefs are Lanshan men.

HUNDREDS OF PEOPLE BUTCHERED.

In the Kiaho district alone, hundreds of country people have been cruelly butchered with knives, whole villages have been wiped out, the people killed or fled. Some time ago when the Kiaho was looted, the mayor and other city officials, together with about 100 people of whom about 40 were young girls, were carried to the hills. Those women and girls of 12 years and over who were not able to flee from the city before the bandits entered suffered unmentionable outrages. All the shops, homes, the Chinese Post Office and the American Presbyterian Mission chapel and day school were looted. The evanglist's son and the teacher of the mission school were among those taken to the hills and held there until hundreds of dollars for their ransom was paid. Even the girls in the Mission school were outraged by these fiends. Not a few of the people were killed.

Last year when Col. Liao Sing-chia was in charge of the Kiaho-Lanshan-Ningyuan district he executed many bandits and drove the rest to cover. The people long for the return of Col. Liao or an equally strong and brave leader. While Col. Liao was stationed in this district, Mr. I Kuang-ling was mayor of Kiaho and co-operated with the military authorities in ridding the district of outlaws. When Col. Liao was appointed the Mayor also left. The people are hoping that Mayor I Kuang-ling return.

At present Mr. Li Yu is mayor of Kiaho. He is from Ningyuan, the hsien bordering Kiaho. Mayor Li does not dare to do anything contrary to the wishes of the bandits, for these same outlaws are also abroad in the Ningyuan district. If Mayor Li should withstand them, they doubtless would attack and possibly kill his family and relations, and rob him of all his possessions. It is imperative that no local man act as mayor.

COWARDLY GARRISON COMMANDER.

The military protection of the Kiaho district has been left to Li Yong-che, a local man, who has about 300 soldiers under him. of whom about two-thirds are Kiaho men. For one reason or another they do not try to drive out the bandits. Some of Shen Hung-ying's troops from Kuangsi Province are still about in the Kiaho-Lanshan district. Whenever Shen's soldiers come to Kiaho the above-mentioned Li and his local forces flee, for they are afraid Shen's men may take their rifles, for rifles are none too plentful in Shen's army. Just prior to Kiaho being looted by the bandits it was rumoured that Shen's forces were marching toward the city. Li and his men fled, but instead of Shen the bandits came and sacked the city. After the bandits left, Li returned. A few days ago Shen's forces passed through Kiaho, and Li and his "braves" fled again. Afted Shen's men are gone and if Li does not return in time, the bandits may take advantage of this opportunity to rob the city again.

There are considerable numbers of soldiers stationed in this and other cities of southern Hunan, while the bandit-infested districts where they are needed remain unprotected. It seems strange that the military and provincial authorities do not send a strong force to these disturbed districts which have suffered so dreadfully. A well staffed and fairly well equipped army of 500 or more men could force these bandits out of their nefarious business within a short time. Although the bandits number thousands they have very few rifles. But very few good soldiers could put them to rout.

GETTING READY TO RESIST WU PEI-FU.

During the past few days there has been a considerable shifting of troops in the southeastern part of the province. Some of them who have been quartered in this city throughout the winter and spring, have moved northward to Leiyang. It is rumoured that the Governor's firm stand against Wu Pei-fu's demand that Hunan cease to regard itself as independant is responsible for this movement of the troops. In the event of Gen. Wu Pei-fu sending an army against Changsha these troops might help to put up a stiff fight. The troops which were at Ichang, on the Hunan-Kuangtung border have also been transferred. It is said that Yunnan troops from Kuangtung are coming to take their place.

BANDITS IN SOUTH CHINA

American Catholic Priests Attacked and Robbed of all Belongings

Hongkong, May 1.

Two American priests, Father Ford and Father Gleason, in the company of several Chinese Catholics, while crossing the frontier of the French concession of Kwangchowwan en route to the interior, were attacked by bandits who seized the entire party's money and belongings and captured two Chinese women. The French authorities later secured the release of the captives and the return of some of the luggage.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TAGORE IN PEKING

The Devout and the Irreverent

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Apr. 24.

It is probably no very humiliating matter to confess that most of us have not read more than casual sparks from Sir Rabindranath Tagore's forge. It would mean eternal immersion in the everlasting slough to confess any such thing in Peking at the moment, however. Apart from all else the various pronunciations of the holy name which are in vulgar use here even among the devotees, would probably make the most superficial Anglo-Indian squirm in horror.

To be very thoroughly condemned while he is about it the writer must admit that he has never read Tagore at all and has only the vaguest possible conception of his importance; but no one who has glanced over the following description of the Indian savant, which appeared in our local "Far Eastern Times," can fail to be moved by what Harvard used to describe as intellectual curiosity. Life is so dull to most of the hard cases in this case-hardened community that when a man comes along with sparkling eyebrows, straight aquiline noses and the beloved patriarchal manner, we smash our "w and s" glasses together with our equanimity on the alleged mahogany barrier and rush out to get a new thrill. By way of showing what really moves Peking to action, the following quotation from the "Far Eastern Times" (front page, 2nd column) is attached:—

An enthusiastic reception was accorded Sir Rabindranath Tagore, the world famous Indian writer, poet and philosopher, at the Chien Men station yesterday evening, by more than two hundred students of Nankai and Tsing Hwa, as well as by a large gathering of his own countrymen, upon his arrival from Tsinan, to deliver a series of lectures here.

Dressed in flowing brown robes or his native land and wearing the historic turban, Sir Rabindranath greeted his admirers with the same quiet reserve and warm hand clasp which have won him so many friends. He stated that he had had a most interesting trip from Shanghai stopping at Nanking, and proceeding from thence to Tsinan and on to Chufu, to visit the birthplace of Confucius. He is neither short nor tall, with the face of an assthete, deep set eyes beneath bushy white eyebrows that sparakle continually, a rather straight aquiline nose, and a flowing white beard that reaches nearly to his waist, giving him quite the appearance of a beloved patriarch.

WHAT IS A CHINA PONY?

Majority Vote to Decide in Tientsin Race Club

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, April 26.

Classification of "A" and "B" class ponies will hereafter be determined by a majority vote of the Committee of the Tientsin Race Club, is the ruling decided upon by an Extraordinary General Meeting of the Race Club held yesterday afternoon at the Tientsin Club. The adopted by-law reads: A pony, upon inspection, shall be placed in the Class to which it is elected by a majority of votes. Eligibility to race, when in doubt, to be decided by a majority in favour. In the event of equal voting the Chairman will have a casting vote.

This amendment was made retroactive to cover all classifications made to date, and, inasmuch as a record of voting has been kept, five old ponies, of the 13 originally relegated to "B" class, immediately became reinstated in "A" class. Among them are The Rambler, ex-Champions winner, Kismet, Gobi Son and Etamim.

An amendment to revert to the height limit of 14 hands was lost and the 13.3 limit was retained.

MR. J. C. Hill, assistant in the British Consulate at Amoy, has been transferred to Vladivostok with the British Commercial Mission which resumed its activities at the end of November, 1923.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS IN GORGES

The Robert Dollar a Total Loss: Pakiang Now in Deeper Water

Ichang, Apr. 26.

The water has risen rapidly, causing the steamer Pakiang, which struck the rocks below Yehtan on April 16, to become a total loss. It is reported that nothing of her can be seen.

The steamer Robert Dollar from Chungking struck the rocks at the Taipantzu Reef near Changshou on Thursday morning and sunk in a very short time. The foreign passengers were all saved, but it is feared that a number of Chinese were drowned.

The steamer Wanhsien, proceeding from Chungking, had an accident at Lochi, but it is reported that it is not serious.

The steamer Kweilee, proceeding to Hankow on Thursday morning, met with a fog above Chikiang and struck the rocks while turning to anchor. The steamer Kuling has now gone to assist her with strong pumps.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Apr. 27.

The American Legation has received a telegram from the American Consul at Chungking, who who went to the scene of the wreck of the steamer Robert Dollar, stating that the vessel was beached a mile above Changshou at 9 p.m. on the 23rd instant. The officers, crew, and passengers, both Chinese and foreign, were saved, and the cargo has been salved. The steamer is a total loss. The U.S.S. Monacacy is standing-by the wrecked vessel. The foreign passengers have since reached Ichang..

With regard to the Pakiang, it appears that the river rose seven feet in one day at Ichang. The flood water lifted the vessel and she slipped back into deepen water. She is now lying at a depth of between six and eight fathoms.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MAY DAY IN CANTON

Canton, May 1.

One hundred and seventy thousand Canton labourers paraded on Labour Day, demanding an eight-hour day. The parade was under the auspices of the Kuomintang which is also conducting a labour conference at which about 160 labour unions are represented. The conference will last five days. Mr. Liao Chung-hoi, the former Civil Governor of Kuangtung, presided at the conference while Dr. Sun Yat-sen addressed the Labour Day meeting.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

QUIET DEMONSTRATIONS IN JAPAN.

Tokio, May 1.

It is estimated that 50,000 workers participated in the demonstrations and processions on May Day which passed off without incident.

While the parade was moving to Uyeno Park at noon, a Naval balloon from Yokosuka to Kasumigaura fell down near the entrance to Hibiya Park. There were no casualties among the three occupants.—Reuter's Pacific Servicefl

Osaka, May 1.

May Day was celebrated by thousands of workers, including many women. The day passed off without incident.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRAGIC END TO KOREAN HOLIDAY OUTING

Tokio, Apr. 26.

A telegram from Seoul reports the drowning off Ryutoho of a number of Korean school children who were being taken in a launch to inspect a Japanese destroyer in port. High seas dashed the launch against the destroyer. The children fell overboard and were drowned. Rescue work was hampered by rough seas.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PRES. COOLIDGE TRYING TO DEVISE EXCLUSION BILL COMPROMISE

Urged by Some Advisers to Veto It: Leaders of Religious Thought Denouncing Congress's Offensive Action

Washington, Apr. 25.

President Coolidge is attempting to make an arrangement with respect to the exclusion of Japanese, which will satisfy those in favour of restriction, and simultaneously avoid affronting Japan.

The arrangement is the outcome of President Coolidge's recent conference with officials of the State Department, and would permit the President to sign the bill. It is reported that he is considerably disturbed with regard to the bill, which some of his advisers have urged him to veto.—Reuter's American Service.

Osaka, Apr. 25.

The immigration exclusion continues to capture public attention here. The newspapers are full of accounts of citizens' mass meetings at Kobe and elsewhere and of resolutions passed by a large number of organizations interested in international relationship. All these speeches, resolutions and editorial articles show that here is not only anger at the affront to Japan, but also disappointment at America's "departure from her traditional leadership in international peace, racial harmony and human love." Not only the Japanese themselves, but the American residents also are astar at the action of the United States Congress.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TELEGRAMS OF PROTEST TO PRESIDENT AND SENATE.

Tokio, Apr. 25.

At the extraordinary general meeting of the American Association yesterday, it was resolved that a telegram be despatched to the President and both Houses of legislature in the United States, advising the withdrawal of the Exclusion Bill.

It was also decided to send Mr Kennedy, Chairman of the Association, to the United States "with the object of instigating the anti-Japanese agitation in that country, says the Eastern News Agency.

CONGRESS'S AFFRONT TO JAPAN.

London, Apr. 26.

The Daily Telegraph's" New York correspondent says that religious leaders almost unanimously criticize Congress for affronting Japan in a "peculiarly offensive" way, and urge the members to repair the blunder speedily.

The Federal Council of Churches, representing 20,000,000 church members, has requested Congress to add a section to the Immigration Bill summoning the State Department to confer with the Japanese Government with a view to devising a method of bringing about exclusion based on mutual consideration and goodwill and postponing the operation of the exclusion lause pending the conference.—Reuter's American Service.

THE OBNOXIOUS DISCRIMINATION.

Tokio, Apr. 26.

Viscount Kentaro Kaneko, the President of the America's Friends Society, has sent a letter to Secretary of State Hughes "for consideration of the President" appealing to the latter against immigration discrimination. While we understand the necessity for restriction of the number of alien immigrants to America for its national welfare, and are willing to submit to any restrictions if equally applied, we ask for consideration of the discriminatory clause which is an important question to Japanese honour. Viscount Kaneko requests temporary postponement of the passage of the clause and the finding of a reasonable solution to the problem, satisfactory to both countries.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN-JAPANESE ARBITRATION AGREEMENT.

Washington, Apr. 26.

Ratifications of an agreement extending the Japanese American Arbitration Treaty for five years were formally exchanged at the State Department to-day.—Reuter's American Service.

London, Apr. 27.

The New York correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" states that President Coolidge has intimated very plainly that he may veto the Immigration Bill if the clause excluding Japanese is allowed to remain. He expresses the opinion that the problem may be solved and the interests of California protected by adopting some measure which would be acceptable to all parties without the danger of giving affront to any.

It is understood that President Coolidge favours placing Japan, together with the other nations, on a quota basis based on her nationals resident in the United States in 1890, which would, without discrimination, to all intents and purposes exclude Japanese coolies.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Apr. 29.

It is authoritatively stated that President Coolidge has proposed to the members of the Immigration Conference that they shall make the effective date for Japanese exclusion far enough ahead to permit negotiations for a new Gentlemen's Agreement.

Later.

Several members of the conference between the two Houses on the Immigration Bill said that they hoped that they had reached a compromise on the Japanese question which would satisfy the sentiment of the country and placate Japan.—Reuter's American Service.

PROSPECTS OF A COMPROMISE.

Washington, Apr. 30.

It is understood that President Coolidge has suggested to the joint conference of representatives of both Houses of Congress, which is discussing the immigration Bill, that operation of the provision with regard to Japanese exclusion should be postponed until July 1.

The conferees later informed the President that an agreement on this basis might be reached within 24 hours. The vote of the conference is expected to be close as several Pacific Coast Senators intend to oppose the suggestion.—Reuter's American Service.

War Talk by Large Section of Opinion Over U. S. Exclusion Legislation

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Apr. 18.

Never since the period embracing the major portion of 1920 and 1921 has there been so much talk of war—and with the United States as there unfortunately is in Japan to-day, due to the American immigration legislation. But it is extremely temperate talk in comparison with that of the 12 months preceding the calling of the Washington Conference.

Superstition is abroad that she is fated to fight and that the issue must be faced this year. The superstition which flourished in 1920 and 1921 when ugly gestures were being made on both sides of the Pacific has been resurrected again. The Japanese then believed that any year containing the figure 4 would drag the country into the vortex of war. It is pointed out that she fought China in 1894, hostilities with Russia came in 1904; war on Germany came in 1914 and now there is the immigration issue and it is 1924. The superstition is being actively contested by the more healthy-minded, but that it has received a fresh lease of life is an ugly development in a situation that is yet tense.

The United States had two serious direct issues with Japan and several indirect ones. The direct issues were the status of Japanese in America which was inextricably involved with the immigration problem and the control of the cables in the Pacific. Both have now been settled, the latter to the apparent satisfaction of both countries, the former in a manner that Japan unanimously disapproves of. The indirect issues, such as Japanese expansion in Siberia and China and the presence of American naval and military forces in the Philippines, were supposed to have been satisfactorily adjusted at the time of the Washington conference.

A DEMOCRATIC ENIGMA.

One of the unfortunate results of the dramatic change of opinion by the American Senate is that the Japanese are now inclined to the belief that the American nation, as a unit, dislike them and that the dislike is based on racial prejudice. This, of course, is not true. But America is a democracy and claims that her representative legislative institutions reflect the will of the nation. How is it possible to convince the Japanese that the representatives of the American people, in deciding to legislate against the eligibility of Japanese to enter America, even on so small a quota basis as suggested by Mr. Hughes—which would limit the number going annually to the United States to under 250—were not reflecting the wishes of the whole nation as a composite unit.

The colour question comes to the fore in Japan quicker than in America. The press insists that colour prejudice forced the issue. The contention that the note of Mr. Hanihara was responsible for the Senate reversing its original intentions is scouted and the papers retort that this was made a pretext for rushing the anti-Japanese measure.

The wonderful improvement in communications, it is pointed out, has brought nations so much closer together that plain speaking is sometimes advisable. The press declares that there has been nothing in the note of Mr Hanihara for the Senators to get offended at and that the recent exchange of notes between Great Britain and France were couched in blunter language, but did not cause anyone to say that the national dignity or the sovereign rights of either country were imperilled.

Sarcasm, with a bitter undertone of disgust and anger, runs through the warp and woof of nearly every article or statement that has been made on the matter here. Of course the authorities are extremely discreet in their utterances. The Premier, Mr. Kiyoura, in a statement to the press, took the opportunity of declaring that the phrase "grave consequences" in the Hanihara note does not mean anything even remotely resembling war. Baron Matsui also told correspondents the same thing and appealed to them to use their influence in winning the sympathy of United States people, as distinct from the politicians, for Japan's case. The sympathy of local Americans is with Japan.

THE POWER OF THE PRESS.

The trenchant editorials of powerful American papers in the Eastern states of the Union, especially the larger dailies of New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia, have been received her with much satisfaction. The hope that these powerful moulders of public opinion will yet be able to stay the legislation and that President Coolidge will veto the measure, causing the Senate to reflect again in a less passionate frame of mind, are clung to with almost pathetic confidence.

Educational associations and the Japan League of Nations Society have started a national movement for a big peace demonstration, to be held on Armistice Day this year, hoping thereby to counteract whatever insidious ideas may be held that hostilities are inevitable, believing rightly that such a state of mind should not be permitted to exist.

That the situation is tense and will continue to remain so for some time is evidenced by the comments made by organs which generally throw all their weight on the side of friendliness with all nations. Some of the most biting statements come from these.

The "Jiji," for instance, asks whether the language used by Mr Hanihara in his protest could be construed to constitute any reason for associating the protest with the Bill, and stamps the action of the House and the Senate "an open declaration of the anti-Japanese sentiment of America in the name of the American people."

The "Yuzu Shogyo," generally moderate in tone, asks whether if Mr. Hanihara presented his protest "like a beggar, bowing, fawning and flattering, such despicable and contemptible behaviour would have induced the Senate to vote in favour of Japan." Answering the question in the negative, it proceeds to tax America with insincerity and with "purposely insulting Japan."

The "Osaka Asahi," one of the most influential organs in Japan's commercial metropolis, declares that throughout the 3,000-odd years of her history, "Japan has not been treated with greater contempt," and wants to know whether the Japanese will "endure such an insult with equanimity." It then goes on to say that "despite the adverse circumstances in which Japan finds herself, now, she has always successfully surmounted national difficulties whenever confronted with them and is daring enough to grapple with any difficulties, however formidable these may be." This comment was in reply to an alleged editorial in the "Washington Post" to the effect that while "grave consequences" meant war, Japan was not in a position to fight for some years to come.

Japanese Opinion Growing Calmer

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Apr. 22.

To-day, April 22, the 200th anniversary of the birth of Emanual Kant, the famous German philosopher, has been availed of by the Japanese press in general, the bellicosely-inclined as well as the more sedate journals, to cease pratings of war and of the "iniquities" of the White race and to express fervent desires for the speedy dawn of the day when

"The war drum beats no longer and the battle flag is furled
"In the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

There is not the slightest sign of any anti-foreign feeling in Tokio at this writing, although some Japanese, level-headed and with broader visions, expressed to your correspondent a fear that such an undesirable tendency might develop. I have been walking in various parts of the city since the passing of the immigration bill and have yet to experience any unfriendly act or demonstration. Japanese friends of mine have deplored the action of the Senate, but, unlike the press, have also been ready to admit that the Hanihara note was ill-timed and worse worded and that a diplomat ought to have known that "grave consequences" (in the English or French tongue) meant, in diplomatic language, just what the Senate took it to mean.

Officialdom is generally inclined to wait and see, probably the only thing to do under the circumstances, and has intimated to the press that the hands of the Government, in effecting a workable compromise, would be considerably strengthened if jingoistic language were dispensed with by press, pulpit and platform.

INTEMPERATES TEMPERATE.

The official advice has not gone unheeded, and a meeting of Tokio ronin (this word once meant "knight errants," but has now degraded both in practice and in significance to "political strong-arm men" or what would be called in the United States "political gun-men") held yesterday was conducted in comparatively, charmingly temperate language. The meeting was held under the leadership of Mr. Matsuri Toyama, a grey beard of some 76 years, who has lived in two worlds—that of feudal Japan before the arrival of Commodore Perry when the ronin really were a species of knight errant and in the present when Japan is one of the recognized leading powers.

Originally called to protest against the recent actions of "insolent Russia" and to protest at the action of the authorities in trying to "turn the other cheek" to the Soviet, the cause for which the demonstration was at first intended was forgotten, and the immigration question soon took first, second and every place on the agenda of the meeting.

The Christian code was made a special target of attack on the ground that the discrimination practised by the United States was a defiance of every tenet and principle of Christianity which was declared to be "now stamped by the anti-Japanese discrimination as artificial and faltering. It is time to distrust the tenets of Christianity in order to make Japan safer for our posterity" went on the speaker who wound up by saying that "the descendants of Washington and Lincoln remain helpless while the law making body representing them hurls insults at us."

CALMER COUNSELS.

One of the speakers who urged calmness and magnanimity towards all Americans, especially towards those in Japan, was Mr. Usui, a well-known Jiujutsu expert who used to be Viscount Goto's bodyguard during the time the Viscount was conducting negotiations with Comrade Joffe. Viscount Goto had been threatened by several anti-Bolshevik societies and Mr. Usui followed him everywhere like his shadow.

Pointing out that Mr. Cyrus E. Woods, Japanese Ambassador to Tokio, and the American press men here were indefatigable in their efforts to acquaint the people of America, through the news papers, of the intensity of the feeling felt here, Mr. Usui insisted that every courtesy should be shown to Americans in Japan. "The Americans here are as helpless as are the Japanese in the United States," he said, "and we should treat them as friends, nay as brothers."

Only one untoward incident, connected with the passing of the exclusion act, has occurred so far, and this in Kobe where Mr. José Goyburu, Peruvian Consul, was mistaken for an American and attacked by an intoxicated workman. Mr. Goyburu was taking a walk at night when a Japanese, in the garb of a labourer, shouted "Baka" (literally "Fool," but the worst scold word in the Japanese language) and made for him. Mr. Goyburu managed to shake off the man and proceeded to the police station where he returned, accompanied by two policemen, who took the assailant into custody. The latter was still lingering in a near by bar room. That the furious editorials in the Japanese papers were the cause of the unprovoked attack was admitted by the accused. The police have, however, released the man, declaring that if Mr. Goyburu cared to prefer an action for assault he was perfectly free to do so.

LIFE PROBLEMS FIRST.

The way the Japanese papers talk one would be inclined to think that the nation is doing nothing else but talking, living and breathing the alleged insult to the country. As a matter of fact, it is doubtful if there is a large proportion even of the educated who fully realize the issue and even less who know the actual facts of the situation. The press, however, has been harping on the note that Japan has been insulted, that she has been slapped in the face, that such an indignity as has now been thrust on her she has never had since the beginning of her history. The unthinking accept the story and the specious reasoning bolstering it us, and if a few fools take leave of common-sense and sanity, the press is more to be blamed for thus misleading them. The majority of the people are more engrossed with the daily problems of life, especially as these are becoming more and more difficult.

Why does the press, instead of trying to educate the people into seeing both sides of the question and then drawing their own conclusions, on the contrary, fan passion to as high a heat as it can?

THE OTHER'S VIEWPOINT.

This does not mean that there is not a great deal to be said in favour of Japan's standpoint. The American papers themselves have said these things far better and to far greater ultimate effect than have the Japanese press. A recent editorial of the "Brooklyn Eagle," condemning the school boy like behaviour of the Senate, has been widely published and has been received with the most favourable comment. Nevertheless less, the fact remains true that the Japanese press is generally unable or doesn't want, to see both sides of a question.

Viscount Goto (then Baron), in "Japan Dissected," a book of says of Modern Japan by pro nent Japanese, wrote: "The newspapers don't represent public opinion, but only make a pretence of doing so, and don't really represent anything more than ndividual ignorance, prejudice, sunderstanding, jealousies and very, but public opinion is so itless as to agree with them and to make a show of friend liness and respect towards them, either from fear of their power from motives of self-interest. And their influence becomes greater and greater and the abuses connected with them become worse and worse."

JUNK PASSENGERS DROWNED

Japanese Cruiser Collides With Boatload of Chinese: Many Lives Lost

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, Apr. 26.

The Japanese Destroyer-Squadron which left Hankow last week was the cause of unfortunate incident on its down-river trip. Just below Huang Shihk'ang, a big Chinese barge, full of passengers was crossing the river, got in the way of the Japanese cruiser and was sunk. Although it was broad daylight, little or no attempt was made to rescue the passengers and a number were drowned. The incident has aroused no little indignation. A deputation has come up from Wusuch to Wuchang to request Tuchun Hsiao Yao-nan to look into the matter.

All classes are feeling the increased cost of living, and the teachers of the Government schools have petitioned the Provincial Assembly to raise their salaries. The police, too, have threatened to go on strike unless their pay is increased. But the Governor has pacified them by promising a rise to commence on July 1.

POOR PEOPLES' DOLLAR BANK.

In order to enable the poorer classes to save, the Wuchang Chamber of Commerce, in collusion with the Peking Chamber of Commerce, proposes to establish a new bank. It will be known as the People's Savings Bank (Kuo Ming Fu Tsu Yin Hang), and deposits as small as a single dollar will be sufficient to open an account.

WUCHANG A CENTRE OF LEARNING

"Universities" Galore: Students' Successful Strike: Violent Spring Storm

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, Hup., Apr. 19.

One of the worst storms in recently years visited this locality on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. The wind was so strong that no ferry boat could cross the river. It is said that several houses outside the city wall and on the bank of the river in Hanyang were blown down, and one man was killed by the falling ruins.

At such times, the only means of crossing the river is by finding a boatman sufficiently venturesome to risk his boat and his life in the waves by offering him a sum rather more than the usual for a passage. Not infrequently the boatman, having got his passengers into midstream, tries to take advantage of the situation by refusing to go on until they pay more money than they have already promised. During th's storm, one boatman attempted to play this trick to his cost. Having ferried his bootload nearly over the river, he stopped rowing and began to practise the usual game of extortion. His passengers satisfied his demands; but once having safely reached the bank, they promptly arrested the boatman and marched him off to the police court. It is hoped that an example will be made of him which will somewhat deter his fraternity from abusing their position in the future.

HEADMASTER EXPELLED BY STUDENTS.

Another incident shows that the students are still contriving to get the upper hand in the educational world. Two schoolboys were expelled from the Fu Shoo Chung Hsioh, which is one of the Chinese Middle Schools run in connexion with the Normal University. The reason of their expulsion was that the Headmaster, Mr. Lin, had received letters informing him that the students in question had been expelled from a previous school on account of bad moral character. The students met in their "Self-Governing Society," and immediately declared a strike of all their number. They formulated three demands, which were (1) the dismissal of their Headmaster, (2) recognition of their "Self-Governing Society," and (3) the readmission of the two students who had been expelled. These terms were granted by the Principal of the Normal University, and the students immediately returned to their classes.

THREE NEW UNIVERSITIES.

The Wuchang Foreign Language School has recently proclaimed itself to be a university, changing its name to Wen Ke'oh Ta Hsioh (文科大學) which is equivalent to "Arts University." Wuchang now boasts of three such "universities." Of the other two, one is the Normal University mentioned above, which until last year was known as the "Higher Normal School." The other is the "Chinese University," Chung Hwa Ta Hsioh, which is a private venture of which Mr. Chen Shih is the headmaster.

Students of the first-mentioned institution are showing their acquaintance with up-to-day methods by taking a travel-study-trip at the completion of their course. A number of them have just taken a trip down the Yangtze to Shanghai, visiting various ports to study commercial conditions. Two of them have taken their wives with them.

HUGE FIRES.

There has been so much dry weather lately that fires have not been infrequent. Last night a disastrous fire broke out, owing to the carelessness of some gamblers, on the crowded Ma Loo of Hankow. It raged for six hours, during which a number of wooden houses and shops were burned down, and not a few people were badly injured. Three days ago a fire broke out in a timber yard in Hanyang, and owing to the high wind which was then raging it spread rapidly, involving a large temple and some 30 or 40 houses. Hanyang possessing no fire engine, it was difficult to bring the fire under control; but a Chinese steam launch came to the rescue, and by employing her engine to direct a steam jet contributed something towards subduing the flames. This is reported by the native press.

One of the improvements which Tuchun Hsiao has recently introduced into Wuchang is a fire tower. This is a tall red brick structure which stands in a commanding position on the Serpent Hill. From its summit, watchman by night and day look out over the whole city, and immediately report any fire which is seen to break out. Wuchang does possess a fire engine, and by this means it can be promptly despatched to any spot where it is needed. Serious fires are thus often averted, or prevented from spreading.

EXEUNT SOUTHERNERS FROM SZECHUAN

A Bank President Held for Ransom of $1,000,000: Drought Causing Anxiety

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tzeliutsing, Sze., April 12.

The political situation here has been much cleared in the last couple of weeks, twenty to twenty five thousand men moving off toward the south apparently to make sure of the Southern army getting well out of the province, and according to reports this end has been accomplished with but little fighting. During the crowded occupation there was but little looting but a great spirit of relief was evident when the soldiers left. Most of the common soldiers seemed to be Kueichow men and were less mannerly than the average.

It is said the President of the branch of the Bank of China here is being held for $1,000,000 ransom. This involves the Salt Gabelle as this bank handles all its funds. One of the generals is said to be behind this move.

April was ushered in with a heat wave of 80 which fell to 46 three days later, with the result that many caught cold. To-day the thermometer is back to 80 and very dry and most of the public reservoirs are empty and water carriers from the river are reaping their harvest.

BOLD ROBBERY AT NINGPO

Armed Burglars in House of Well-known Chinese Banker

From Our Own Correspondent.

Ningpo, Apr. 26.

The residents in the Foreign Settlement of this City have been startled by the news of a very audacious robbery which took place in the house of Mr. Yee Jen-choen, which is situated near the Bund.

Mr. Yee holds a number of important offices in the commercial world of Ningpo among which may be mentioned the Managership of the Ningpo Commercial Bank and that of the Ningshao Steamship Company.

On the evening of the 24th instant a party of seven robbers wearing various disguises broke into the house after having previously cut the telephone wires. A maid servant who attempted to give the alarm was terrorized into silence with a pistol at her head. The party then broke into Mr. Yee's daughter's room and compelled her to guide them to her father's room which, when they reached they proceeded to enter by smashing down the door. Mr. Yee took opportunity to escape by the back window into his neighbour's house hurting his left leg, however, in his leap to the ground. Mrs. Yee was seized and under threats delivered up the keys of the establishment whereupon the thieves commenced to loot the place. Among the articles stolen are a gold bracelet and gold watch, a diamond ring and other jewellery, many silk garments and many valuable curios and ornaments.

In all the loss is estimated to be about $1,000.

It appears that the local police got information about the affair while the robbers were still ransacking the rooms and gathered round the front of the house but failed to catch the marauders who escaped over the back yard wall. A reward has been offered for the capture or the identification of the guilty persons but up to the present it has not been found possible to trace them.

SOUTHERN TROOPS' BOREDOM

Lack of Money Responsible for Lull on all Fronts: Waichow Still Holding Out

From Our Own Correspondent.

Canton, Apr. 23.

During the past week there has been a considerable amount of activity on the East River, although the fighting there does not seem to have been very heavy. The Hunanese troops are in the neighbourhood of Hoyuen and the Yunnanese are advancing on Waichow, which has not yet been captured, but which is believed to be held not very strongly. The trouble with the troops seems to be that they are unwilling to do much serious fighting until they receive some more pay.

Strenuous efforts are being made in Canton to collect money, but much difficulty is being experienced. The new tax on mineral waters is being opposed by the dealers, and a protest has also been entered by the British Consul-General. The latest is that the dealers have offered a contribution of $15,000 per annum, instead of the tax.

Efforts are being made to get the Canton-Kowloon Railway through again, and progress has been made in this direction. The trains can run as far as Cheungmuktau, and repairs are being done on the rest of the line. It is not probable that the express will be started for a considerable time yet, as there is some difficulty over rolling-stock, but it is possible that the slow train to Hongkong will be running again in a week or so. This work on the railway has been made possible by the withdrawal of all Chen Chiung-ming's troops in the vicinity of the line.

NO PIRATES ON CANTON RIVER.

Gen. Li Fuk-lum is continuing his operations against the pirates on the Canton River and has met so far with consider success. It is now claimed that the Canton River is quite safe as far as Whampoa.

Steps are now being taken by the authorities to remove all the troops at present stationed in the city to the outside. They will be stationed for the most part at Yintong, near the White Cloud Mountain. It is proposed to build large matsheds there to accommodate them. This will be a great improvement as it will do away with a good deal of the unfortunate incidents which occur so frequently between soldiers and civilians in Canton.

SHEN HUNG-YING TREACHERY.

It is now fairly certain that Shen Hung-ying, the Kuangsi general who until recently was assisting Wu Pei-fu against Sun Yat-sen, has now surrendered to the latter, who has given him an appointment in Kuangsi. Shen is now operating in that province against Gen. Lu Yung-ting.

BIG FIRE IN TIENTSIN

Tls. 35,000 Worth of Native Cotton Destroyed

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, Apr. 25.

About thirty-five thousand taels worth of native cotton was burned during the heavy gale yesterday at the northwest goods-yard next to the ex-Austrian Concession between the East and Central Stations. Cotton is the extent of 20 thousand bales belonging to native dealers has been stored there for the past few days, having been brought down from interior points. The fire broke out at about 7 p.m. on the lee side of the stacked up bales, and before the ex-Austrian Concession brigade put it out 350 bales were destroyed, and manw more damaged. It is held unfortunate that the fire did not start on the windward side, for, with the force of the wind, the entire 20,000 bales would have been burned.

POST-WAR CHENGTU

City's Rapid Recovery Under Northern Rule: Tramway System Projected

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chêngtu, Sze., Apr. 2

Among the numerous activities of the new administration are New Roads. Gen. Yang Sen was recently present at a large meeting of citizens interested in the Good Roads movement. He spoke for over an hour on the advantages of good communications and promised his hearty co-operation. Chu Tao-kang, who in the early days of the Republic was a temporary Tuchun, was made President of the Movement. Paul King, from Shanghai, brought letters of introduction from Dr. C. T. Wang, and the local committee picked him for the post of General Secretary of the Szechuan Good Roads Branch. Objections were raised quietly because he was not a Szechuanese. Accordingly the next meeting for election of officers was packed with students who were allowed to become members at a 50-cent. rate. Before the meeting the ballot papers, 500 in number, were lost, and 500 more had to be hurriedly printed. At the meeting there were less than 500 people, but over 800 votes came in from somewhere, so the old committee was ousted, and one to suit the old-times was elected.

The influential group appear to be largely drawn from the old Railway Co. that allowed the funds to disappear years ago when some $15,000,000 had been subscribed and paid for the Szechuan Railway that never materialized. So now some of the enthusiastic promoters of the scheme are becoming wary. It is not intended that the "old gang" shall be allowed again to get hold of the funds and prostitute the new movement to their own ends. The Good Roads Movement is too good a proposition to be allowed to go the way of the Railway, and good roads are badly needed in Szechuan, but the "old gang" cannot make them. They have forfeited the confidence of the people.

A company formed some time before are proceeding with the construction of the Chengtu-Kuanhsien road. This will tap a rich agricultural country across the Chêngtu plain, and will connect with the irrigation scheme and mountain resorts at Kuanhsien.

TRAMS ROUND CITY WALLS.

Gen. Yang Sen with his progressive assistants has already outlined a tramway system for Chêngtu. Two lines will cross the centre of the city, connecting with the four main gates and intersecting in the busiest part of the city. To do this streets will have to be widened and many cherished buildings will have to make place for this modern innovation. The tramcars will be a great thing for the city. It is also suggested that the spacious city walls be utilized for a "belt-line." It will cost a mint of money, but will provide employment for an army of men.

Already this progressive General has had the beggars removed to concentration camps, carriers of night soil to must conclude their labours before 9 a.m. overhanging counters on the streets have been removed, as also have been small temples that obstruct thoroughfares. All entrances to public buildings, arcades and street openings have been cleared of vendors. So that already the streets have a clean businesslike appearance and traffic is more easily moved. Now a new road is being built from the Governor's Yamên to the West Gate. Labour employed is soldier labour. This pleases the people, who like to see the soldiers carrying loads of dirt and stones. Under expert supervision they are building a good serviceable road. The chances are there will be more military labour before long. This plan is much safer than disbanding soldiers, as the majority invariably become bandits.

A FLOWER SHOW.

The Annual Flower Show is now in full swing. It did not take place last year owing to the civil war, but as soon as Gen. Yang got [illegible] he issued proclamations that the Fair would be held as outside the city, and that tradesmen carrying goods there would be protected. [illegible] dressed troops parade the Fair each day, business is good, and great crowds are constantly streaming in and out of the South and West Gates to and from the fair. Gen. Yang opened the Fair with an auspicious address urging the farmers and industrialists to use modern methods and machinery in their business.

RETRIBUTION FOR TSINGTAO HARPIES

Unhappy Girls Chained by Debt: Chinese Magistrate's Action to Give Them Freedom

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Apr. 23.

Barkeepers are struck with consternation by an important ruling given by a police magistrate here yesterday afternoon, for it is certain that questionable activities will have to assume a new aspect from now onwards. A couple of days ago, an inmate of one of these houses of questionable reputation which infest Tsingtao, ran away and presented herself before the authorities, requesting to be removed from the bar to which she was attached. She explained that she was tied down by a debt of $368 and that the barkeeper concerned, in this case a woman, was holding her as a virtual prisoner, using the Chinese laws as a lever. Under the Chinese laws, a debtor could be held and even imprisoned for a debt, no matter how legitimate. Many a barkeeper here has availed himself of this fact and has seen to it that the indebtedness of the respective inmates is not in any way decreased but from time to time increased.

The police gave the woman permission to stay away from the bar overnight on a written guarantee that she would not escape from Tsingtao before the case was settled. In the morning, the barkeeper was sent for and at 10 o'clock the hearing of the case commenced. At four in the afternoon the magistrate gave the following decision:—

"The debt of $368 is to be considered null and void, and defendant is given one month to return the plaintiff to the place from which she came—Harbin. Failure to observe this decision of the Court or any future complaint of a similar character will have a bearing on the continuation of the defendant's licence."

It is to be presumed that the foregoing decision will be a great factor in getting local barkeepers to be a bit more humane in their treatment of the unfortunate inmates of their establishments.

Mr. T. C. Kuo, the Director of General Affairs, in the Kao En-hung Administration is the official responsible for the present campaign to clean up the moral atmosphere here and has the support of the entire foreign community.

SZECHUAN EVER UNEASY

Jealousy of Lui Tsen-hou and Yang Sen: A Public Snub to Wu Pei-fu's Agent

Peking, Apr. 24.

According to Chinese reports General Liu Tsen hou, Tuchun of Szechuan, is calling a conference to which all the military leaders on the side of the Central Government will be summoned, with the exception of General Yang Sen. The object of the conference is to discuss means of rehabilitation. It is believed that some friction exists between Generals Liu and Yang, and that the former is seeking to undermine General Yang. The disorderly conditions prevailing throughout Szechuan provide a plausible reason for the conference. Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING, Apr. 25. Prince Yang Sang of the Hailinger Tribe arrived in Peking yesterday. He will take part in the Mongolian conference to be held this afternoon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE EDITORS' IRRESPONSIBILITY

Best Japanese in Tsingtao Much Pleased With Our Recent Criticism

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Apr. 23.

Those Japanese here who have read your correspondent's recent article on the irresponsibility of Japanese editors have expressed themselves in agreement with the information passed on to you for publication. It is regretted that a better atmosphere could not be introduced in local journalism. Some Japanese newspapermen have, on the other hand, expressed their resentment, and one has gone so far as to complain to the English Secretary of the local Administration as though he or his Administration could have any control over a foreign journalist. The complaint of these angry newspapermen is that in the article submitted, nothing at all was mentioned as to the identity of the papers concerned. They overlook the important fact that in their personal attacks upon the wife of a prominent local Japanese, they made no mention at all of the name of the lady, although their language was explicit enough to a large section of their readers.

A Japanese business man asked your correspondent not to pay particular attention to any protest of the angry journalists. He pointed out that some time ago one local paper declared in one of its headings that the monthly earning of the Kiao-Tsi Railway was $200,000 and yet in the body of the article itself the total was given as somewhere around $300,000. But the fact of the matter is that the monthly revenue of the Railway is considerably beyond any of these two figures, for the total annual income is about $9,000,000 net. When, my informant continues, he asked the newspaper office concerned for the source of its information, he was promised a reply "as soon as possible." Up till now he has not been informed.

Then, too, when Mr. Major, the British Consul, give a dinner in honour of Mr. Kao En-hung, one paper gave his name as Mr. Richardson, the Commissioner of Customs, who is quite a prominent local figure and is well-known not only to Chinese and foreigners but to the Japanese as well. When informed of his error, the reporter concerned did not take the trouble of furnishing his editor with a correction, or if he did, the latter did not publish it.

It is felt here that on the whole the articles submitted you recently has fairly hit the nail on the head and should stand uncorrected and unwithdrawn.

WHEN MARKS CRASHED

The Problem of Spending Your Money While It Was Still Worth Something

Those of us who sometimes wait a day or two before cashing a tael or Mexican cheque in hopes that the bank exchange rate will improve a cent or two can perhaps appreciate the situation in the recent fall in German money.

When your money is certain to be worthless to-morrow (worthless is about right), and a drop of 50 per cent. overnight is no unusual experience, you will not be inclined to save your money.

From newspaper and magazine accounts of the financial position in Germany, some features of that position were distinctly funny—to one who had no marks on his hands.

When shopkeepers only kept open long enough in the morning to take in the cash necessary for daily living expenses, and shut up shop and refused to sell any more just as soon as they had their daily expenses in hand, the job then became that of ridding themselves of the depreciating marks while they had still nearly the value they had when received. The man who waited too long was out of luck, for there was nowhere to spend his marks, and the rate of the next day would be half or less of to-day's.

In this dilemma there was one hope left—the post office. The postage stamps might be sold, for there are in Germany almost millions of collectors—and the post office did not care if the mark did depreciate: it simply raised the postage rate, and printed stamps of higher denominations.

This will account for the large quantities of unused German stamps that are being offered.

But soon the authorities found that the whole population was buying stamps in excess of its current needs, and spoiled the game entirely by making a ruling that no more stamps would be sold, and that people who wanted to mail letters must pay the postage in cash, the letters being simply marked "postage paid."

POCHOW IN ANHUI VERY DRY

Famine Impending but Opium Growing in Plenty

From Our Own Correspondent.

Pochow, April 25.

I do not mean that all have ceased to make and use that which stimulates from within—much as I could rejoice in such a state—but moisture for the earth has now been lacking, almost entirely since September last! There has been no snow at all and no really good season of rain in these months and, though the wheat crop was fully planted and had fine prospects till the past month, it is now dying in many places and if the rain comes even now, the yield will probably be quite less than half of a good average. Prices have been unusually high for several years and have been raised recently by a good deal per cent., so that there is every prospect for serious shortage of grain next spring. The autumn crops are not yet planted when they should be well up and cultivation begun.

I do not know how extensive this drought is. I do know that it extends as far as Kaifeng and I hear that at Pengpu and below there has been even an excess of rain.

Added to the reduction of the grain prospect, there is in this county a very heavy planting of opium and though orders have come from Anking to destroy it and the official tells me that he has been much in the country about the matter, there is no sign whatever of any of it having really been rooted up. The very tone in which the magistrate tells me of his efforts implies that he is not expecting and probably is not expected by the higher authorities, if there still be such persons, to do any serious damage to the growing crop, especially if heavy squeeze money is forthcoming. But it seems now that what the officials cannot or will not do, perhaps Providence will. The plant should soon be in bloom but it is not at all promising, though I understand that it was heavily fertilized, in some instances yellow beans being ground up and used for such purpose, even at a thousand cash a Chinese bushel!

You can readily see how that all these things will work toward famine conditions and you can also imagine the great zeal of these people-loving officials in offering to the benevolent, but perhaps hated, foreigner a vast opportunity to exercise his charity propensities.

I hear that in our adjoining county, Kuoyang, the official has seen to it that his soldiers have destroyed the weed and has written to Governor Ma, complaining that his neighour here is leaving it all. It seems also certain that on both sides of us in counties in Honan they have made a clean sweep of the weed. I wish to say again if any representative of any foreign power wishes to see the beauty of the blooming poppy he will have to come within the next month.

There is not much talk yet of bandits, but they are sure to start again when this opium is gathered.

THE Commissioner of Foreign Affairs at Ningpo has requested the Shanghai Commissioner to prevent foreigners from visiting Ziangshan, a hill in the vicinity of Ningpo, on account of the activities of the bandits there.

PAKHOI BRITISH CONSULATE CLOSED

House and Grounds in Perfect Condition: Resident's Regret

From Our Own Correspondent.

Pakhoi, Apr. 15.

The British Consul paid his regular visit here recently, and at the end of his stay officially announced the closing of the Pakhoi British Consulate. This step has caused much regret among the British residents of Pakhoi. The house was built in 1886 in a remarkably substantial way, and is in perfect condition, which cannot be said of several others of more recent construction in the neighbourhood.

The motor-road to Limchow is going ahead fast, though it was rumoured recently that it had been abandoned as a bad job. I had occasion to go to Limchow a few days ago, and in one place saw a large gang of men still working away on the road and widening one of the stone bridges. At the same time, a look at the newly made road just outside Pakhoi, would certainly suggest that this work had been abandoned, as it is cut up into deep ruts by the ex-carts crossing and recrossing, and no sort of surface has been laid on it, the turf having merely been removed. In some places where it ran over fields, the original crop sown before the road was made, has sprung up almost as profusely as in the untouched part of the field.

The work of the Salt Administration is still being carried on in the old French Post Office. During the past few days two Inspectors from Peking have been surveying both the work and the buildings belonging to the Administration.

The political situation remains quiet and it is said that many of the robbers holding the roads between Moli and Linushan are being enroled by the military: the road may become safe again in the near future, which is a thing very much to be hoped for.

The hot weather seems to be upon us in earnest now, after a long cool winter.

MUSIC AND DRAMATICS IN TSINANFU

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinanfu, Sung., Apr. 22.

The foreign community on April 12 enjoyed a performance of "The Mollusc" under the auspices of the Tsinan Literary society. So far as one can tell, this is the first occasion, when in Tsinan amateur dramatics have blossomed out with all the accessories of stage and footlights. As all voted the evening a huge success, one hopes that the Literary Society will give a dramatic evening a regular place on its autumn and spring programme.

On this occasion the Society has been fortunate in securing the help of Mr. B. G. Tours, who, in addition to producing the play, sustained one of the characters of the caste. The other members of the caste were Dr. and Mrs. H. W. S. Wright and Miss Harpham. All acquitted themselves admirably, the pleasure of the audience being considerably augmented by the fact that the caste are all popular and well-known members of the Tsinan community. Mr. Hunter proved an efficient stage manager.

The newly formed Choral Society made its first public appearance on April 13, when at the Sunday English Service it rendered Stainer's "Crucifixion" in the University Chapel. The community gathered in force and much appreciated the rendering. People feel much indebted to Mr. Tours for his work in training and conducting the Society.

ACCORDING to the "Eastern Times" the Peking Cabinet has decided to dispose of the services of 257 secretaries. Apart from these, it is said, a large number of secretaries and advisers to the different ministries will be dismissed in accordance with the retrenchment policy of the present government. We wonder.

WHY A SINGAPORE BASE IS ESSENTIAL

The Empire's Shipping and the Weak Spot in the Long Sea Lanes

The security of British shipping all over the world has always been taken so much for granted that it has ceased to be a cause for wonderment. In the late war the submarine nearly proved the undoing of the British Empire, which was saved by the fact that British brains and ingenuity proved to be bigger than German. With our fleet weakened to an incredible degree, how much more in potential danger do we stand now!

The German Navy being non est, it seems most likely that the field of operation in any future war, no matter who the contestants, will not be in the North Sea, and this is evidenced by the British Admiralty's present policy of concentrating the major fleet in the Mediterranean. It is safe to assume that the trade routes from Suez to England would be comparatively undisturbed, for an enemy does not commit depredatory raids in the midst of his opponent's camp. Taking it then for granted that their policy would be to destroy our commerce, one must look in other seas for the weakest spot in our defence.

The Atlantic is safe for there is no base from which an enemy could operate which we could not bottle up with our Home and Mediterranean fleets: I have purposely omitted the North American coast as a possible base, because no power could use it save America and were they our enemies the trade routes would naturally not be in operation. The Cape route has its safer alternative in Suez, and should we lose command of Suez, we would have to withdraw from the Mediterranean, thus releasing our ships for the protection of the former route.

THE VULNERABLE POINT.

It is evident then that we must go farther afield and look to the long sea-lanes from Aden to Bombay, to Colombo and Calcutta, the Eastern route thence to Malaya and Hongkong, the south-eastern sailings to Australia, and the whole of the China Sea as the most vulnerable in our defence.

Let us now eliminate the strongest of these, those which are more capable of being immediately and well guarded without moving our fleet too far from its main base. We have naval bases at Aden and Bombay, and a coaling station in Colombo which is but approximately six days steaming from Suez for a light cruiser doing 25 knots or seven days for a battleship doing 20. Thus a light cruiser doing 14 days on patrol with bases at Aden and Colombo will cover the whole of the area from Mauritius northward i.e., that bounded by Lats. 20 South and 20 North and Longs. 50 East and 80 East: and with fuelling stations on the East African coast, the safety of that shore line could be preserved.

Going further east we come to the routes Aden or Colombo to South Australia, though, bearing in mind the experience gained in the late war that the long lonely routes are the most dangerous, the former is hardly likely to be used. Ceylon to Freemantle, 3600 miles from shore to shore, is then the way by which is carried the enormous quantity of wheat and frozen meat which feeds the British Empire. As the weakest part of a rod is the centre, so it will be seen that the most vulnerable point in this long line lies opposite Java and only 900 miles from the coast. Thus an enemy with its base of submarines, destroyers or light cruisers in the East Indies, would be in a strong position to do us harm: we have no base on which to call for protection except Colombo, already in use for the Arabian Sea patrols, and Freemantle, which is 1800 miles away. A nearer and stronger base is essential for the safety of Australian shipping unless the long route viâ the Cape is used, which means an additional 1500 miles steaming in seas almost equally fraught with danger.

THE CHINA SEA AND HONGKONG.

The Pacific Ocean is not so important to British trade as it would be to American, and is as difficult to attack as it is to defend; the South Seas should be easily held by the Australian squadron. But in the China Sea we are quite unprotected save by our present Light Cruiser Squadron and Submarine Flotilla stationed at Hongkong. The route to Shanghai lies in narrower waters than have been experienced since leaving Aden, and the coasts infringing these waters contain harbours which would make an ideal headquarters for a hostile force. Responsible for the safety of these routes are five light cruisers who, be it remembered, are equally responsible for the whole of Malaya, and the East Indies, and the submarines who could possible hold the Formosa passage and the Malacca Straits.

It may then be seen that were we threatened in these waters it would be necessary to call on a larger fleet, and had our opponent battleships within steaming radius of, say, Hongkong—that is at a conservative estimate of 5,000 miles there and back—our hold in the East would be in serious jeopardy. This estimate of 5,000 miles places our present main base within striking distance of an enemy stationed anywhere in Japan, North China, New Guinea or Rangoon. Our present fleet might be able to avoid capture, but by their efforts to do so their use in defence is immediately annulled. It is evident then that we must call on our battleships, and this is now impracticable because we have no place to harbour a squadron secure from submarine attack, and no place whatever to dock them in event of damage inflicted by the enemy or for the necessary overhaul during a prolonged war.

THE LESSON OF HISTORY.

It is thus apparent that, omitting the Pacific, in an area from 100 East to 160 East and 10 South to 40 North our trade routes are without sufficient protection and, worse, without the guarantee of immediate and full protection in event of war whether directed against us or between other belligerents. We stand in the Far East unarmed and unable to lift a weapon even in self-defence. Yet we are expected to be leaders in commerce, in development and in foreign policy. We have always done our best to keep the peace among the many bickerings inevitable in a land so heterogeneously populated: in fact, I think one may say, without offence to any other nation, that we have always led, been expected to lead and been respected for our policy in the Far East: as such we are placed in a position of trust which is a debt of honour both to the world and to ourselves.

We stand now by our prestige alone, and prestige is of little use without power to back it. We are unable to oppose even the slightest threat to the most minor point in our Eastern policy. In fact, with more to lose and nothing to gain we stand in a worse position than do the secondary powers of Europe in these parts. Singapore is essential as a main fleet base, as essential for the keeping of the peace and the efficient policing of the seas as it would be vital in time of war; and the pacifist who hopes to keep law and order without control has failed to learn the history of all the ancient past.

THE EASTER SEASON AT NINGPO

From Our Own Correspondent.

Apr. 26.

The only people here affected by the advent of this Christian feast were the missionary organizations and foreign business firms of the city. A number of visitors from Shanghai and other places have passed through the port into the beautiful hinterland, which now perhaps appears at its loveliest.

Though the season has been too late for the brilliant yellow of the rape flower to be seen at its best, yet the Chinese clover is still in full bloom on the plains and the azaleas with their exquisite tints still cover the hills.

Excursions have been fairly numerous and houseboats have been in requisition. The famous temples of Tien Dong and Nyuoh Wong have had their pilgrims, religious and otherwise, and the East Lake has been the resort of many who take a delight in picturesque Nature.

The Ningpo Methodist College utilized the short vacation by arranging a trip to Pootoo which was thoroughly enjoyed. The various temples were visited and all the natural wonders (so many in Poofoo) were explored.

The Riverside Girls' Academy celebrated the season by giving a concert of musical and dramatic items which was well attended by the relatives and friends of the students. Under the able direction of Miss Honey, the music teacher, the pupils showed their proficiency in piano playing and singing. A Chinese version of 'King Lear' was also rendered with great zest and cleverness.

On Easter Sunday a united Communion Service of the Ningpo Missionary Association was held in St. Paul's (English) Church the preacher for the occasion being Archdeacon Moule of Trinity College. The church was beautifully decorated with spring flowers by Mrs. Molony. Altogether about 50 missionaries received the Sacrament at the hands of Bishop Molony and the gathering might with fairness, be described as truly Catholic inasmuch as it embraced members of the Anglican, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and other Churches.

According to the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" several M.P.'s have introduced a Bill for the abolition of the civil service examinations.—We do not know of any such examinations; they certainly had not been held since the establishment of the Republic in China.

HUNAN COMING UNDER NORTHERN SWAY

Marshal Wu's Reported Ultimatum to Chao Heng-ti: 10,000 Northern Troops in Province

From Our Own Correspondent.

Siangtan, Hu., Apr. 16.

Rumour is rife that the present government at Changsha will overthrow the constitution of the Province and declare full allegiance to the North or be prepared to fight. The Northern leaders have evidently sent an ultimatum to Governor Chao Heng-ti. He must, it seems, leave, become the Governor legally appointed by the Government, or take up another post to which he may be appointed. Rumour has it that Mr. Chao has resigned, but that his resignation has not been accepted. It is reported that there are over 10,000 Northern soldiers in the Province, and that Ma Chi is still at Changsha.

EVERYBODY AFRAID OF THE SOLDIERS.

Reports of banditry in the country are more and more numerous. Soldiers in the city have been making themselves especially obnoxious recently. They have turned up wholesale to the Presbyterian Church Community Guild weekly cinema, demanding admission without money or tickets. Admission has now been refused to them, without a special half price ticket. One night recently a few of them deliberately came intending to make trouble for they had taken off their numbers and tickets, and demanded admission. When it was denied, they broke down the door, but left expecting to return. One of the Guild secretaries followed at a distance in the dark hoping to see where they belonged. He was recognized and stabbed with a knife. Fortunately the wound was not deep, having hit a rib and slanted upward causing a surface wound that bled profusely but was not dangerous. The case has been taken up with the authorities here, but little has been done or seemingly can be done, for the officials themselves are afraid of their own men.

COAL FAMINE.

Fuel has been at a premium here for more than a month.

Soldiers looking about for another place to make a little money have been going up the river commandeering coal boats, giving in return only a small fraction of the worth of the coal and in many cases selling the coal at the market rate, thereby making a good profit. Of course, when the boatmen up river heard of this they refused to come down with their coal, with the result that prices have gone untwofold compared with those usually prevailing at this hime of the year. As there has been little coal coming in, almost a coal famine has resulted. The Chamber of Commerce met and asked the military authorities to help solve the difficulty. The Chamber even promised to buy coal for the soldiers, if they would promise to stop further commandeering of coal on the river. The situation however, is now considerably improved. With the high water more coal is coming in.

Small steam launches owned by the Chinese are having a difficult time to make ends meet, because of course, the soldiers travel a great deal and never pay for their passage. With high-priced coal, increased expenditure, decreased travel and income from non-paying soldiers seem to be driving many of these boats of the run. Japanese boats are, however making good incomes again and there are rumours that an American registered fleet of launches is to be started soon.

The Rev. Mr. Ibbottson, of the C.M.S., here, who has been attending a Conference of his Church at Hongkong and has just returned. Dr. and Mrs. Tooker now of Kuling, have been here recently packing their household effects to take them to Kuling where they are to live permanently.

AMERICA A LAND OF MATERIALISM

Sir Rabindranath Tagore on the True Spirit of Eastern Civilization

Peking, Apr. 25.

Sir Francis Aglen presided at a luncheon of the Anglo-American Association to-day, when Sir Rabindranath Tagore was the guest of honour. Dr. Schurman, who is personally acquainted with Sir Rabindranath, delivered a speech welcoming the poet, after which he said that the Association was a sort of unofficial organ of the English-speaking family of Peking.

"While we cherish just pride in the civilization which our peoples have developed in their homes in the four continents," Dr. Schurman declared, "we are aware that, measured by the standard of the perfect ideal, it abounds in imperfections and superficialities and even in injustices and inhumanities. Practical and utilitarian our peoples indeed are, but the depths of their nature is a hidden fountain of idealism. This is the ultimate source of their highest achievements. No one could convince us in the English language that we are wholly given up to materialism and things of sense, which perish in using, for the speech he used would return him. Yet the West had much to learn from the East.

Dr. Schurman compared Chinese civilization with that of Ancient Greece. Different peoples, he said, develop their own characteristic civilizations and all nations contribute their quota. Above all nations is humanity.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore, who was warmly greeted, selected as a topic the Bengal educational institute bearing the Sanscrit name "Visve Bharati." His eloquent discourse was really a plea for idealism instead of nationalism which meant materialism. He referred to his early education and yearnings to see and understand the civilizations which had developed abroad. He spoke of his visits to England, Japan and America, where he had studied national and domestic life. He said that in England he found the chivalrous spirit of humanity almost more than in any other country. He was dismayed at the nationalism among the younger Japanese, which almost amounted to barbarism. He condemand Japanese inhospitable exclusivism, but among older Japanese he had found the true spirit of Eastern civilization. Sir Rabindranath spoke of the materialism of America and their disregard of the views of others, which, he thought, must have ill effects. After the war he again visited Europe where he was received with the utmost cordiality. His experiences there created the belief that Europe was not satisfied with its former materialism and wanted something better, which might come from India.

The attendance at the luncheon was very large and many were unable to obtain seats.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

YANG SEN'S COMMAND IN SZECHUAN

Proposed Removal from Military to Civil Control

Peking, Apr. 25.

Gen. Liu Tsung-hou has apparently thought of a simple plan to remove Gen. Yang Sen from his military command in Szechuan, for he has telegraphed to Marshal Wu Pei-fu suggesting that Gen. Yang should be appointed Civil Governor of that province. Marshal Wu has referred the matter to the Central Government, which is taken as an indication that Marshal Wu wishes to place the responsibility for decision on the Government.

Meanwhile, Gen. Chen Kuo-tung, a follower of Gen. Yang Sen, is on the way to Peking to report conditions in Szechuan according to the views of his Chief.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEN PICTURES OF AUSTRALIA

A Country of Vast Contrasts and Opportunities: Much Wealth: More Coming

The effects of the post war slump in trade are not felt so heavily in Australia as they are in this country.

Large fortunes have been and are still being made by the sale of land around the cities. Blocks of land suitable for dwelling houses and shops are eagerly snapped up by the small investor with a few hundred pounds capital to spare. Money is then lent by the banks for building purposes, or the land is left bare, then resold after an interval of from two to three years at a from 10 per cent. to 50 per cent. profit.

It speaks well for the internal prosperity of the country that a large proportion of the artisans and small shopkeepers own blocks of land and often the houses in which they live are their own property.

THE LABOUR HIGH WAGE.

Building and kindred trades are in a very flourishing condition, there is a great shortage of houses, and skilled workmen, such as brick-layers, plasterers, carpenters, etc., are scarce, the result being that these trades are able to command very high wages. sums of from £6 to £8 per week are usually paid for even a moderately good craftsman. The minimum wage for unskilled labour is from £3.10 to £4 per week. Even now the workers are not satisfied and are still demanding more money and fewer working hours from their employers. Ultimately, these employers will be unwilling or unable to comply with these demands and a long and serious period of industrial dispute will be the result.

Australia, like China, is a country of vast distances; for instance it takes five days of continuous travelling in a train to go from end to end of the continent, i.e. from Melbourne to Perth, consequently it follows that different climatic conditions prevail in the various cities.

CHOOSE YOUR CLIMATE.

According to general opinion, the climate of Adelaide, in South Australia, agrees with most people; it is warm in winter and the summer session is not too hot. Perth, in Western Australia, is hot and very dry, it suffers periodically from severe droughts, and has the great disadvantage of frequent dust storms in the summer.

On the contrary the climate of Melbourne (Victoria) closely resembles that of England, cold and wet, with a short comparatively mild hot season. A summer spent in Sydney is ideal, while the winter is rather cold, whereas in Brisbane, being further north in Queensland, semi-tropical conditions prevail. Very few Australians care to go there. In these tropical northern states black labour is a very vexed question. The slogan "A White Australia" is very prominent just at present; everyone will agree that where the climate is suitable and work is plentiful employment should be given to its white people in preference to black; on the other hand, very few Europeans will work on the plantations in Queensland, consequently the sugar and pineapples are left to rot in the sun because there is nobody to cut and gather them.

IMPORTED LABOUR.

The original natives of Australia, the aborginals as they are called, are practically extinct, they are rapidly degenerating and dying out, the words "black labour" in this case meaning imported labour from Africa, China and other places.

The land in the different states is suitable for all kinds of grass, cereals, fruit and vegetables. Large crops and rich harvests are obtained. Of course care must be taken that the different things sown are suitable for the climate, e.g., tropical fruits like the pineapples will not grow in the cold southern state of Victoria, whereas the large quantities of grapes, peaches, etc., we get from the Mildura district could not be grown in Queensland.

THE CHINA TRADE.

Manufacturers and exporters in China are slowly awakening to the value of Australia as a market for the disposal of their goods. Unfortunately, the Chinese export duty, and the import duty on foreign goods at Australia are so high that the two combined seem effectively to kill any trade which might ensue between these two vast continents. It is a fact that there is an entire absence of Chinese goods for sale in any of the large retail shops in Sydney or Melbourne. Perhaps this could be remedied later on as it would bring increased prosperity and trade to both continents.

The people in Australia are extremely goodhearted and generous; they welcome the stranger, if he be a man and has grit, with open arms; no difficulty is experienced by the stranger and traveller in entering into the social life of the city if he be so inclined.

At present it is a young country, it has made mistakes and mistakes are still being made, it has not yet had time fully to develop, the change and improvements within the last few years have been little short of miracles. Let us hope that in the Australia of the future the "dream country" of our idealists and social reformers will be realized; a country where everyone is happy, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary at at rest.

DISASTROUS FIRE IN SEOUL

Many Government Buildings Destroyed: Incendiarism Suspected

Seoul, Apr. 28.

A serious fire broke out to-night at 10-40, destroying a number of Government and other buildings. Troops were called out to help the firemen. Incendiarism is suspected, but the cause of the fire has not been ascertained.

It appears to have originated from the Chosen Printing Company's premises, and under a strong wind spread to buildings belonging to the Civil Engineering Department, the Land Surveying Bureau, the Tobacco Monopoly Bureau, the Railway Department and the Department of Justice. The Governor-General's office in the old Korean Palace is safe. The total damage is estimated at Y.1,000,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NORTH KIANGSU FEARING A FAMINE

From Our Own Correspondent.

Suchien, N. Ku., Apr. 22.

The country is dry and the short wheat turning yellow: nothing but blue skies above us and scorching winds. For the last week nothing has broken the stillness but the sound of the drums of the "rain processions." The farmers cannot plant either beans or maize and look forward with fear and trembling to a famine year.

MONGOLIA AND EASTERN TIBET

Dalai Lama's Power Weakening

Peking, Apr. 29.

The Panchan Lama is now in Kansu en route to Urga and the Government have instructed the Tuh of Kansu to persuade him to come to Peking instead of going on to Urga. It appears that friction arose between Dalai and Panchan Lamas before the latter left Tibet and it is believed that he hopes to make an agreement with the Hutukhtu whereby the peoples of Mongolia and Eastern Tibet unite, thus weakening the power of the Dalai Lama.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The American Consulate-General would be glad to receive any information as to the present whereabouts of Mr Fred H. Harries, who is thought to have been resident in Shanghai.

M. D'OISY'S WORLD FLIGHT

Daring Frenchman Improving on an Early Flying Record: Description of Machine

"History repeats itself" is a good old stock phrase justified by the fact that it is often true. People who are a few years past their first quarter century can recount recollections of the early days of successful flying and there will be one outstanding incident in their minds. A big money prize had been offered for the first non-stop flight across the English Channel, for which many tried and failed. Another competitor came along and made preparations on a vast scale, so that half the civilized world was talking about him, and strangely enough no one seemed to be disappointed when every day for several weeks he had another excuse to offer for not making the flight. Then, early one morning, he was hurriedly pulled from his bed just in time to see a tiny speck well over the Channel. Unknown and unheralded, and without any preparations, M. Bleriot had come along and crossed at his first attempt.

It appears not unlikely that just such another feat, only on a vastly bigger scale, is to be performed by M. Peltier d'Oisy. Whilst the cables daily were giving long accounts of the preparations made to enable various groups of aviators to fly round the world, suddenly came a message to the effect that M. d'Oisy, hitherto unknown to the world at large, at short notice and without any preparations, had started off on a similar journey. We are indebted to M. Pierre Sennet for the following details regarding M. d'Oisy's machine:—

BREGUET SESQUIPLANE.

The Breguet XIX type sesquiplane, a two-seater of metal construction with tractor airscrew, was adopted by the French government as soon as it appeared, showing its great value. It may be fitted with a Renault 450 h.p. engine or with a Lorraine Dietrich 370 or 450 h.p. engine. It may be also arranged as a long range reconnaissance machine or as a bombing or fighting machine. Its leading features are as follows, according to the uses for which it is intended:—

1.—As a reconnaissance or bombing machine:—

Lifting surface	46m.
Weight of machine empty	1,180 kg.
Commercial load	450
Weight of fuel	350
Weight, total	2,080

2.—As a two-seater fighting machine (the type adopted by M. Peltier d'Oisy):—

Lifting surface	40m.
Weight of machine empty	1,100kg.
Commercial load	390
Weight of fuel	260
Weight, total	1,750

The following official results were obtained by the reconnaissance or bombing machine:—

Speed at ground level	228 km.
at 1000m.	228
2500	231
3500	226
4500	218

Time of climb:—

to 1000m.	3 min. 40-sec.
2500	9-min. 30-sec.
3500	11-min.
4500	19-min. 10-sec
5500	29-min. 05-sec.
6000	39-min.

1,250 Miles Non-Stop Flight

Paris, Apr. 25.

In a spectacular flight the famous French ace, Lieut. D'Oisy, who totally without preparation set out with the object of flying to the farthest European capital possible without alighting, reached Bukharest, covering 1,250 miles in 11 hours under bad atmospheric conditions. He is now continuing his flight to Tokio.

Apr. 26.

Lieutenant D'Oisy has reached Aleppo en route to Tokio. He covered the 940 miles from Bukharest to Aleppo in eight hours. He traversed the Taurus Mountains at an altitude of over 10,000 feet.

Apr. 27.

Paris, Apr. 27.

The French airman, Lieutenant d'Oisy, arrived in Bassora yesterday evening and left to-day on his way to Karachi.—Reuter.

ARRIVAL AT BUNDER ABBAS.

Bagdad, Apr. 28.

Lieut. d'Oisy is accompanied by Sergeant Vesin. He is flying a Breguet aeroplane and is bound for French Indo-China for instructional work. He hopes to arrive at his destination in eight days.

The machine is not an amphibian, but the Frenchmen intend to keep close to the coastline, taking the risk of a forced landing on the coast between Basra and Karachi.—Reuter.

Karachi, Apr. 28.

Lieut. d'Oisy to-day descended at Bushire to deliver an official letter to the French Air Mission. He ascended again and has reached Bunder Abbas.

Later.

The Aeronautical Department has officially confirmed that Lieutenant d'Oisy is going to Japan. He will change his motor at Saigon and will thence fly to Nagasaki viâ Hanoi.

It is rumoured that after his flight to Japan Lieutenant d'Oisy will make an attempt to compete with the British and Americans in encircling the world.—Reuter.

Bombay, Apr. 29.

Europe to India in 38½ Hours

Paris, Apr. 29.

It transpires from the statement issued by the Aeronautical Department that Lieut. d'Oisy's flight is the result of lengthy and advanced preparations. It was originally hoped to organize a world tour. This was abandoned on the ground of expense. It was decided last year that Lieut. d'Oisy should attempt to link up France with Indo-China, continuing his flight to Tokio after his machine had been overhauled at Hanoi. The French Ministry obtained the authorisation of foreign countries to fly over their territory. Britain, Siam, and Japan consented to allow the airman to land at their aerodromes and take on fuel. The United States placed stores along the route of the American world flight at his disposal.—Reuter.

Karachi, Apr. 30.

Lieut. D'Oisy arrived this afternoon. He has created a record for a flight from Europe to India, his time being 38½ actual flying hours.

If the inspection of the machine at Hanoi is satisfactory, Lieut. d'Oisy will proceed to Tokio, via Canton, Shanghai, Peking and Haiju.—Reuter.

Peking, Apr. 27.

The Chinese Air Department has requested the military and police authorities to attend a meeting to discuss measures of co-operation with the provinces for welcoming the world flight parties now on their way to the Far East.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Lisbon-Macao Air Flight

The Portugese airmen, who are flying to Macao, have arrived at Bushire.—Reuter.

THE YIHYANG MARU CAPTIVES

Peking, Apr. 29.

The Japanese Consul at Chungking received on April 19 a letter from the Japanese captives saying that they have reached Tunghsichang on the Kueichow border, about 60 li due south of Chungking, where they will remain for some time. The Consul, therefore, will make another effort to hand over the ransom.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Chinese Government Aeronautic Bureau at Peking is making arrangements for the arrival of the French flyers, about whom the Government has been notified. It is hoped that they will make use of the Nanyuan flying field in their visit there.

TIENTSIN'S PLAGUE SPOT

Purification of a Local Yang King Pang to Be Commenced Shortly

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, Apr. 21.

The Weitze Creek menace will shortly disappear when operations are begun on the new lock scheme agreed to by the Chinese and foreign authorities of Tientsin as a solution of the existing difficulties.

This tidal waterway, which has a very strong resemblance to the once notorious Yang King Pang, at Shanghai, runs diagonally from behind the Chinese city, in a southerly direction, through the Japanese, French, British and ex-German Concessions. It follows the line of the Mud Wall built for defensive purposes around Tientsin by Sankolinsin in 1859, known as "Sankolinsin's Folly." For many years it provided for small native boats a water communication with the extra-mural districts and at the same time a convenient channel for carrying away flood waters. To prevent it becoming empty at ebb tides in the Hai-ho it is controlled by a lock gate at its mouth at the ex-German Concession Bund.

PUMPING PLANT INSTALLED.

Following the record 1917 flood, it was decided to improve the canal to cope with flood and effluent waters, and, the Flood Relief Bureau declining to act, the British, French, Japanese and ex-German Concession authorities in 1918 entered upon a scheme whereby part of the Concession areas would be drained into the creek. The plan called for a pumping installation, which finally cost Tls. 160,000 in order to empty and flush the creek every day. The plant is capable of discharging 10,000,000 gallons of water in three hours. In 1920, after some correspondence, the Civil Governor gave control of the scheme to a body composed of representatives from each of the four Concession areas. It was necessary, in pumping out the creek, to instal another lock beyond the four Concessions, to keep out water from adjacent ponds and creeks which found its way into the Weitze Creek. The location of this lock created difficulties with the native population living behind the Chinese city. They felt they were being cheated of an outlet for their drainage and dug a channel around the upper lock, again linking up the creek with the principal canal, the Palitai. They also made representations to the Chinese Provincial Government and a deadlock eventually resulted over the control of the locks.

NEW LOCK TO BE BUILT.

The objections Chinese of the to cutting off their drainage were well grounded and have been sustained in the new arrangement between the Consular bodies of the interested Concessions and the Provincial Government. The upper lock will be abandoned and another lock placed several hundred yards beyond, at a point where the drainage canal of the Nankai district behind the native city enters the Weitze Creek. In return for this facility the Chinese will agree to cut off the Palitai canal, which runs away in a westerly direction over the plain and does not affect effluent drainage. It has another outlet to the Hai-ho by a circuitous creek that runs well to the south of the Concessions.

The additional expenses have been satisfactorily apportioned among the five areas drained.

The Weitze Creek had already become a menace to the foreign Concessions. Its odours at low tide were offensive and the decaying vegetable and other matter a source of disease. This will shortly be removed and Tientsin will have, thereby, accomplished another appreciable step forward.

Marshal Wu Pei-fu has telegraphed to President Tsao Kun urging him to take steps to prevent Mr. Sun Pao-chi, the Premier, from going abroad on an "investigation" tour.—"Shunpao"

DROUGHT AND SHANSI'S WATER SUPPLY

Vital Matter which is Forgotten by Officials of the "Model Province"

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kiangchow, Sha., Apr. 24.

Once again the drought is causing anxiety. The time for sowing cotton and other crops is passing, but the needed rain does not come. Instead there have been winds and sandstorms.

The water supply of this and several other surrounding cities is far from satisfactory, but does not seem to greatly concern the people.

In view of the many reforms which have been advocated, it seems strange that such matters as water and sanitation have not come to the front as municipal activities in which the "Model Province" might take a lead.

In ordinary Shansi cities wells are private property, and water carriers are under no public control. There is therefore no authority responsible for the purity of the water, nor the regularity of supply, In recent years many new wells have been sunk in towns and villages all over the country and many native methods tried, but very rarely can good water be obtained. The fresh water wells are quite inadequate for the population in this and many other cities that might be named. Artesian wells are needed badly. Every now and then some one is reported to be getting a real "foreign well," but it turns out to be some penny wise-and-pound-foolish scheme of some incompetent labourer who having perhaps worked for foreign engineers imagines that he can with native methods secure the same results as the "barbarian."

This city awaits the coming of it's new official. We understand that information was sent to the Capital that a too progressive official of the "New China" order would not be welcome in this district. Every city has a distinctive type of governor, as the Chinese shop keepers very well know.

Recently the local Chamber of Commerce, I am told, was reminded that the shops here were behind others in displaying toys and fancy nick nacks, useless and expensive articles such as are usually sold in bazaars, or at night near railway centres. Our shopkeepers have for generations preferred to deal in large quantities of regular stock lines and have thus to be prodded on to speculate in the endless odds and ends and "spurious imitations" which seem so popular among that section of Young China who consider such goods needful adjuncts of the "Renaissance."

BRITISH WORLD FLIGHT

Canadian Trawler's Stormy Voyage Preparing Arctic Bases

Tokio, May 1.

Writing from Paramuchiru Island on April 30, a correspondent of the Kokusai News Agency says:

"Following a two months' adventurous voyage in the turbulent Arctic Seas establishing bases for the British world-flyers, the Canadian trawler, Thiepval, arrived here this morning. She expects to continue to the south along the Kurile Islands as soon as permission is received from Tokio to allow calls to be made at places other than Kashiwabara Bay and Hitokappuwu, which are the only places at present permitted. Two Japanese liaison officers boarded the Thiepval and they will remain with her while in Japanese waters.

"Colonel Broome in a statement said that there were well established bases at Petropavlosk and East Kamchatka, Bering Island, Attu and other places along the Aleutian Islands. The jumps were much shorter than those of the American world-flyers. Ten days' provisions, fuel and spare parts were located along the line. The weather experienced was extremely disagreeable during the entire trip, which commenced on March 1 Colonel Broome was not overly optimistic with regard to the trans-Pacific leg of the flight on account of the bad weather. He intimated that the American world-flyers might not arrive from the Aleutian Islands for a considerable time. Colonel Broome expected the British flyers to arrive in Tokio in the middle of June. He declared that he intended to fly with them as far as Vancouver on account of his knowledge of the weather conditions. The bases did not discount the perilousness of the attempt at any time. Colonel Broome said that nothing had been left undone to insure the success of the flight though it was a long odds gamble at best.

"The weather here has cleared up slightly but it is still unfavourable."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

VISIT OF TAGORE TO TSINAN

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinanfu, Sung., April 22.

Sir Rabindrath Tagore's visit to Tsinan to-day has greatly stirred educational circles. He has broken his journey to Peking and stayed off a day to speak in the Provincial Assembly. Such a large crowd assembled that the visitor had to leave the hall of the Assembly and give his address in the open air. Some three thousand students and others assembled for this meeting when the distinguished guest spoke on "Materialism and the Spiritual Life."

Sir Rabindrath Tagore and his party, in spite of the shortage of time, kindly accepted an invitation to visit the Shantung Christian University, and at five o'clock the staff and students listened to a delightful address by the poet on his school and the ideals that animated him in founding it and deve'oping it. In simple, dignified and beautifully phrased English he painted an inspiring and attractive picture of the institution, where he has put into practice his ideals of freedom and beauty and the spiritual life. He made his audience wish to see his school in working, and convinced all that he is thereby making a much-needed contribution to the cause of education. It is greatly to be hoped that Sir Rabindrath Tagore can pay a further visit to Tsinan before he returns to India. Peking is very happy in the prospect of listening to such a teacher.

LABOUR TROUBLES IN THE PHILIPPINES

Competition Between Japanese and Native Artisans Causing Trouble

Manila, Apr. 15,

Race prejudice arising from competition between Japanese and Filipino labourers, artisans and chauffeurs, in the province of Davao may result in serious trouble, according to a report just made by Mr. H. Cruz, director of the bureau of labour, to the secretary of commerce and communications.

The trait of "protectionism," practised by the Japanese nationals, Director Cruz declared, is largely responsible for the threatened trouble, as in virtually every industrial activity in Davao, of which a great portion, is in the hands of the Japanese, the Japanese labourers are given preference over Filipinos. Nearly one half of the Japanese in the Philippine Islands live in the province of Davao at present and as recently as three years ago some 12,000 Japanese were residents of that province, most of them being employed on hemp plantations. When the price of hemp dropped about three years ago many of the Japanese returned to their native land, leaving approximately 4,000 there at present.

Among other complaints received from Davao was one from th chauffeurs' union of the city of Davao, which alleged that Japanese residents refuse to use automobilies driven by Filipinos, but wait for cars driven by Japanese.

With the complaint of the chauffeurs came a recommendation that the law be changed definitely limiting the issuance of licences to Filipinos and Americans only.

Director Cruz has laid the complaints before Governor-General Wood with his own comment regarding the racial feeling existing in Davao.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

M. WILDEN AND ADM. WASHINGTON

Luncheon Given in their Honour by American Legion Post in Shanghai

At the American Legion tiffin (Frederick Ward Post) held at the Parisien Hotel last Friday, M. Wilden, Consul-General for France, and Admiral Washington sat with Mr. Gardner Crane, Commander, as guests of honour. Among the other specially invited guests were Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, Judge Purdy, and Mr. Stirling Fessenden, Chairman of the Municipal Council, and Messrs. Le Bris, Meyrier, M. Grosbois, Fiori, and Legendre. With the conclusion of the meal, which was attended by nearly 150 gentlemen, Mr. Crane introduced M. Wilden, who spoke in a light and pleasing manner about his early associations with the American people, being intimatley related through marriage.

Continuing, the speaker, dwelt on the siege of Peking and the Boxer uprisings and how he felt at that time the care-free and nonchalant, but highly efficient way, in which the American Marines participated along with the soldiers of the other allies, to which must be added the marvellous shooting of which they were capable, but the most remarkable of all was the extremely nimble manner in which the negro cook could find pig and chicken in the country already well combed over for fresh meat.

Turning to the modern war era, he regretted that he had been detailed to service in China before the Americans reached France in 1917, though he, as did every other French man woman and child, felt that with America active with them, the ultimate end was certain.

"It was with his regiment that Allan Seager fought for France—the young American poet, whose death was an irreparable loss, not only to his country but to France and to all humanity.

This is what a witness says—While attacking the enemy trenches his squad (Seager's) was enfiladed by machine gun fire (six guns). Alan went down, mortally wounded, but he cheered the others on and as we left him behind we heard him singing a marching song in English. (This was on July 4, 1916).

THE TRUE FRENCH FEELING.

When M. Poincaré last winter asked your government to allow leading Americans to take a part in the work of the Experts' Committee, he knew what he did. The name of Gen. Dawes will be revered and respected in France just as are the names of Wilson and Pershing.

Then more recently when the franc went 120 to the £ and 26 to the American dollar, the situation was so serious that it could be compared to the worst times of the war. Then the morning papers of March 17 announced that leading American banks headed by Morgan had opened a credit of G.$100,000,000—France was saved.

There are things and deeds that one cannot forget and I entreat you not to believe the people who tell you that we are ungrateful. Look at the Argonne and the huge cemetery, how the women of the neighbourhood placed wreathes on them—not one of them knew the men whose bodies were buried there, but each knew she had to replace the American mothers, far away—This is the true representation of the French feeling toward America.

THE U. S. NAVY IN CHINA

Admiral Washington, commanding the Asiatic Fleet, made a strong plea for the active support of the civilian population of China for cooperation in securing more ships for the China service. It was up to the American business man in China to demand strenuous efforts of the legislators of his own district at Home for what was most urgent they could maintain the prestige of the flag and the pre-eminent position of their commerce. Admitting that it seemed probable that six shallow draught gunboats, at the most, might be procured through the present Congress, he insisted that these ships were not for war but for peace, they would not be worth a snap of the fingers in an engagement with a first class power. In addition to these vessels for China river work, the Navy urgently required at least 40 light cruisers to act as the eyes of the battle fleet, if the American Fleet was to keep the proper ratio with the other signatories of the Arms Limitations Treaty, ie., 5-3.

Referring to the War, the speaker stated that in the opinion of most military men, himself included, it would have been much better for the world as a whole if the Armistice had not come just at the time when it did, but the Germans had so completly fooled the Allied commanders including Marshal Foch, himself, that the break came before they had prepared for it diplomatically.

CONTEMPT FOR SUBMARINES.

Dropping into an easy conversational tone, the Admiral spoke as to the proper manner of keeping up the morale of the men, by allowing them to grow confident, and cited an incident in the North Sea, after which one man stated with reference to submarines that he would just get his rifle when the next one appeared. It was about 2.15 p.m. when off Bergen (in the track of the German subs) that a torpedo was sighted off the port bow. He ordered the ship's helm over and paralleled the missile, it passing 200 yd. to the side. Just then the lookout reported another on the port quarter and the same manœuvre was repeated and the ship cleared again by 250 yd. Another submarine with two tubes sighted directly at them, fired after submerging, and the battleship was saved because the Germans had evidently deflected their range too much and the torpedoes passed below. He could barely make out faint bubbles of another, the last one, astern when it was reported and could not make out the direction of its flight, so full speed ahead was the only hope of safety. It was estimated that this torpedo passed 90 ft. below, after which it rose 150 yd. off to one side and spun round until it ran itself down. When the men saw that they had avoided three submarines and five torpedoes within 20 minutes their confidence naturally increased, while the German inactivity broke their own morale.

NEW MONEY

Peking's Reported Arrangement with a Shanghai Bank

According to news received from Peking, says the "Mingkuopao," a Chinese bank in Shanghai which is connected with the Peking Government is arranging to put into circulation here $15,000,000 new bank-notes through the medium of native banks and exchange shops. These latter will be required to pay 50 per cent. of the face value of the notes the balance being payable by debenture bonds. Thus they will make a handsome profit and Peking will get [illegible] The share holders and principal trustees of the bank, says the newspaper quoted, are of the opinion that the undertaking will cause the people to suspect that the bank is rendering financial assistance to the Peking Government, and this would affect the business of the bank. Therefore, they desire to have the matter carefully reconsidered. It is reported, however, that the bank already has completed its arrangements with native bankers. "We hope," is the concluding comment, that that native bankers will not, for the sake of comparatively small profit, pursue a course which will tend to prolong internal troubles."

Mr. R. Wood, assistant editor of the North China Daily News," left Shanghai on Sunday by the C. N. S. Sinkiang for HongKong, en route for Scotland on leave.

RIOT IN NORTH SZECHUEN ROAD

Misguided Agitators' Absurd Claim Over Widening Plan: Police Called out

The hysterical outbursts against imaginary infringements of China's sovereign rights, on the part of Chapei Street Unions, came to a head on Thursday, when a squad of 40 to 50 police, European, Sikhs, Chinese and Japanese, were called out to North Szechuen Road Extension post-haste to deal with an ugly mob of loafers and agitators, some 400 strong, who were threatening to attack workmen employed by Messrs. Brandt & Rodgers in pulling down a number of houses for the purpose of widening the road to Kiangwan. Some rioting followed, the police were showered with bricks and a free fight occurred on the roofs of the houses concerned between the mob and the workmen.

The history of the outbreak is as follows. Some time ago Messrs. Brandt & Rodgers decided to pull down some houses on their property on the left hand side of North Szechuen Road, a short distance past Jukong Road. The property is registered at the British Consulate, and when the Municipal Council heard of it, they realized that an opportunity had arrived for them to proceed with the scheme for widening and straightening the road to Kiangwan. Accordingly they purchased the strip of land alongside the road on which Messrs. Brandt and Rodgers's houses were, with the intention to pull them down and use the space for widening the road. News of this leaked out, and meetings of various street unions in the vicinity were held, in which many foolish and inflammatory things were said. There was a good deal of talk about China's sovereign rights and resolutions were passed urging the people in Chapei to protest, forcefully if necessary.

TENANTS INTIMIDATED.

The result was that a large number of bad characters and people of the slum classes foregathered at about nine o'clock on Thursday morning, to await the arrival of the workmen and prevent them from doing anything. The tenants of the houses, meanwhile, had been intimidated by emissaries of the trouble-makers and all sorts—of threats were made against them if they consented to leave their houses. Consequently, when the workmen arrived, they were met by opposition from the people in the houses and the mob outside.

Previous to this, the Settlement police had received warning of the impending trouble and a small squad of four European police, two Chinese and two Japanese was sent to watch developments. They were to have been met by a squad of Chinese police, under the Chinese authorities, who were to have remanned with the Settlement Police and assisted them in case trouble did arise. The Chinese police failed, for as soon as they saw how many S.M.P. men there were, they went away again and were not seen any more. The crowd became very menacing and reinforcements from headquarters were sent for. A squad of 35 Sikhs, armed with rifles and bayonets, proceeded to the spot, and had not been there long when trouble did break out. Some of the crowd had stolen [illegible] to the roof of the houses and uprooted the roofs, where they attacked the workmen. A short and sharp struggle ensued on the house tops, in which the workmen were assisted by the police and succeeded in removing the trespassers. The next thing that happened was a good deal of noise and a shower of bricks from the street. The police chased the crowd around and the foreign inspectors drew the Sikhs up as the "reads" to frighten the would be rioters. This action had the desired effect and the crowd was quiet for the rest of the day. The workmen were guarded by the police all day long.

During all the trouble the tenants of the houses sat apathetically in their homes, only taking a lively interest in the proceedings when told to move. Then they made their refusal clear to all the world, raising their voices loud in expostulation.

PHANTOM SOVEREIGN RIGHTS.

In spite of so much noise about China's sovereign rights, as far as these houses are concerned, and this road, China's sovereign rights do not exist. The road is owned by the Shanghai Municipal Council, and the houses, over which the trouble is being made, were, until purchased by the Municipal Council, owned by Brandt & Rodgers, a British firm, and were registered at H.B.M. Consulate. The Chinese have nothing to do with the matter whatsoever, and the only thing this disturbance can be attributed to is the irresponsible propaganda of ignorant agitators.

The workmen again will have the protection of the police today, and until such time as all prospects of trouble shall have passed.

WEDDINGS

McGillivray-Campbell

A very pretty wedding took pace on Wednesday afternoon at Union Church, which was decorated for the occasion with bamboo sprays arching the central aisle and green and white flowers banking the chancel, when Miss Margaret Campbell, who recently arrived from Scotland, became the bride of Police Sergeant W. D. McGillivray. The Rev. A. N. Rowland performed the ceremony.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. Thomas Robertson, looked charming in a simple white brocaded charmeuse, becomingly cut. Her long tulle veil was gathered into a little lace coronet, fastened with orange blossoms and she carried a sheaf bouquet of calla lillies. The matron of honour, Mrs. Thomas Robertson, wore a figured gown of fawn crêpe de Chine, two little bridesmaids, Mildred Abbott and Barbara Harris, were very picturesque in their Dutch lace caps and soft yellow frocks. They carried big baskets of sunshiny tulips. The bridegroom was attended by Mr. A. Cameron as best man.

After the ceremony a reception was held at 35 Paotung Road, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Robertson. Among the gifts displayed was a handsome chest of silverware presented by the groom's associates in the Police Force.

Clarke-Paice

Miss Ethel Paice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Paice, of Merton Park, London, and Mr. Reginald George Cyril Clarke, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Clarke of Teddington, Middlesex, were quietly married in Holy Trinity Cathedral on Thursday afternoon, the Very Rev. Dean Symons officiating.

The bride, who was given away by Mrs. C. G. Patterson, wore a becoming gown of white georgette crepe embroidered in white beads and a white Leghorn hat, trimmed with white feathers. Her bouquet was of white carnations. Miss Toms acted as bridesmaid, wearing blue silk taffeta, with hat to match and carrying pink carnations. A reception, attended by close friends, was held at the home of Mrs. Patterson, 1 MacGregor Road. The honeymoon will be spent in Shanghai after which Mr. and Mrs. Clarke will make their home in Nanking, where Mr. Clarke is in business with the International Export Company (Kiangsu) Ld.

CONSTERNATION has been aroused in certain Chinese circles on the announcement in the vernacular papers recently that a certain Chinese bank, run on foreign lines, intends putting $15,000,000 into circulation. The local Labourers and Merchants' Mutual Association has sent a letter to the Foreign Style Chinese Bankers' Association pleading with them to take steps to prevent such a thing, as they are of opinion that if these notes are circulated by the Chinese native banks as suggested, a financial crisis affecting people in every walk of life, will be occasioned.

RUSSIAN EASTER IN SHANGHAI

Celebrated With Intense Devotion: Communists' Blunder in Abolishing Religion

When the Communists in Russia abolished religion from their country, they committed one of their gravest blunders; thousands upon thousands of possible adherents to the cause were lost to them, and the hatred with which they were regarded by a large section of their opponents was increased and confirmed, for the fervour of the Russians for their religion was heartfelt and genuine.

The period of the Russian Easter has just passed, and the devotion with which it was observed by the hundreds of refugees in Shanghai has aroused the admiration of all who have observed it. The period of Paskha as it is known, is to the Russians what Christmas is to us, and while Christmas is accorded great veneration in Russia, or was, Easter predominates as the outstanding festival of the year.

Sunday of this week is taken in the Russian Church as the Day of the Resurrection from the Dead, and the three Russian Churches in Shanghai observed the ceremony with due solemnity. The processions and services naturally lacked the splendour with which they were invested as of yore, by reason of the poverty of the Russian community here but even so the services were extraordinarily impressive and rendered the more so by the real religious enthusiasm of the people, who crowded out all the Russian churches, many people having to stand. And while the physical splendour of the scene was impaired by being more subdued than is usual, nothing could take away from the beauty of the chants and psalms.

The ritual is interesting. In each church a procession, led by the priests with all their signs of office, and in long flowing robes, enters the Church chanting sad and solemn tunes. A long service follows at the conclusion of which the procession emerges chanting in loud voices triumphal hymns and chants to symbolize that Christ has risen from the dead. These processions take place at 11 o'clock on the Saturday night and the people afterwards adjourn to their own homes to partake of special meals corresponding more or less to our Christmas dinner. All is given over to feasting and merry-making, the joy of which is heightend by its coming at the conclusion of a long period of fasting lasting for weeks, and during which no meat is eaten at all. This period of fasting is rendered the more severe and strict during the last week, so that the younger members of the families especially look forward to their Paskha dinner. The principal foods are huge hams and various kinds of meat, followed by unique cheese dishes and wonderful suger cakes. There is an old and somewhat curious custom, fully taken advantage of, whereby each young man is allowed to kiss any and all of the girls three times and no more after the services. This custom is merely a pleasant symbol of the general friendship and happiness felt by all at this time. Enmities are to be forgotten and the season must be observed as one of peace and goodwill to all men.

ALL FACTIONS UNITED.

A signifiant fact arising out of this year's ceremonies was the faithfulness with which this spirit was entered into. The Russian community is very much split up politically in Shanghai and hard things are often said. But at a period like this all political differences were dropped and the unity of the community as a whole made plain. Indeed, it could hardly be otherwise, for all are in the same ship of adversity and in unity alone can national self respect be maintained. The only section of the Russian community here which was not taken in to the general spirit of goodwill was that section composed of the Bolsheviks and Communists, who, since they have foresworn all religion, must of neccessity remain aloof.

The religious ceremonies will be carried on for some time to come, but to all intents and purposes the season is concluded as far as the people are concerned.

POLICE LONG SERVICE MEDALS

Despite the cold wind blowing across the Recreation Ground last Friday afternoon, a large number of people assembled to witness the parade of the Shanghai Municipal Police and the presentation of long service and meritorious award medals by the Chairman of the Municipal Council. There were 1,325 men on parade representative of all branches of the service, and presenting a very smart and imposing spectacle. The parade state of the various sections was:—European police, 150; Reserves, 82; Japanese, 30; Sikhs, 221; Indian warders, 60; Chinese, 782. Under Mr. K. J. McEuen, the Commissioner, the several detachments, commanded by the various Assistant Commissioners, formed up in a hollow square on the Polo Ground, the line on the north flank being composed of the mounted Sikhs and two battalions of armed Sikh and Chinese police. The other sides of the square were composed of the European police (a large number of whom had a brave showing of war medals), the Police Reserve, the Japanese police, detectives, and Sikhs and Chinese unarmed. In the centre was the S.V.C. band and in front of them the 104 members of the force who were to receive the medals. Amongst those present were Sir Skinner Turner, Mr. Peter Grain, Mr. Sidney Barton, C.M.G. (H. M. Consul-General) and members of the Consular staff, representatives from other consulates, Col. W. F. L. Gordon, C.M.G., D.S.O. Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe (acting Secretary of the Municipal Council), several distinguished Chinese officials, etc.

Mr. Fessenden, Chairman of the Council, arrived on the ground accompanied by the other members of the Council, and was received with a general salute. After inspecting the lines, Mr. Fessenden returned to the saluting base and distributed the medals, with a few words of congratulation to each recipient. Following this there was a march past of the armed detachments and then the police were grouped on a large stand for a photograph to be taken.

Following is a list of those who received long service awards and, in addition, Sub-Inspector Hermitage was given the meritorious service medal recently awarded to him:—

FIRE IN PRESIDENT MADISON

Contraband Matter Believed to Be the Cause: Mailbags Badly Damaged

Fire was discovered in the No. 5 hold of the str. President Madison early on Thursday morning, about four o'clock outside Fairy Flats and was extinguished by the good work of the crew. This hold contained the mails for Shanghai and Manila and it is thought by local shipping experts, that not internal combustion, normally caused, was responsible, but that contraband matter, shipped secretly in the first-class or parcel post matter, was the cause for the outburst.

The automatic fire detectors, which are affected by the suction tubes becoming impregnated with smoke, and a consequent alarm being sounded in the register in the pilot house, came nobly into play. Automatic fire extinguishers also got into quick action, which were supplemented by live steam from the boilers and short work was made of the trouble. This is not the only occasion that the automatic equipment of a President boat has checked a fire in its early stages and easily proves their extreme value.

To what extent the mails were damaged has not yet been ascertained and on Thursday evening the postal authorities were at the ship making a salvage as rapidly as possible, but not until a thorough check has been taken, will it be possible to estimate at all accurately how far the mail bags have suffered. It is, however, definitely established that a large amount of second-class mail matter is totally gone and many Shanghai people will find some of their letters charred and web.

ARCHDEACON MOULE AT THE C. E. M. S.

God's Revealed Plan for the World

In a simply delivered, pithy, address, Archdeacon Moule brought home to his hearers, the Church of England Men's Society and their guests, the scriptural truths embodied in his text—"God's Revealed Plan for the World"—at the Church House on Wednesday.

Outlining his address, the speaker declared that he must act upon three assumptions, namely, that there is a God, that He has a plan and, lastly that He has revealed it, made it known, through His Word. There is no intellectual conception of the Infinite Being. His presence is inevitable, and the belief in the Trinity from childhood was shared by countless number. Humanity coould not act upon the hypothesis that there was no plan, for every discovery of Nature and natural science made daily more clear that there was a calculated future, foreseen by the Divine, yes, the making of man, himself, was adapted to his future; the creation in his image, was the supreme conception of man's incarnation in God. Even the fall in the Garden of Eden was no surprise to the Creator, all such incursions being foreseen by Him long before they actually took place.

Archdeacon Moule went on to declare that the Bible, as the Word of God, contained the revelations of the Divine plan, beginning with the Voice in Genesis, and laying down a fixed time, which was to end, as the Scriptures asserted, at a definite time. The destiny of man was known, the issues were foreseen by Him and provision for the rescue of sinners who had become such by the original fall, had been made—the plan was all-inclusive and brooked no failure, for was it not of the All-high? The pursuit of the enemy, the devil, and his ultimate downfall, the conquest of war by peace and the triumph of right over wrong were not left to chance; God was omnipotent. A perpetual conflict would be maintained, but those who cry unto Jehovah know that Jehovah will be a light unto them—perpetual strife was a part of the plan, with no finite cure for natural ills, the remedy was not of this earth.

The message of the Cherubim, appearing to the chosen with the flaming sword, to Adam, to Isaiah, to Ezekiel and to the Apostle John, was portentous of the final outcome of the world. John saw the angel from Heaven, who came with chains to bind the evil one and to cast him into oblivion for 1,000 years, when the Son of man would come in a fiery cloud.

The speaker warned his listeners to keep an eye on Palestine for the development of God's plan, for the final purpose was to be brought to a successful conclusion through the chosen people of God, to Abraham and his descendants was entrusted the keeping of the plan and world salvation was to be accomplished through them; the monotheistic belief was to be preserved through the Jews and the hope of mankind rested with the Jew of Palestine.

Mr. Chang Yi-peng, chairman of the Shanghai Chinese Bar Association, who was, formerly Minister of Justice, has telegraphed to the Chapei Merchants' Association reporting that he has settled the Chapei Waterworks question and is drawing up an agreement with the Commissioner of Industry for the handing over of control by the provincial authorities to the local merchants. As soon as this is signed and approved by the Civil Governor, the change can take place. Meanwhile, the merchants have issued a statement to the effect that they will take over the company to-day.

DEEP-DRAFT WHARVES IN THE HUANGPU

Important Paper and Discussion by Shanghai Engineers

By Courtesy of the Engineering Society of China.

On the occasion of the reading of Mr. Karl Bryhn's paper on "Deep-Draft Wharves in the Huangpu" at the Engineering Society on the 15th instant there was an interesting discussion. (The paper was read by Dr. Chatley in the unavoidable absence of the author himself.)

Mr. Blom remarked on the unqualified recommendation of the open truss type of wharf and inquired if cross walls were not preferable to trusses and if caisson cylinder foundations had been considered. These caissons had given much satisfaction in Europe and in Java.

Mr. Powell said that the Vacuum Oil Co.'s Pootung wharf was partially founded on caissons and had proved satisfactory.

Mr. Clarke inquired as to the age of the piles examined for decay.

Mr. Forestier asked if a solid sheet pile backing was not apt to initiate a rupture plane and whether open spaced retaining piles were not preferable.

Mr. Keigwin gave some interesting details as to his experience with Holt's wharves in Hongkong and Shanghai. He mentioned in particular that in drawing some piles in Shanghai an initial force of 35 to 37 tons was necessary but that 20 tons sufficed to continue the withdrawal, these piles being 40 ft. in the soil. There appeared to be a tendency for the backfill to settle somewhat, even behind the sloping retaining wall and in the new wharf an attempt had been made to allow for the settlement of the rear piling by omitting certain cross bracing until equilibrium had been reached. He gave some particulars of the action of marine borers in Hongkong and, in regard to salinity, expressed the opinion that a well graded concrete of maximum density was almost impervious to sea water.

Mr. Tweedie Stoddart asked as to the low figure of 85 lb. per sq. ft. for skin friction in wharves.

Dr. Chatley, who had read the paper, said that his remarks were to be regarded as but incidental as the author was more in touch with the details of the work than he himself and would be asked to reply in writing to the questions.

As to the use of cross walls the minimum of hydrodynamic resistance under the wharf deck was very desirable to reduce silting. Caissons had not been studied to a great extent but it was probable that their obstruction to flow, relatively small surface area, and exposure to lateral thrust were objectable in the Shanghai soil. As to the Vacuum Oil Co.'s wharf the caissons were only used at the back and the wharf was not a deep draft one.

As to the age of the old piles, the oldest hardwood pile was 60 years and the oldest Oregon pine pile 40 years. Both were still sound below the level indicated as safe.

On the problem of planes of rupture and sheet piling he preferred to avoid discussion as this was a very involved question which would provide a subject for many papers and contained many complex factors. The stability was connected with the level of the appeal was adjourned.

He hazarded the opinion that the back settlement at Holt's wharf might be due to the overstrain which Mr. Bryhn indicated as occurring when the elastic limit of the clay was approached. He concurred with Mr. Keigwin as to the improved resistance of dense concrete, but suggested that the accurate grading of concrete was too new a process for the resistance to sea water to be accurately determined.

As to the low skin friction value this included an allowance for occasional large variations of loading. If the maximum load was really known the higher values at the top of the table could be used

A ROAD ROUND THE SETTLEMENT

Fresh Agitation by National Road Association to Hem In Shanghai

Once more the question of constructing a road round the Settlement to prevent "encroachment and usurpation" by the foreign community has been brought up by the National Road Construction Association (better known as the Good Roads Movement of China) which recently appealed through circular to the foreign community for funds with which to erect a new building and which is being administered in the foreign settlements, presumably because it is safer to work here than on Chinese territory where the organizers and secretaries would no doubt be liable to exactions from which they are free in the Settlements.

It is interesting to note in connexion with this report that the chairman of the Board of Directors is Dr. C. T. Wang whilst Mr. Hsu Yuan (Commissioner of Foreign Affairs here) is vice-chairman. The general secretary is Mr. Wu Shan (former Vice-Minister of Justice in Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Constitutional Government in Canton half a dozen years ago).

THAT WICKED COUNCIL.

In a letter to the "military and civil authorities, the members of the District Assemblies of Shanghai and Paoshan, the members of the Chambers of Commerce and the gentry," the National Road Construction Association states:—

"Apropos of the proposal of the foreigners (i.e. the Municipal Council, the Consular Body and the Diplomatic Corps) this Association, a year ago, lodged a strong opposition to the attempt of the Shanghai Municipal Council to extend the Settlement at Zaukadoo, to collect taxes and other revenues from the merchants and residents of that section of Chinese territory for four quarters, and to establish a fire-station in the vicinity. We suggested at the time that a road be built round the International Settlement and the French Concession to prevent foreigners from forcing their way over into Chinese territory and encroaching upon and usurping China's sovereign rights.

"Another year has passed but our suggestion has not been accepted nor has any action been taken. Now we learn that the foreigners are clamouring for an extension of the Settlements in return for the rendition of the International Mixed Court. A formal demand has been presented by the Diplomatic Corps. All kinds and all nationalities of people live in Shanghai: they see our Chinese territory and want to grasp it. They complain that Chinese territory is insanitary and unclean, but this is their pretence for their wanting to extend the Settlements.

'AS GOOD AS A BOYCOTT.

"If, therefore, we want to stop them, we must construct a road round the French Concession and the International Settlement, and thus get at the root of the evil. It will be as good as a boycott. In this we must have unity. Hence all concerned, your honourable selves and your honourable organizations, are invited to unite with us to secure the co-operation of the military and civil authorities, the law courts, the heads of different public organizations and the influential gentry and merchants in your district to oppose the foreigners' attempts. We must unite in demanding, under threat of punishment, of the authorities the immediate repair of the roads and the introduction of municipal government so that Chinese territory might be as well administered as in the Settlements. With the encircling road, there can be no question of extensions."

The Chinese press states that, owing to lack of orders, the Lunghua Arsenal is now turning out but seven rifles a day, the work on these taking up the full time of 800 workers. The other day we were told that the Arsenal was feverishly at work on munitions for Tupan Lu, of Chêkiang, who is reliably reported to be daily enrolling recruits at Hangchow.

MYSTERIOUS SERIES OF CRIME

A Chinese in Railway Employ Shot Through the Stomach: Work of Vengeance

A Chinese shot in the stomach and the jaw was found on Thursday of last week lying helpless in Myburgh Road and under police orders was removed to Paulun Hospital, where he was operated upon but died at 6.30 a.m. last Friday. From papers in his pockets it was found that he had lived in the French Concession and it was thought that he had been employed in the Railway Station. He evidently was the informer of the Chief Detective of the City police. Trails of blood, though faint, led officers from where he was found to Tsing Lien Alleyway, just north of Tsingtao Road, to the back door of 242 Park Road, where [illegible] found. The police believe that deceased was on his way to his work, when he was met and decoyed to the spot, whereupon the ruffians shot him. Struggling on his way to the Police Station he collapsed, in Myburgh Road. Residents deny any connexion with the affair, as also that they heard any shots. Investigations are proceeding.

CHASE OVER THE ROOFS.

The appearance of four robbers at 370 Lau Dong Ka Loong alleyway, one of them armed with a black pistol and all of them speaking the local dialect, was [illegible] received at West Hongkew, sent in by a Chinese constable off duty. A squad of men were detailed to the address, where they learned that three men had made off when the pistol was seen in the hand of one. They had gained admission through a back door of the premises, telling the amah that they desired to speak to Mr. Wong, residing on the top floor). The latter locking himself into his room, left it to the coolie and the amah to go for assistance. The police party searched the premises but could find no one, but on going on to the roof they saw a man on the drying-stage of [illegible] adjoining house who [illegible] over the roof [illegible] when [illegible] A chase ensued [illegible] would expect to see in the cinema, the robber outran his pursuers to [illegible] police and slid to the earth in safety, whence he made [illegible] with [illegible] shots fired.

LOOTING OF IRON WORKS.

An unarmed robbery of an iron works under construction at the corner of Pingliang and Ningkuo Roads took place last Friday morning at 1.30 o'clock. It was asing at 1.30 o'clock. It was ascertained that four men entered the premises, bound and gagged the watchman, whom they found asleep, with articles of his wearing apparel, stole his other clothes and shoes and $3. They proceeded into the yard and loaded wheelbarrows with castings and made off. The watchman unloosened his fastenings within half an hour and reported to his master what had taken place. The police went to the spot, but could find no traces and an alarm was sent out. About three o'clock a Sikh Havildar arrested a Chinese who stood beside two wheelbarrows full of loot, and took him to the station, where he divulged the names of two others and where they might be found. Acting on this information a party went to 179 Pingliang Road and arrested two more and recovered the remainder of the loot. A remand was asked for at the Mixed Court several hours later.

SHOOTING AFFRAY IN FOKIEN ROAD.

About 3.30 p.m. on Saturday information was received at Louza Police Station to the effect that a Chinese had been shot in Fokien Road, near to the junction with Hankow Road, and had been taken to the Shantung Road Hospital, suffering from a bullet wound on the right-hand side of the stomach. Inquiries elicited the statement that when walking along Fokien Road on Saturday afternoon, at the time mentioned, and near the corner of Hankow Road, he was met by two men, entire strangers to him, dressed in blue jackets and pants, one of whom, without speaking, drew a pistol and shot him in the stomach. Immediately afterwards he was found by a Chinese carpenter, who knew him, and was conveyed to hospital. The wounded man is 22 years of age and though recently out of employment was formerly a shop assistant.

TWO MORE CHINESE FOUND DEAD.

The startling record of crime with the revolver was added to on Monday by two cases of murder in the Settlement, making five within seven days. In both these cases, a .32 automatic pistol was used, the victim was shot in the back, and nothing was found upon the body of the deceased to assist the police in identification, similar baffling features having attended one or two of the other cases which have recently occurred.

The first case was reported to the police at Gordon Road station about 5 a.m. on Tuesday, a Chinese constable on patrol duty reporting the discovery of the body of a Chinese lying on a piece of waste land in the country off Penang Road. Upon examination, it was found that the dead man was about 33 years of age and apparently of the clerk type, fully and fairly well dressed. He had received two wounds, one in the back and one in the right breast, and on the ground near the body three empty .32 cartridge cases were found. There was absolutely nothing else for the police to work upon, and no information was to be got from people in the neighbourhood. There is only one small Chinese house, standing some distance from the spot where the body was discovered, and the occupier of this, upon being questioned, was only able to state that at about 8 o'clock on Monday evening he heard some noise which sounded like a shot, but took no notice.

The second case occurred about midnight on Monday in the Ziang Loong Dong alleyway, on the south side of the Recreation Ground near Taku Road, news of this being received by telephone from a Chinese constable. Foreign detectives who immediately went to the scene found the dead body of a Chinese, seemingly about 25 years of age, covered the alleyway, and with such deadly aim that the bullet entered the back of the head and passed out through the forehead. One empty cartridge case was found near the body. The deceased was very well dressed and had the appearance of a business man, and a curious feature is that, although his clothing exhibited no sign of disarrangement, such as might have been done by a search for money or valuables, the pockets were absolutely empty except for a solitary dollar bill, and there was nothing to lead to the identification of the victim. The crime was committed in a densely populated area, but again no information was forthcoming from people in the neighbourhood.

KING'S DAUGHTERS' FETE

Over 1,000 Guests at Marble Hall

The tea dance on Wednesday in aid of the King's Daughters' Society's Convalescent Home for Children was an unqualified success. All who visited "Marble Hall," the imposing residence of Mr. E. S. Kadoorie, where the function was held, were loud in their praise both of the beautiful house which they were privileged to see, and also of the excellence of the entertainment provided by the committee of the King's Daughters.

More than 1,000 guests were present, beginning with those who came early to enjoy a long afternoon of bridge or mahjongg in the panelled billiard room and ending with those who lingered on in the ballroom till the Hotel Parisien orchestra played their last foxtrot. The tea served was delicious and the Girl Guides of the First and Third Companies proved their efficiency as deft waitresses. The Boy Scouts of the Cathedral Company, too, were helpful in many ways. The sale of sweets, flowers and cigarettes added considerably to the funds, but the total profits could not be estimated yesterday.

Sir Skinner Turner, in a happy speech, voiced the thanks of the King's Daughters' Society to Mr. Kadoorie for his kindness in allowing his estate to be used for this purpose, adding as an aside that he was sure the doors could be opened to no better society. "This is a wonderful place," said Sir Skinner Turner, "and it is a wonderful opportunity for us to come out to see it. I will therefore ask you all to express your thanks in the customary manner." Hearty applause followed these words and Lady Turner was presented with a bouquet of flowers.

Miss Mabel Jansen, the Chairman of the Convalescent Home Committee, then thanked all present for their support and expressed her particular appreciation of the untiring service rendered by Mrs. Gensburger, of the Society, in making arrangements for this fête. She then presented a basket of flowers to Mrs. Gensburger.

Mr. Kadoorie briefly expressed his thanks to all who had assisted this worthy charity.

SEIZURE OF ARMS ON M.M.S. PAUL LECAT

175,000 Rounds of Ammunition

In a search of the M.M.S. Paul Lecat, on her arrival here from Marseilles, vid Hongkong, the Customs authorities discovered 90 canvas bags containing 30 Mauser pistols and no fewer than 175,000 rounds of ammunition, concealed in one of the ventilating shafts connecting with the engine-room. Difficulties always existing under the laws of extraterritoriality were perhaps responsible for the fact that no arrest was made and that the matter rests with the seizure of the smuggled munitions, but it is worthy of recall that in Hongkong, on the same steamer, 30 bags of which the contents were unknown, were seized by the Customs officials and four arrests were made.

MR. J. W. O. Davidson is expected to return shortly from leave and will proceed to Tientsin as Senior British Vice-Consul, taking the place of Mr. R. S. Pratt, who has left for England on Home leave.

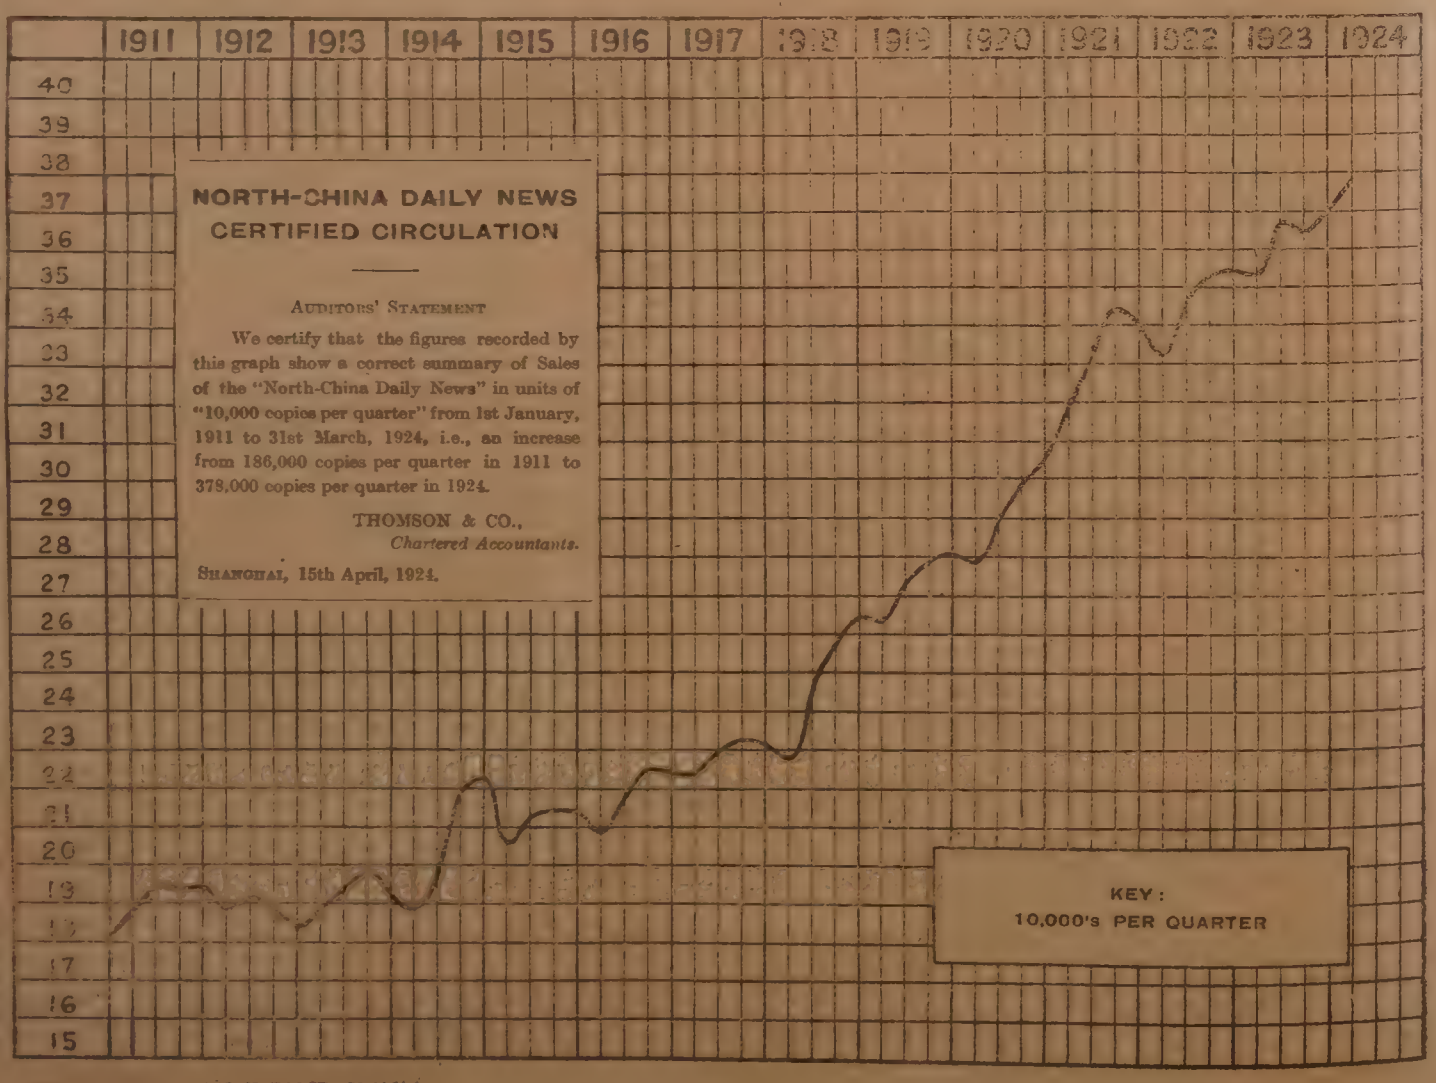
GROWTH OF "NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS" CIRCULATION GRAPHICALLY ILLUSTRATED

Increase of Over 100 Per Cent. Recorded In Thirteen-Year Period Despite War Years and Post-War Depression

There was a day in the journalistic world when the circulation figures of a vast number of newspapers could be truly labelled "figures of speech." Meeting the claims of [illegible] was confined to the simple matter of adding a cipher to the figures for the preceding year. This practice of ungrounded claims was happily stopped by the advent in Great Britain and in America of an organization known as the A.B.C. (Audit Bureau of Circulation), growing out of the legitimate demand of advertisers for certified information as to the circulation of newspapers which received their expenditures.

The A.B.C. has not extended its operations to China, but the need for it is felt in the Far East, where more than one newspaper still is given to indiscriminate dealing in superlatives when speaking of circulation. The "North-China Daily News" long ago recognized the right of advertisers to demand known quantities and it is the only newspaper in China that publishes annually a statement of circulation certified by a public auditor.

Messrs. Thomson & Co., chartered accountants, recently completed their audit of our circulation books and the results are incorporated in the accompanying "graph", which will be found self-explanatory. It should be emphasized that the "growth" reflected in this chart is a purely normal, unforced growth, and that the present circulation has been attained without resorting to any special catchpenny device.



CHINA SOCIETY OF SCIENCE AND ARTS

A Lecture on Bamboo: Neither Tree nor Shrub But Grass

A well attended meeting of the China Society of Science and Arts was held on Saturday afternoon at the house of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Bena, 90 Jessfield Road. After tea had been served Professor W. M. Porterfield of St. John's University gave a very interesting talk upon "Bamboo," presenting many points new to most of his audience in a clear and graphic manner and illustrating his remarks with charts and exhibits.

To begin with Professor Porterfield stated that bamboo is neither a tree nor a shrub, but a tree grass, and as such, the oldest representative of the grass family. The whole bamboo plant is not a single culm with its basal roots, but hundreds of these culms or underground radial stems, all connected under the surface, and this is the reason why a bamboo tree will not grow alone, so that a grove of bamboo may be considered as one main growth.

The rapid growth of the bamboo was also mentioned, the lecturer saying that bamboos reach their full height in from 44 to 60 days. The square bamboo—specimens of which were shown—reaches its maximum height of 40 feet in 44 days and the giant bamboo is almost like Jack's beanstalk in its rapid increase, the record growth being 44 millimeters in a single day.

Some species of bamboo flower yearly, but the more ordinary flowering of this unusual grass is only once in 32 or 33 years and after such a late blooming the culm turns yellow and dies as do all grasses. Another peculiarity about this tree-grass is that bamboos in widely separated places will flower simultaneously, thus endorsing Professor Porterfield's contention that the family is the unit of bamboo life and that these brother and sister trees, although now far distant from each other, came originally from the same mother plant. In India during the famine of 1864 the bamboos flowered generally and furnished sustenance from their seeds for about 50,000 persons.

At the close of the lecture many questions were asked by the appreciative audience and a final vote of thanks to the speaker was proposed by Mr. A. de C. Sowerby.

Shanghai Recreation Club: Celebrating Some Famous Victories

One of the most successful seasons in the history of the Shanghai Recreation Club was celebrated by a dinner held at the Hotel Parisien on Saturday night and very well attended. It was no small distinction for the Club to be able to put on record the following successes:

Winners of the Cricket League, 1923; Winners of the Tennis League, 1923; Winners of the Wallace Lawn Bowls Cup, 1923; Winners of the Shanghai Football League (Dewar Shield) and of the Skottowe challenge cup, 1923-4; and the speakers of the evening might have been pardoned had they been anything more than what the popular President and chairman, Mr. R. P. Phillips, described as "a bit modest" about these sporting triumphs.

Among the guests were Mr. Sidney Barton, H. M. Consul-General, Sir Skinner Turner, President of the Shanghai Lawn Tennis Association, Captain E. I. M. Barrett, Mr. W. C. G. Clifford, and other representatives of the Shanghai Football Club, and Mr. F. S. Bridges, Hon. secretary of the Shanghai Football Association.

The evening was pleasantly spent, Messrs. G. B. Stormes, R. F. Willis, Graham Barrow and Kay contributing to the programme with songs and, the last named, with some exceedingly neat card tricks. There was a short toast list, beginning with "The King," and Sir Skinner Turner acknowledged the President's welcome to guests. He paid a tribute to the great part played for many years past by the Recreation Club in the sporting life of the Settlement, and expressed his appreciation of Shanghai's excellent status in amateur sport. Commenting on the wonderful use made of the Recreation Ground, Sir Skinner said he doubted whether there was another such piece of ground in the world of which such enormous use was made. Rumours had been heard about cutting a road through the ground, but he trusted this would never be done. The Recreation Ground was one of the best things we had in Shanghai, and it was to the interest of all to see that it remained as it is.

The popular ex-president of the Club, Mr. Frank Jones, proposed the toast of "Shanghai Sportsmen" in a great speech, and Captain Barrett responded, expressing his appreciation of the keen and sporting games which have for so many years been provided by the Recs in friendly rivalry with the Cricket Club.

MINISTRY OF HEALTH IN 1000 B. C.

Mr. Sowerby's Lecture on Medical Science in China

Mr. A. de C. Sowerby delivered a fascinating lecture to the literary section of the British Women's Association on Tuesday on the practict of medeicine by the Chinese.

This most ancient of the arts goes back at least 5,000 years, said the speaker, and claims the mythical Emperor Fu Hai as its first patron. His successor, Shen Nung, was the first to try the healing effects of herbs, even experimenting upon himself, and recorded his results in a herbal bearing his name.

Medical practice in China has been largely a secret art, and its carefully guarded formulæ have been handed down from father to son. The Chou dynasty (1000-300 B.C.) marked considerable advance in the healing art and a State Medical Service was inaugurated, consisting of the Ministry of Health for officials, a Public Health Department for the common people, a department specializing in the care of abscesses, sores and the like, an Imperial Dietry and a Veterinary Surgery.

Many books on medicine, surgery and healing have been written, beginning with the Emperor Sheng Nung's treatise on Medicine (2823 B.C.). The pulse was studied, but as these early practitioners had no knowledge of the heart and its functions their elaborate treatments based thereon had no value. An investigation into Chinese "pulse-practice" made by L. C. Arlington, will appear in the July issue of the "China Journal of Science and Art." Cupping, the use of plasters, of the needle or acupuncture and cauterizing are now practised by the Chinese. They employ most extraordinary materials, some of which have medicinal value while the worth of others is purely mythical.

Deer horn, at $80 an ounce, is used as a tonic and rejuvenator, and probably does possess certain tonic qualities. Bufin, an extract from the large warts on the back of a toad's neck, has a distinctly stimulating effect upon the heart. Their herbal remedies are far superior to any others and in this line of investigation the Chinese medical practitioners have done good work. More picturesque specifics are tigers' bones and blood for cowardice, wolf's brain for scarlet fever, snakes and dried lizards as tonics, magpies and woodpeckers for consumption and dried silk worms for fevers. Bears' gall stones are regarded as a cure for eye troubles and are worth $40 apiece.

The mysterious dual powers of Nature, known as the Yang and the Yin play a most important part, the Yang representing the male principle or positive and the Yin the female principle or negative.

CHARITY FAIR AT THE CARLTON

Successful Plan to Raise Funds for Destitute Babies' Home

The Charity to secure funds for the new building for St. Monica's Home for Destitute Babies, held in the Dining Hall of the Carlton Cafe on Saturday afternoon and evening was a decided success from a financial and social standpoint. The great room was decorated with bamboo and spring flowers against which the blue and white Fêe colours showed up most effectively, the same colour scheme being carried out by the ladies in attendance who wore white dresses with sky blue aprons and ribbands. The flower stall, commandingly placed in the centre of the hall, made a very attractive bower with its white trellised woodwork and exquisite plants and flowers.

At the ceremonies of opening the Fair Mrs. D. Lewis, the Chairman, welcomed the large number which had already assembled and said in part:

"The object in view is, I venture to think, one which must appeal to every man and woman, for it is to help most innocent and helpless things on earth—little babies.

"The work is not new; it has been going on for some time and has been steadily growing, so that the accommodation is no longer sufficient, and it is to raise funds to extend it that this Fair is being held.

"One thing more, the work is in the hands of the Rev. Mothers of the Institution of the Holy Family and perhaps some of you may wonder why none of the Rev. Mothers are present. The reason is that the rules of their Order (The Helpers of the Holy Souls) do not permit it but I am charged by them to convey to you their gratitude for your help and to tell you that your charity will never be forgotten.

"We have been so exceptionally fortunate as to secure Mme. Wilden to open the Fair, and I will now call upon her to do so and then I hope you will one and all cast economy to the winds and everyone of you spend right royally."

Mme. Wilden, the wife of the French Consul-General, then declared the Bazaar open, after which she was presented with a bouquet of pale pink carnations tied with blue and white ribbons, carried by one of the babies for whom the new building is designed, winsome Baby Josephine. The patrons had a busy afternoon inspecting the attractions offered on every side, trying their luck in various wheels of fortune, purchasing the beautiful and useful articles offered for sale, sampling the delicious waffles, punch and sweets for sale, taking tea and listening to the orchestra. Besides all these amusements there was an interesting programme arranged by Mr. J. P. Fonseca and given in the ball room during the afternoon, in which Miss May de Souza sang, Mrs. Moller danced, members of the Juvenile Lyrists performed and an appealing tableau by the babies of the Home was presented by Miss Armstrong.

It was reported in Chinese circles on Monday that the Peking Government, as the result of a recommendation by the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, is contemplating the re-establishment of the Shanghai Bureau for the Registration of Trademarks.

A band of armed robbers who broke into a Chinese house at 610 Haiphong Road met with a hot reception from the owner, who, forunately for himself, kept a revolver on the premises. The men broke into the premises in the early hours of Wednesday morning by cutting a hole in the fence, through which they climbed. The householder heard them, and getting his gun crept on to the scene and fired at them as they were at work. He believes he shot one man, as he saw him drop, but the police can find no bloodstains. The shots were heard by a Sikh Police havildar and a Chinese constable near at hand who immediately proceeded to the scene, but they were too late. Though arduous inquiries have since been made, there have been no arrests. The owner of the house is a Mr. Wong Hong-chong, manager of the A.B.C. Underwear Company, at 169 Markham Road. His house has been entered by robbers on a previous occasion, which accounts for his preparedness.

MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS

Reserve of Officers.—G. E. Mitchell, Esq., late Captain Machine Gun Co., to be Lieutenant.

Public Health Report for March.

The death-rate among foreigners was slightly below the usual March death-rate, and among Chinese about the average.

Smallpox has declined very much since February. Among foreigners 4 cases were notified. One, a very mild case, was a resident who had been successfully vaccinated 12 months ago. The other three, all non-residents, were fatal. One of these had never been successfully vaccinated; one had not been vaccinated since an alleged attack of Smallpox 12 years ago. The third had marks of vaccination, but not of recent date.

16 Chinese deaths were reported as against 29 last month.

Influenza.—Four deaths of residents were attributed to this disease, three of whom were Japanese and the fourth a Japanese-born British subject. Four other resident cases were notified.

Diphtheria.—Six cases were notified among the resident community.

Beri-Beri.—One Japanese resident died of this disease.

Tuberculosis.—Ten fatal cases were reported among foreigners, of whom six were residents.

Encephalitis Lethargica.—No further cases have been reported this month.

Vaccinations.—8,487 free vaccinations were performed at Branch Health Offices.

Mosquito Prevention.—Arrangements have been made for the active prosecution of this work, but its success must depend on the continuous co-operation of householders. One neglected backyard may breed enough mosquitoes to annoy a whole neighbourhood. In consultation with Mr. A. de C. Sowerby the Department is starting a mosquito-eating fish farm, and if the experiment is successful, we hope to be able to supply the fish gratis to applicants on whose premises they might be useful. They are likely to be of use chiefly in ornamental ponds, stagnant creeks, flooded fields and other collections of water which cannot, for various reasons, be satisfactorily treated with oil.

BILLIARDS

Stevenson at the Country Club

Playing at the Country Club on Monday against Captain Barrett, Mr. H. W. Stevenson gave a beautiful exhibition of artistic billiards, and this notwithstanding that he was feeling poorly with a vaccinated arm and had been in bed all day. The game was 800 up, Captain Barrett receiving 350 and at the outset a warm tribute should be paid to the latter's very fine play. He showed admirable judgment and touch, opened with a break of 41, and played with much grace and accuracy. In the latter half he seemed to be so much overcome with admiration for his opponent that he rather forgot his own share. But he is none the less to be thanked and congratulated on his contribution to a delightful evening.

Of Stevenson's play, it is not so much the size of the breaks as his perfect artistry. He reminds one of some great musician who has all the tricks of technique which lesser men glory in but scorns to use any to excess. Nursery cannons, spot strokes, massés, middle pocket losers, Stevenson commands them all, but seems only to use each to just that extent which will, as it were, weave the whole break into some exquisitely variegated tapestry. His best break last night was 203 and it would be impossible to conceive one more gracefully arranged. It included every sort of stroke, and some magnificent top of the table play—a cannon, the red ball down and Stevenson's ball arranging itself for another cannon, again the red down but this time the white comes back for a new sort of cannon. Then a loser, then a long cannon from baulk and the red ball crossing over to the edge of the opposite top pocket. Twice in this break he extricated himself with a cushion cannon of great difficulty (there being so little room for the first object ball to clear the second) and in each case he found position again. Then came a beautiful series of about 40 nursery canons, no ball moving more than an inch or two, then more open play and then the break ended on a difficult winner. After the interval Stevenson opened with 158 which included two massés and a lovely run through, in which it seemed impossible the object ball should get out of the way, some more nurseries and some lovely screw shots. The great feature of these is the gentleness with which they are played, however acute the angle. And how the average amateur bangs at a screw shot. But unless Stevenson wishes, the object ball travels but a foot or two. Of course it really travels just where he wishes. That is the beauty of his play.

After the game he showed us several fancy shots, some amusing like the cannon with one ball on the floor, some valuable like the dead straight run through loser along the cushion or the massé with all three balls in a straight line and nearly touching. And then came a competition for a cue by the spectators—who should make the biggest break, with a wonderful set of balls which did the most unaccountable things But because this report had to be written we do not know who won. Probably the man who hit hardest.

To night Stevenson plays Mr. Porter at the Town Hall and no billiard-lover should miss seeing the game.

Johnson v. Porter

Having somewhat unexpectedly been dismissed from the championship, Messrs. R C. K. Johnson and C. W Porter played an "unofficial final" at the Town Hall last Friday and the game of 1,200 up resulted in Johnson winning by 89 points In the first session, Johnson was in excellent form and at the interval had scored 600 against Porter's 338, the leader's best break being 87. After dinner, he continued to maintain a comfortable lead, though in the latter stages of the game Porter, with several excellent breaks in the neighbourhood of 50, considerably reduced the lead. One of his best efforts was a nicely played 60 (after losing the white at 14), and a 53 brought him to within 55 of his opponent (1,100-1045), but Johnson got away again with several useful breaks and finally went to game with the score reading:

Johnson	1,200
Porter	1,111

Johnson was the more consistent of the two and on the whole played a better game, his striking and judgment of pace being the more accurate, while he made excellent use of the red ball in the middle pockets.

Stevenson v. Porter

The first of two exhibition games was played at the Town Hall last Tuesday, the ex-champion meeting Mr. C. Porter and conceding 350 points in a game of 800. Porter played very nice billiards, and got several breaks in the neighbourhood of 50 and one excellently played 69. He was no match for the professional, however, although Stevenson was not in his best form. His best work was a delightfully played 125, in the making of which he kept the balls at the top of the table and scored with beautiful precision. How fine an artist Stevenson is in this special scoring method was shown by comparison when Porter had similar position, Stevenson taking the balls to and fro across the table with wonderful accuracy and Porter usually breaking up position at the second stroke and finding refuge in a middle pocket. Stevenson was worth watching in everything he did, quite apart from the total of the break, his style of delivery and position play being perfect. It was noticeable that on every occasion he studied the the shortest route to the top of the table, using the middle pockets only to gain the necessary position, and never once playing a short or long jenny. Porter, as has been said, put up quite a good game, and was beaten by 81 points.

Stevenson v. Johnson

Stevenson was in great form at the Town Hall on Wednesday in his game with R.C.K., Johnson. The latter was unwell and scarcely fit for the game, and to add to his misfortune, the professional was in a particularly good scoring mood, the result being that Johnson was a spectator for the greater part of the game, scoring 100 by the time Stevenson had reached his eighth century. Beginning with a 35, and failing to drop the red—a shot which he usually plays with unerring accuracy—Stevenson went to the table again and set up a fascinating 102, 53 and 163 following in rapid succession. The latter break was a very fine example of Stevenson's extraordinary skill at the top of the table, delicacy of touch and, on the rare occasions necessary, force, being used with delightful accuracy in retaining or regaining position. A difficult kiss cannon from the top cushion to the middle pocket, missed by a fraction of an inch, brought the effort to an end Johnson could do very little with the position left, and Stevenson went on again with 14, 76, 99 and 136, another break in which mastery of touch and strength was shown. Johnson here put up a 32, also at the top of the table, and showing at least that Stevenson's exact science has been noted even if it cannot easily be mastered. Stevenson was left with 21 to get for game, and went out with a beautifully played final shot, having the balls in a dead straight line along the top cushion and running through both, leaving the balls well in position It was the best exhibition Stevenson has yet given.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

May 3.

The markets in general again have taken on a dull tendency and the week has been very slack. Such dull periods not infrequently are laid to the account of race meetings and it is usual to hear that business always is slow just before, during and for a while after any big meeting. However, this time the blame is not being put on the races, though a large percentage of the ponies entered are poor enough to be blamed for anything. Mostly, the slackness is attributed to a reaction from the almost exciting times of the last few weeks. Chinese, too, have been attracted away from the cotton and yarn markets by what have appeared to them to be the better chances of making money offered by the heavy dealings that have been the order on the gold market.

PIECE GOODS.

A temporary falling-off in the demand made things somewhat dull, but there are no signs of easier prices. Indeed, there were improvements in cases where dealers had orders to fill, and it was only where there was a lack of orders that there was any falling away, so it is accepted that prices will remain quite strong. A useful trade demand for Greys and Whites continues, but it has comfortably been met by new arrivals of indent goods and first hand stock sales have been of no great account. New stuff has been going away very quickly, some even before it has seen the godowns. Manchester still is rather too near the clouds.

COTTON AND YARN.

China Cotton.—For some time past there has been a great deal of business on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange, but, as already stated, this week it was deserted in favour of the gold market and there was a distinct slackening of interest. There has been a report that Japanese mills in Shanghai have purchased 6,000 to 7,000 bales of Indian cotton. Yesterday morning's closing exchange quotations for China cotton were:—May, 46.95; June, 46.50; July, 45.85; August, 44.60; September, 40.90; October, 38.90. Spot quotations were:—Tungchow, 49; Shanghai, 45½; Shensi, 46 to 47; Hankow, 45.

Yarn.—This market suffered equally with cotton. Yesterday morning's closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—May, 178.70; June, 176; July, 173.60; August, 171.80; September, 168.90; October, 165.80.

PRODUCE.

Political conditions at Home and in the United States have joined in the conspiracy to prevent exporters doing business, and, with the exception of a slight increase of interest in egg products, it only can be said that the produce market is unchanged, which means that there is next to nothing doing. European business generally is dull and buyers' ideas of prices continue to be considerably below local values.

U. S. COTTON TRADE

A Gloomy Outlook: Factories Overstocked With High-Priced Goods

London, Apr. 28.

A gloomy account of the cotton trade in the United States was given by Mr. Bartlett, President of the New York Cotton Exchange, on his arrival at Liverpool from New York this morning.

Mr. Bartlett said that last year, whilst the cotton boom was at its height, American mills took the bulk of American raw cotton. The boom had now gone and American manufacturers were overstocked with high-priced goods, while cotton goods from Britain were cheaper than American goods owing to the cheaper labour in Lancashire. It remained to be seen whether the new cotton crop, which was expected to be large, would ease the situation.—Reuter.

Decline in Production of U. S. Commodities

New York, Apr. 27.

The Federal Reserve Board reports that the production of basic commodities decreased by 3 per cent. in March. The wholesale and retail trade declined by about 8 per cent. Prices fell 6 per cent.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. Bank Rate

New York, Apr. 30.

The Federal Reserve Bank has lowered the re-discount rate from 4½ per cent. to 4 per cent.—Reuter's American Service.

Hongkong & Whampoa Dork Co.'s Successful Tender

Hongkong, Apr. 29.

The Hongkong & Whampoa Dock Company have secured in competition the order to build two passenger steamers for Sydney owners.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Rubber Export Duty

London, Apr. 30.

It is officially announced that the percentage of standard production of rubber exportable on the minimum duty from Ceylon, the Straits Settlements and the Malay States for the quarter beginning on May 1 has been fixed at 60.—Reuter.

NEW CHINESE BANKING LAWS.

Old Laws Amended and Brought Up to Date

The first general law governing modern banks in this country, consisting 16 articles, was promulgated in the 34th year of Kuang Hsu (1908), as was also the first law governing savings banks, which consisted of 13 articles. No revision of these enactments has taken place since the establishment of the Republic. In 1920, the Amended General Law Governing Banks, the Draft Rules for its Enforcement, and the Draft Savings Bank Law were framed, but they have never been officially promulgated, says the "Sinwanpao."

Since numerous banks organized on modern lines have come into existence in recent years, the enactment of some suitable law to enable the Government to exercise its supervision and control over the banking business, as well as to provide the banks with the necessary authority and guidance in the pursuit of their legitimate callings, cannot be further delayed. At several conferences held before, the Chinese Banking Associations passed resolutions on this subject and petitioned the Ministry of Finance to amend the old laws or to frame some new laws, but without result. It was only at their last conference at Peking, that the Ministry of Finance referred the General Law Governing Banks ment of same to them for con and the Rules for the enforce sideration and annotation.

The General Law Governing Banks consists of 25 articles, and the Rules for its Enforcement 18 articles. They appear to cover more comprehensive grounds and to have been more carefully drawn up than the laws handed down from the Ching Dynasty. they certainly are an improve ment to their predecessors. Their promulgation by the President will, it is hoped, soon follow, as it is always better to have a law, however imperfect, than to be without one.

Most of the banks promoted in recent years only applied for registration after starting business. The present Law is based upon the principle of exercising supervision at the outset and taking all possible previous precaution against abuse. It requires a bank to submit its rules and regulations for official approval and comply with all other stipulations of the Law, before registration is granted to it. If its capital is to be raised by share subscriptions, the sanction of the Finance Ministry must be obtained prior to inviting the pultic to take up shares. It must also request the superior local official to inspect and verify the amount of capital raised, sign a certificate to that effect and forward it to the Finance Ministry. The bank can only commence operations after having registered itself and obtained a business licence from the Ministry of Finance. Any contravention of the Law will be punished according to a separate set of penalty regulations.

Rubber Output

The output of rubber from the Taiping Estates for the month of March was 5,561 lb., the decrease being due to the wintering of trees.

Shanghai Market Prices

The Treasury Department's Bureau of Markets, 50 Avenue Edward VII, has issued its quarterly Shanghai Market Prices Report, for the period October-December, 1923. The monthly index prices are a well known feature of the Department's work and are invaluable for reference, and the quarterly report is equally valuable, giving a more detailed comparison of the fluctuations in the various markets. The wholesale prices in each month of the quarter and the average in Shanghai and Haikuan taels for every article of trade are set out in carefully arranged tables, and there also is an interesting review of trade during the period, as other features. The report should find a place in every business man's office library.

COMPANY MEETINGS

SENAWANG RUBBER ESTATE

Restriction Improves the Financial Situation

The fourth annual general meeting of shareholders in the Senawang Rubber Estates Co. (1921), Ld. was held on Tuesday at the offices of Messrs. J. A. Wattie & Co., Mr. G. Grayrigge, chairman, presiding. He was supported by Hon. E. T. Eyres, J. S. Kadoorie and A. K. Craddock, directors, and Mr. W. S. Royston, representing the secretaries and general managers. The attendance represented 80,689 shares.

The Chairman said, in part:—

The profit and loss account makes pleasanter reading than its predecessor, for whereas the latter showed a debit of Tls. 3,186.70 for interest, the former shows a credit of Tls. 1,400.20, and after writing off preliminary expenses amounting to Tls. 2,308.21, results in a profit of Tls. 24,892.13. Under ordinary circumstances, this would have enabled the Board to recommend a dividend, but we have first to deduct the loss carried forward from previous years, viz: Tls. 20,075.18, which reduces the divisible balance to Tls. 4,516.-95. This sum in itself is not sufficient to meet the interest owing on the cumulative preference share captial, which is mentioned at the foot of the balance sheet, a total of Tls. 9,161.71. We hope, however, soon to accumulate sufficient profit to wipe this liability off the slate; but meantime we must ask forbearance. We have the cash ready, but must wait for enough profit to accrue. In fact, after providing for all known liabilities, our liquid assets amount to Tls. 45,703.24, of which Tls. 36,383.85 actually exist on cash money. I hope, Gentlemen, I have—made it quite clear to you that although we have to ask you to wait a little for this accrued interest, this Company is financially on a sound wicket.

I now beg to propose the first resolution, viz: That the report of the directors and statement of accounts for the year ended January 31, 1924, as presented be adopted and passed.

This is seconded by Mr. Kadoorie.

The above resolution was carried unanimously, as also the following:—

That Mr. G. Grayrigge be and hereby is re-elected a Director of the Company.

Proposed by Mr. Craddock, seconded by Mr. C. J. L. Stewart.

That the appointment of Mr. F. S. Kadoorie as a Director of the Company be and is hereby confirmed. Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. A. J. Welch.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be and are hereby re-elected Auditors to the Company for the ensuing year. Proposed by Mr. Stewart, seconded by Mr. Woo Chi-ming.

The meeting then terminated.

THE TEBONG RUBBER ESTATE, LD.

Annual General Meeting

Mr. A. J. Welch (the Chairman) presided at the annual meeting of shareholders in the Tebong Rubber Estate, Ld., held at the offices of Messrs. J. A. Wattie & Co., Ld., on Thursday supported by Messrs. W. Wakeford Cox, Chu Pao-san (directors), C. J. L. Stewart (secretary) and other shareholders, a total of [illegible] shares being represented. The secretary read the notice convening the meeting and the auditor's report.

In his speech the Chairman said in part:—

The only item in the profit and loss account that needs any explanation is debenture interest. The [illegible] is debited to this account, since the Tls. 49,300 worth of debentures that the company has bought have not yet been cancelled, but a compensating credit appears on the other side of the account. The net debenture interest paid by the company amounts to Tls. 16,056. The reason why these debentures have not yet been cancelled is that your directors have deemed it [illegible] to keep them in reserve so that in case any unforeseen [illegible] the company is pressed for cash, they will be available for resale. For the same reason no credit has yet been taken for the profit of Tls. 9,764 that has been made by purchasing these debentures.

There is very little to comment on in the balance sheet. The fixed assets, such as buildings, etc., stand in the accounts at figures very much below their actual value and it is proposed to depreciate them still further this year. The profit for the year amounts to Tls. 77,257.43, but this is unfortunately reduced to Tls. 63,383.44 when the loss brought forward from last year is deductes. This balance your directors recommend shall be dealt with as set forth in the report.

No questions were asked and the following resolutions were carried unanimously:—

"That the directors' report and statement of accounts, as presented, be adopted and passed." Proposed by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. Chu Pao-san.

"That a dividend of five Candareens per share be paid."—Proposed by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. W. Wakeford Cox.

"That Mr. Chu Pao-san be re-elected a director of the company."—Proposed by Mr. E. Oxley Cumming and seconded by Mr. C. G. Copley.

"That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham and Matthews be re-elected auditors to the company:—Proposed by Mr. G. Grayrigge and seconded by Mr. C. J. L. Stewart.

HALL & HOLTZ, LD.

A Successful Year

The annual meeting of Hall & Holtz, Ld., was held on Thursday morning. Mr. Eric Moller (Managing Director) presided, and was supported by Messrs. E. F. Shields and E. D. Thomas (Directors); 7,200 shares were represented.

In the course of his speech the Chairman said:—

General Reserve.—The $200,000 shown in our last accounts has been appropriated in accordance with the shareholders' resolution of May, 1923, viz. by transferring thereto the balance of the profit and loss account of $84,882 and writing off our 1923 stock the sum of $115,117 to cover the difference between the book value and the present cost of replacing same.

Depreciation.—In the usual manner, this has been written off buildings, against property reserve, and ample provision for depreciation of all other assets has been provided for.

Bank Overdraft has been increased by the moderate amount of $50,000, but this figure has already been considerably reduced, since the closing of the accounts, and to-day stands at $715,804 (reduced by $25,000) and further substantial reduction will take place in the near future, by the completion of the disposal of our Soochow Road property which, by agreement, must take place during the current year.

I may mention that during the year under review, our directors have been aware of persistent rumours suggesting the liquidation of the company, and I therefore take the opportunity of informing the public and those interested in the shares of the company, that these rumours are entirely without foundation, and I trust that this statement will satisfy all of those who have been perturbed by the rumours.

The Chairman proposed and Mr. E. F. Shields seconded the adoption of the report and accounts, and there being no questions the resolution was put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

On the proposition of Mr. J. Harris Purcell, seconded by Mr. H. M. Cumine, the appointment of Mr. E. O. Thomas as a director was confirmed.

On the proposition of Mr. Cumine seconded by Mr. W. J. Davey, Seth, Mancell & McClure were re-elected auditors.

CLUB AND SOCIETIES

SOCIETY OF SCIENCE AND ARTS

Medico-Biological Section

At the meeting of the Medico-Biological section of the China Society of Science and Arts on April 22 in the offices of the "China Journal of Science and Arts," the constitution and regulations drawn up by the committee appointed for that purpose were passed. Mr. A. de C. Sowerby, as President of the Society, presided at the meeting. The following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year:—President, Dr. Eugene C. Peck; Vice-President, Prof. A. Bary; Secretary, Prof. W. M. Porterfield; Committee, Dr. F. Oppenheim, Dr. E. Hibert, Dr. Y. Tongu, Dr. Ruth Leonard. Dr. F. Reiss formerly resigned his office as secretary as he felt the duties connected therewith took up too much of his time.

The opinion of the meeting seemed to be that for the present there was no great need for a medical laboratory, but rather a need for a biological laboratory in Shanghai. Most medical men engaged in research work either had their own laboratories or had access to one in some hospital. The same did not apply to biological research work and it was felt that efforts should be directed towards the establishment of a well-equipped laboratory in Shanghai for biological research work, especially in relation to medical science. It was decided that not only qualified physicians and surgeons should be eligible for membership, but also professional biologiate.

The constitution and regulations will be printed shortly and circulated amongst the members of the section. All who are interested in the important work of medico-biological investigation are cordially invited to send in their names for membership in this section of the Society.

LAWN BOWLS CLUB

Annual General Meeting

The annual general meeting of the Shanghai Lawn Bowls Club was held last Friday evening at the offices of Messrs. Maitland & Co., Ld. The chair was taken by Lt.-Col. T. E. Trueman, President of the club, supported by Capt. F. C. Banham, Messrs. J. Munro, G. Dunlop, and H. Gordon Wright.

The Chairman, before dealing with the past year's activities touched on the deaths of their fellow members, Mr. S. H. McKean and Mr. J. E. Wilson, and expressed the deep sympathy of the club to their relatives.

The Chairman went on to say:

Last season we made a bad start and the results of the earlier inter-club matches played were very unfavourable to the club, as not only did we lose possession of the "Wallace" Cup which was won last year by the Recreation Club, but we lost both our matches with the Recreation Club—one to the Junior Golf Club and one to our old friends at Yangtszepoo.

SMALL DECLINE IN INCOME.

Turning now to the accounts: Compared with the previous year our income shows a small decline of $174.43 principally owing to our entrance fees being less through our having to cease admitting new members on account of lack of accommodation on the greens. On the other hand a considerable saving was expected under the headings of coolies' wages and upkeep of greens and fences—and I would like to mention that included in last years accounts is the sum of $246.15 the first instalment of the contract for relaying the New Green. We made our customary contribution of $100 to the Recreation Fund Trustees and other items show little variation from the previous year. On the season's working we made a surplus of $427.49 reducing our deficit to $516.86 which I think may be considered quite satisfactory.

In the balance sheet, property account shows an increase from $370.10 to $550.88 principally accounted for by the purchase of a highly necessary roller. I would here like to point out that owing to a printer's error the cash in the hands of the Hon. Treasurer is stated in the balance sheet as $222.45 instead of $122.45.

NEW GREEN.

During the present year a heavy drain on our reserves will have to be faced in the cost of the relaying of the New Green. As already advised you, gentlemen, by circular, your Committee decided after going very fully into the matter, and acting upon the expert advice of Mr. MacGregor that it was impossible to get the new green into playing condition, and therefore resolved to relay it from the foundation. A contract was entered into for this work to be done at a cost of Tls. 950.60, and it is hoped that part at least of the green will be sufficiently advanced to be at your disposal by the middle of June. A great deal will naturally depend on the weather during the next few weeks.

On the proposition of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. J. W. Burtwell the report and accounts as presented were adopted.

Lieut.-Col. T. E. Trueman, O.B.E., was unanimously re-elected.

Mr. F. Banham was appointed vice-president.

Other officers were appointed as follows:—

Captain: Mr. W. A. Turnbull.
Secretary: Mr. A. Knowles.
Treasurer: Mr. S. Butter.
General Committee: Messrs. J. W. Burtwell, W. Gater, D. M. Graham, J. M. Robertson and H. Gordon Wright.
Balloting Committee: Messrs. G. Dunlop, W. L. Gerrard, F. L. Marshall, A. McLure, J. Munro, A. J. Stokes, G. L. Campbell and F. Fletcher.

Some discussion ensued on the question whether the Club's committee should select representatives for the championship matches, or whether members should just put up their names to play as in the past.

Mr. D. M. Graham moved that the committee be empowered to select three rinks in such matches. Mr. Large proposed as an amendment that the committee be empowered to select one rink of four players, only.—Mr. Simmons seconded this.

The amendment was put to the meeting and carried by a fair majority.

The meeting concluded with an expression of thanks to the Chairman, and to Messrs. Maitland & Co. for allowing them the use of the room for the meeting.

RECREATION CLUB

Annual Meeting: Suggested New Golf Section

The annual general meeting of the Shanghai Recreation Club was held on Tuesday evening, the President, Mr. R. P. Phillips, presiding, supported by Mr. Frank Jones, Mr. T. G. Main (hon. treas.) Mr. F. O. Madar (hon. sec.) and other members of the committee.

The Chairman, reviewing the past year's work said they had had a very successful season. They had won the Cricket League, the Lawn Tennis League (1st Division), the Wallace Cup at lawn bowls, and the Dewar League Shield and the Skottowe Cup at football. He hoped they would be as successful in the coming year and this time win the Mercury Cup. He expressed his appreciation of the excellent work put in by the various sports sub-committees, and the Club's thanks to Mr. Hughes for the way in which he had pulled them out of the Slough of Despond in the football world. He hoped, though, that the 2nd eleven would do better this coming season. They had done well financially during the year, the balance in hand being over $1,000, whereas last year it was only $252.85. Most of this would, however, be eaten up by expenses incurred in putting up new posts, etc.

After the adoption of the report and accounts the following officers were elected:

President: Mr. R. P. Phillips.
Vice President: Mr. Frank Jones.
Committee: Messrs. G. H. Ackerman, H. B. Ollerdessen, H. Veitch, J. L. Wade, T. G. Main, F. O. Madar, and R. J. S. Brandt.
Balloting Committee: Messrs. Hughes, Hawes, Evans, W. Wilson, W. J. Davy, P. W. Reeves, H. E. Peck, F. Tomlinson, H. Ambrose, E. Nokes and White.
Captain—Mr. H. B. Ollerdessen; Vice-Captain, A. J. Willis.

Mr. Reeves, at the conclusion of the formal business, suggested to the incoming committee that they consider the advisability of starting a golfing section to the Club. He said he had raised the point before a few years ago and was then informed that golf was not included in their by-laws and could not therefore be introduced. He suggested, therefore, that the committee might now deal with the matter. Quite a number of their members played golf and they had a good course right close at hand, on the Race course. Competitions within the Club could be arranged as well as competitions with other clubs.

Mr. Frank Jones said there was such a section in the past and they had played on the course by courtesy of the Shanghai Golf Club. Now the course had been made public and there was no reason why they should not use it again.

The Chairman promised the matter would be considered by the new committee.

THE SHANGHAI YACHT CLUB

A Record Meeting: Practical Demonstration with New One-Design Byrne Boat

The enthusiasm aroused amongst yachting men by the introduction of the Byrne boat one-design class to the Huangpu was fully proved on Tuesday evening on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Shanghai Yacht Club. Several very old members were present and they said that the ancient Foam, since she had been made the headquarters of the Club, never had accommodated so many people at one time save when the tiffin bugle has sounded on the occasion of opening and closing cruises. The saloon of the old boat was packed to its full capacity when Mr. E. T. Byrne, the Commodore, opened the meeting.

In proposing the adoption of the report and accounts, the Commodore said:—

I think you will agree with me in congratulaing our worthy honorary secretary on the good work he has done in compiling such an excellent record, which leaves very little for me to say.

Last season was most successful and the crowded closing cruise promised well for the future and you will be glad to hear the indications of increased membership give us hope for an even better in 1924. I have to congratulate Mr. Lintilhac, our Rear-Commodore, on the excellent way he has thought out the races, the result being that practically all of them coincided with the tides, and that every yacht has had a fair show. This, I can assure you, is by no means an easy task, as it requires a great knowledge of tides and the effect that a change of wind may have on them.

The Foam preservation account is now a separate item, but I am afraid the balance of $332.14 is not near enough to meet the actual work needed, and I can assure you your committee view with grave concern the time, near at hand I am afraid, when our our headquarters will have to be scrapped. However, I hope that with an increased membership and more interest in yachting we shall be able to build up a bigger reserve this year for the rainy day in front of us.

THE NEW BYRNE BOATS.

The new Phantom class is now completed and I tried one for the first time this afternoon and can only tell you my expectations and hopes were fully realized. Rules will be drawn up for this class that will eliminate the chances of the longer purse being used to any advantage over those full of sport but not full of money, and I wish again to thank those who have come forward and helped to bring the cost of this class down to a really cheap bargain. As you will see by the specimen moored outside, I have endeavoured to make everything as simple as possible and the helmsman, if he so desires, can manage everything himself, although I would only recommend an expert to try it. As soon as the remaining five arrive here, the prospective owners will be invited to come here and draw for their boats, after which they will have to learn how to get the best out of them and I may assure you the best man will win, as the boats are exactly alike.

During the winter a case came up of a laodah leaving one boat for higher pay in another and your committee think it is time to formulate a scale of pay, and if possible registration, for which we might invoke the aid of the River Police. We must try by some means or other to get a decent class at a reasonable wage to man the fleet. The species laodah, as we all know, has the shark cold as far as rapacity is concerned, but knowing this peculiarity it is up to the owner to look out. When, however, we have dishonesty and incompetency combined, we realize there can be trouble of a very pungent nature and the only thing to do is to fire the man and hope for better luck.

The report and accounts were adopted without comment and the following officers then were elected:—Commodore, Mr. E. T. Byrne; Vice Commodore, Mr. H. E. Middleton; Rear-Commodore, Mr. W. C. Woodfield; Committee, Messrs. J. D. McClatchie, C. E. Lintilhac, A. L. Blechynden, O. Bersani and C. E. Hall.

TRIBUTE TO MR. MELLOWS.

The Commodore—I now beg to propose:—"That in recognition of his long and invaluable services to this club, Mr. T. Mellows be elected an honorary life member." This resolution is one that in a way gives me a lot of pain, as it means that one of our most valued friends and members is retiring from active work in the Yacht Club. Mr. Mellows has been your Vice-Commodore for many years and has carried on his shoulders the brunt of the work of the club. None know it more than I do. As a sportsman and a gentleman I take my hat off to him. Very few of us in his position could have kept to the path that he has trodden and I think none realizes it as much as the great institution that he has served so long and faithfully. Many of you probably wonder why he has never been Commodore. Well, I have suggested this to him often, but he has always declined the post on the grounds that the club would benefit more by his remaining as Vice-Commodore I think you can all realize what an act of unselfishness this is and it only proves once again what a real man we have amongst us. How many are there who would have acted like he has? However, we are not going to lose him, as I feel sure he will be on board the Foam whenever races are going on and I feel sure his advice will be at all times cherished as coming from one whose whole life has been concerned with ships, from H.M.S. Caroline to yachts like the famous Haikuan.

Mr. A. L. Anderson, in seconding, said that the resolution was a very proper tribute to a sportsman and a gentleman. Whether sailing the Haikuan or doing anything else, Mr. Mellows always behaved in a way that commanded admiration and demanded respect.

The resolution was carried with acclamation and the Commodore handed Mr. Mellows a handsome framed photograph of his famous racing yacht, the Haikuan.

Mr. Mellows suitably responded.

THE POLO CLUB

Annual Meeting

The 26th annual meeting of the Shanghai Polo Club was held last Friday evening at the Race Club and was well attended. Mr. E. H. McMichael, Captain, presided, supported by Messrs. A. O. Fisher, Hon. Secretary and Treas., and H. G. Robinson.

The Chairman, commenting on the activities of the year, spoke highly of the team's success in the Hongkong Interport, bringing back with them the Keswick Cup (Messrs. E. H. McMichael, N. W. Hickling, D. L. Newbiggin and J. C. Grieg). He paid a tribute to Messrs. Jardine Matheson & Co., Ld., for their great kindness in transporting the ponies to that port, and to the Horse Bazaar in the same connexion. The accounts showed a very favourable balance, equal to the previous season, and there were now 65 playing members and 131 non-playing.

On the proposal of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. H. G. Robinson, the report and accounts were adopted. Mr. Sidney Barton, C.M.G., was elected president by acclamation, and Mr. E. H. McMichael vice-presilent; while Messrs. R. I. Fearon, A. O. Fisher, E. H. McMichael, J. J. Paterson, H. G. Robinson and G. N. Wilson were chosen as the incoming committee.

It was the general opinion of the meeting that if possible a reserve fund be built up to provide contingencies, instead of depending on the annual budget, while a further suggestion was made that a permanent hut be built instead of the usual matshed, erected every season at a cost of approximately $500.

THE CANADIAN ASSOC. OF CHINA

The Annual Meeting: A Presentation to Dr. and Mrs. MacGillivray

The annual general meeting of the Canadian Association of China was held on Tuesday at Dr. and Mrs. MacGillivray's house, when there was an attendance of 40 resident and visiting Canadians. A toast to the King preceded dinner, following which the Chairman (Dr. MacGillivray) reviewed the work of the Association during the year in detail and welcomed on behalf of the Association the visiting Canadians present.

Mr. Plewman, of Chengtu, replied on behalf of the visitors, giving the meeting a short but extremely interesting account of life in Western China.

The report and accounts for the year then were submitted by the retiring committee and were unanimously passed. A satisfactory balance was shown on hand in the bank and the Association had no outstanding accounts to meet.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:—President, Dr. J. W. Ross; Chairman, Dr. D. MacGillivray; Vice-Chairman, Dr. E. W. Wallace; General Committee, Mesdames Booth and Tomlinson, Miss McGeachie, Messrs. J. J. Evans, D. E. Ross and S. Wolfe; Hon. Sec. and Treas., Mr. R. W. Burton.

Upon the conclusion of the formal business Dr. Ross expressed on behalf of the Association the gratitude felt towards Dr. and Mrs. MacGillivray for the hospitality and assistance extended to the Association on so many occasions and, in view of the early departure of Dr. and Mrs. MacGillivray on a well earned furlough, begged them to accept as expressions of the members' regard certain articles purchased by subscription. The latter consisted off a leather travelling bag and portfolio for Dr. MacGillivray and a silk umbrella and handbag for Mrs. MacGillivray. The presentation was accompanied by a written address expressing the feelings of the Association and wishing Dr. and Mrs. MacGillivray a happy holiday and a safe return to China.

CORRESPONDENCE

PROHIBITION AND ITS RESULTS.

To the Editor of the "NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir, Under the caption "Prohibition" have appeared a number of letters pro and con. I wish to add a few words to the discussion which may or may not be pertinent.

Countries reserve the right to make such laws as majorities decree. The United States is trying an experiment in prohibition which she has every right to try and to try to make successful. It is really more than an experiment in prohibition, it is an experiment in efficiency. The law was framed with the aim to make the majority more efficient. If, after the experiment has been tried, it is conclusively proved to be a failure, it will be repealed because the majority of the people of the United States have common sense.

The law exists and should be respected by sister nations until such a time as the United States wishes to repeal it.

Another point, which seems to have been lost sight of in the discussion, is that there is not really more drinking and manufacture of these narcotizing alcoholics than there was previous to prohibition. Some papers say there is more but it is entirely unsubstantiated by the facts. Might I suggest that a really careful study of the situation be made by the editor before making statements which neither he nor any one else can verify. It would be well to look up the banking returns in wet and dry years to see where the evidence lies. Aside from the interests of those directly or indirectly profiting from the sale or manufacture of intoxicants, the big business interests of the United States do not desire a return to pre-prohibition days and would vote almost solidly against it.

Even in New York, the city cited by the editor and the one usually cited because it is the greatest offender against the law due to the fact that it had enormous holdings in the liquor trade, it is distinctly precarious for restaurants to serve alcoholics, and the editor would still be "impressed" by the fact that "practically everybody" still drinks water with his meals. This I know because I have recently been home and observed the fact in a trip through twenty-one of the states. Even in one state with decidedly wet tendencies there was so little drinking that it was negligible. It is entirely too strong a statement to make that even a large minority of the youths of the nation carry flasks on their hips. Some few came under my direct notice, but they were few indeed compared with the large number who had no flasks at all.

The editor says that the law is vicious "because it has created a whole series of new forms of lawbreaking." It would be enlightening to have the series analysed and the different forms of each series set forth. The reason for the outcry against prohibition is that it really does prohibit and that the law is in very deed more efficacious than the opponents of the measure had wildly feared.

At a dinner given by Sir Arthur—in Baltimore the writer heard a discussion of the question, "Does prohibition probihit?" The discussion was entirely informal and varying opinions were expressed as to the fairness of the law but it was interesting to note the unanimity with regard to the question. Finally Sir Arthur humorously ended the discussion by saying, "You have practical evidence before you that prohibition does really prohibit in that I have been unable to serve my guests with anything stronger than coffee."

On the contrary the writer was present at a banquet at which liquor was served as though there were no law with regard to it. This occurred in Chicago and the liquors were of the best. They had been procured by the host on doctor's prescriptions. Only one man got drunk and he had as much right to get drunk as the host had to serve the liquor.

The whole question is one of legality not of morals, now. There is a law. One who defies this law is a law-breaker. It is debatable whether or not the law is just. If it is not it will be repealed. If it is, it has come to stay no matter what you or I may say about it. It is a fact that the results of the law are financially beneficial, up to the present. If the bank returns continue to show the same pleasing balance in favour of the measure, it will be difficult for any group to get the law repealed.

Desiring to get a conference of the governors of the various states with an eye to introducing light wines and beers as exempt from the bone-dry law, New York called such a conference to take place at Washington to be presided over by the President. When the conference met only nine states were represented. They were not even interested enough to come, but were willing to leave that law where it is. When one thinks of the number of states needed to raise the question of repeal, it looks like a hopeless task for those interested in alcoholic narcotics. The law will stand as a result of the partial benefits accruing from prohibition. These benefits will become more apparent as time goes on and the experiment gets past the experimental stage.

The reason we have traffic laws is that they make for efficiency not that they prevent nuisances. On the basis of efficiency will the prohibition laws be justified or repealed and the moral element will largely be left out of the reckoning.

SIR,—While visiting Shanghai recently I read an article in your paper entitled "Prohibition in the working." Palpably booze propaganda, unintelligent, untruthful, and misleading. No well informed American will admit that there is more drunkenness in America to-day than before prohibition was adopted; that it is not so, is self-evident and truthful statistics support it.

Your article gives some figures for the number of arrests for the years 1920 to 1922 showing a large decrease for the first two on a percentage showing, and these giving the total for the year 1922 as 254,000, and stating it exceeded those in 1918 by 1,500 (in number) at least that is the assumption. Now such figures do not give a true estimate of general conditions, for liquor drinking is almost entirely confined to the largest cities. In 1918 thousands of cases of drunkenness were left lying in the streets, and only the most desperate ones locked up because the gaols were full. To-day in order to make out a case against prohibition its enemies have to resort to dishonesty. If there is more liquor drunk under prohibition, why do the liquor interests want it annulled? What do they care about the increase in drunkenness. I sat in your best hotels while in Shanghai and saw men and women swill cocktails until their brains were muddled and they were unsteady on their feet. You could not see such a thing in New York if you searched for it. As for the claim that drunkenness is decreasing in Great Britain it is entirely due to three reasons. Shorter hours for sale of liquor, higher cost, and some awakening to the knowledge that men are better off without it.

Now as to the increase of crime under prohibition. This is another misleading statement. Prohibition has nothing to do with its increase. Crime has increased everywhere in the world as an aftermath of the war and is purely psychological in its origin. Any fool should know that soberness does not make murderers; but in almost every instance where a murder is committed the perpetrator is a liquor addict. As for drug addicts, the increase is prevalent throughout the world, but you don't find anyone advocating removal of restrictions against use on that account.

We were told in America that the adoption of prohibition would bring unemployment, and many hundreds of groceries and store rooms would be shut up. Our experience has proved the contrary to be true to the great benefit of every community.

England and the English people should hang their heads in shame: one has only to visit the two countries to note how high America stands above you in this respect. Almost the first thing one sees everywhere under foreign rule is whisky. Your newspapers are full if it. Your signboards are plastered with it, and your mentality is swayed by it.

As I said the article in your paper was untruthful. In one place it says the number of gaols has largely increased under prohibition. As a matter of fact many gaols have not had an inmate for weeks and in one instance three counties have combined, and closed two of their gaols and dismissed their employees. If you want to know what America thinks about prohibition, ask her business men, manufacturers, bankers and railroad men.

I am sending you under separate cover an American paper giving you the facts. Have you courage enough to publish the article?

 Why did our correspondent spoil an otherwise admirable letter by that third paragraph from the end. It obliges us to remind him that, even if there are no other reasons for American prosperity than prohibition— a rather doubtful supposition—there are many other causes than non-prohibition to explain Great Britain's poverty—the unparalleled war that she fought for nearly 4½ years, her immense financing of her Allies and the crushing taxation she is enduring for the honourable discharged her debts.

SIR,—In your issue of the 26th appears a letter under the above caption, signed by the Rev. C. H. Barlow.

His letter reminds me of the one-time famous contortionist. Houdini. The only apparent difference between them is that Houdini disentangled himself from a rope knotted by anyone in his audience whereas the Rev. C. H. Barlow ties himself into knots and extricates himself with perfect ease. His letter is replete with slipknots.

He states that countries have the right to make such laws as the majority decree. Not at all. The majority may have the power but "Might is not Right."

The minority, which may be a very large one, have the right to contravene the provisions of any laws objectionable to them but, of course, at the risk of legal penalties imposed by the "Might-is-Right" majority.

There are two distinct forms of liberty. The Civic and the intimately personal. It is right that the City Council shall decree that automobiles shall not voluntarily use the sidewalk, that the expenses of administration be recoverable by process of properly imposed taxes, notwithstanding that a minority might object. But when the City Fathers tell me that I must, under pain of penalties, wear my pants inside out, stick my gum in my ear instead of under the seat of my chair at the movies, wear a "twicer" collar and a "Jemima" tie when I dress for dinner, then I consider it an arbitrary interference with my intimately personal liberty.

According to the Hong List the Rev. C. H. Barlow is a Baptist missionary. I am a Bush Baptist and would like to ask my reverend brother what he and others composing a very large minority would do in the event of a majority composed of, shall we say, Atheists, enacting a law compelling everyone to become an Atheist. Would they acquiesce or would they start in with a most unholy pow-wow? Such a law would infringe upon their intimately personal liberty and the

Bell Rope
Back Rope
Foot Rope
Head Rope
Tow Rope

Sir,—Unless my memory plays me false the answer to "Bell Boy" is seven and the names of the ropes are as under.

Man Rope, Buoy Rope, Foot Rope, Bolt Rope, Boat Rope, Tow Rope, Bell Rope.

The last mentioned had nothing to do with a bell but was attached to an old-fashioned pump in order that a greater number of men could work at it than could grasp the handles.

All other ropes, etc., forming the standing and running rigging of a full rigged ship had distinctive names such as graces, tacks, sheets, etc. etc.

Sir,—In answer to "Ship's Bell Boy's" inquiries in to-day's paper, I should like to point out that the question asked is really too vague to answer correctly.

Does he, "Ship's Bell Boy, mean a 3, 4, or 5 masted full rigged ship? Has the said full rigged ship royals, skysails, double topgallant sails or what? There would be a vast difference in the number of ropes in a full rigged ship, say with three masts and only carrying double topgallant sails, and a four-masted full rigged ship carrying royals and a main skysail yard.

I think if our friend "Ship's Bell Boy" stated definitely what he wanted to know there are plenty of square-rigged men out here who would be only too pleased to supply the necessary information.

Has "Ship's Bell Boy" ever been in a full rigged ship? Thanking you for space in your valuable paper.

The German cargo steamer R. C. Mr. Tang Shao-yi, in an interview with a representative of the Japanese press, is reported to have stated that he strongly opposes the new American immigration law. Mr. Tang, says the report, stated that America was a land of freedom and unselfishness, but now that such a law had been passed by the Senate it was giving its support to the racial prejudice creed and was acting against the course of world's events. He said that not only should the Japanese be angry and indignant, but the Chinese also.

Announcement is made of establishment of the new law firm, of Chalaire & Franklin, which will start business on May 1. Mr. W. Chalaire came to the Orient several years ago. In the Philippines, he successfully concluded negotiations for big New York interests, and then came to Shanghai where he has been since. Mr. C. S. Franklin, for many years U.S. District Judge in Honlulu, resigned to come to Shanghai three years ago, where associated himself with Judge Williams, who returned to America 18 months ago. Mr. Max Schoop, formerly in business with Mr. Chalaire in Shanghai, will act as the new firm's New York representative. Mr. E. Anthony, who arrived in Shanghai last year, will continue with the new firm, as will Mr. L. Hilden.

A story of a peppery American general who demanded to be allowed to land at Yokohama from the President Cleveland, though he had no passport, is published by the "Osaka Asahi." His demand was not granted, despite the fact that he claimed to be a close friend of Gen. Wood, Governor of the Philippines. The visitor was very indignant, the Osaka paper says, and denounced the Japanese officials as pig-headed. Democratic Americans, comments the "Japan Chronicle," will be pleased (if the story is true) that the officials were firm with one who put in such a snobbish claim for special privilege. The idea which seemed to be suggested in the Japanese press report, that this was the beginning of retaliation for the Immigration Bill, is rather farfetched. But it is rather striking that at the moment when the American Legislature was expressing its opinion that Japanese ought not to be allowed to land at all in America, an American general should boggle because he was required to have a passport. Not that we approve of passports, the "Chronicle" goes on. They are merely a device to vex the traveller and mulct him his cash without rendering him any service in exchange. But Japan is not the only sinner and not the worst one in this respect.

LAW REPORTS

JUDGMENT AGAINST MR. E. MOLLER

Yangtsze Insce. Claim: Judgment Admitted: No Act of Indemnity

A case involving Tls. 150,000 was dealt with in three minutes in H. M. Supreme Court on Monday, before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner, the proceedings in effect constituting a formal protest by Mr. Eric Moller against the action of the Hongkong Government in connexion with his shipping claim.

Plaintiffs were the Yangtsze Insurance Association Co., Ld., and their claim was as follows:—

(a)—Tls. 117,092.71 money lent.

(b)—Tls. 25,324.41 agreed interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum up to March 31, 1924.

(c)—Tls. 11,413.02 the amount of insurance premia due from the defendant to plaintiffs.

(d)—Tls. 4,066 money due under a letter of guarantee dated October 25, 1917.

Plaintiffs also claimed that the items (a) and (b) were due under a convenant in a mortgage of the str. Lindsay Moller, dated December 12, 1916, and/or a convenant of indenture dated June 15, 1923. There was a further claim for interest at the rate of 8½ per cent. upon the first item from March 31, 1924, up to the date of the writ and thereafter until judgment.

Mr. H. Lipson Ward appeared for plaintiff and Mr. H. P. Wilkinson for defendant.

Mr. Ward said that the proceedings were brought under a specially endorsed writ, and an affidavit had been filed by Mr. C. M. G. Burnie, general manager for plaintiffs, supporting the claim in accordance with Rule 100. No affidavit in reply had been filed, and counsel accordingly asked for judgment in the terms of the writ.

Mr. Wilkinson, for defendant, said: The bringing of this action is a direct consequence of the commandeering of the ships of Moller & Co. by the Hongkong Government. As Mr. Moller would not, if he could, pass an act of indemnity relieving him of his liabilities, on his behalf I consent to judgment. There is no dispute as to the amount.

His Lordship entered judgment for plaintiffs for Tls. 157,896, with costs.

THE TALE OF A DOG AND A CAR

Unsuccessful Claim for Tls.100 for a Damaged Peke: Sequel to a Friendly Lift

In H. M. Supreme Court on Tuesday, before Judge Peter Krain, Olga Ouralskaya claimed from Mr. Edward Lloyd the sum of Tls. 100, damages for injuries to a Pekingese dog.

Plaintiff's story was that she saw defendant outside the French Club one night last December, and mistaking him for someone else spoke to him. She accepted his invitation to go for a short car-ride. She had the dog with her, and in the car defendant hit it with his fist, bruising its eye and breaking a nerve. A few days later she saw defendant again and asked him for Frs. 1,000 for injuring her dog. She had the animal under her arm, and he hit it again, though this time she was not sure that he was not trying to hit her. She valued the animal at Tls. 100, because in addition to its being a pet, she made money out of its pups.

Defendant denied the whole story. He stated that he was trying to start up his car on December 16 at about 8 o'clock in the evening. It would not start very well because the night was cold, and the woman came up to him and asked if he was not Mr. Barry. He replied in the negative and she told him she had considerable trouble with her servants during the day, and her dog, a very valuable animal, would not eat. Would he give her a lift to a compradore's shop? He did so, unfortunately for himself, and a day or two later she went to see him at his office and demanded Frs. 1,000 because she had been in his car. He refused and sent her away. She came again later and he gave her $30, all the money he had on him, to get rid of her. She kept on coming to see him, however, and finally he consulted the police. After that when she came round he sent for Det. Hunter who put the woman out of the office. He heard nothing more till she brought this case, and since to the best of his knowledge he had never even touched the dog, he refused to pay. If he thought for one moment he had hurt her dog he would have paid.

Judgment was given for defendant with costs.

PRIESTLY PRISONERS

Ex-Granthis on Trial for Alleged Misappropriation of Ghee Funds

The trial of two former Granthis of the Sikh Gurdwara, upon a charge of having converted to their own use certain money entrusted to them by various Sikhs, opened on Wednesday before Judge Sir Skinner Turner, and a jury, at H. M. Supreme Court.

The prosecution alleged that between January and November of last year the accused—Sucha Singh and Amar Singh—misappropriated $910) handed over to them for the purchase of "ghee, peas, mustard oil, and woollen shirts," and to this prisoners pleaded not guilty.

At the outset, Mr. L. K. Kentwell informed his Lordship that on the previous evening the accused had applied to him to appear in their defence, and in these circumstances he desired the court to adjourn the hearing.

His Lordship—I do not think that is possible now that the jury has been summoned.

Mr. Kentwell—These men could not raise sufficient money to pay for their defence until last night, and until they had it they would not go near a lawyer's office.

His Lordship—But they were represented in the lower court, and have had ample time in which to prepare for the trial.

Mr Kentwell was unable to accept an adjournment until the afternoon, and accordingly withdrew, and his Lordship thereupon promised the accused to look after their legal interests.

In opening the case for the prosecution, Mr. H. P. Wilkinson (Crown Advocate), said that ghee was a form of butter compound used by the natives of India, and arrangements were made by Sikh police, watchmen and others to obtain consignments from India. Ghee for the men in the various police stations was taken over by the senior havildars and distributed by them, but that for the watchmen and others had been given to the two accused, who were Granthis attached to the Gurdwara in a priestly capacity There was, however, nothing of a sacred character about this business transaction. It was just a matter of convenience that they should distribute the ghee and collect the money for it. It was found at the end of last year that they were short in their accounts to the amount named in the charge, and when asked to explain, one of them said that some of the money had been spent for Gurdwara purposes and in the entertainment of a deputation of Sikhs who came here from Singapore. This, however, had nothing to do with the Gurdwara funds, and the accused were never asked to expend money in that way. A meeting was held at the Gurdwara, the explanations offered were not accepted, and the two accused were dismissed.

In answer to his Lordship, the Crown Advocate agreed that it would not necessarily be a criminal offence if the men spent money on an object they thought they were entitled to spend but in fact were not.

Evidence was then called, and Det. Sub.-Inspector Yorke said, with regard to the arrest, that one of the accused rang up Central Station and asked if there was a warrant against them, and later both men came to the station.

JEMADAR'S EVIDENCE.

Sirdar Sahib Buddha Singh, Jemadar, stated that the Ghee Fund was collected from Police and various other Sikhs and paid into an account in the Chartered Bank, and witness alone was authorized to sign cheques. A portion of each consignment was given to the accused to dispose of, and they were responsible for collecting the money and paying it in to the treasurer. They had no right to do anything else with the money. When the shortage was discovered and the accused were questioned about it, Sucha said he had collected $450, some of which he had used for himself and some for the Gurdwara fund, adding that he would repay it when he had been reimbursed by the Gurdwara and received some deferred pay due to him. Amar explained that he had used some of the money in connexion with the Singapore deputation. He also said that money had not been paid by Sikhs who had gone to Mexico. This accused also promised to settle up when he received his deferred pay. A meeting of Sikhs was held to consider the matter and the accused were dismissed from the Gurdwara.

TREASURER'S CROSS-EXAMINATION BY ACCUSED.

Evidence was given by the Treasurer of the Ghee fund, to prove the amounts unaccounted for, and at the afternoon session witness was cross-examined at considerable length by both the accused. He admitted that the account was made out in the name of the Gurdwara, but held that the accused were personally responsible. He denied having been furnished with a list of Sikhs who owed money to the fund, and said that a list now put in by Amar Singh was exhbited for the first time.

The trial was adjourned until next morning.

Accused Found Not Guilty

The trial was concluded on Thursday.

Havildar Jagat Singh, describing what took place at the Gordon Road Gurdwara when the accused were called upon to explain the accounts to the Committee, said that Sucha Singh admitted having collected $450 and spent some for personal use and some for the Gurdwara. He offered to repay the money, but he afterwards became angry and told the Committee they would have to sue him in court for the money. Amar Singh explained that Sikhs who owed money for the ghee had gone away and he could not collect, but he did not say how much was outstanding.

THE SINGAPORE DEPUTATION.

Jemadar Buddha Singh, recalled and questioned by his Lordship, said the accused were held jointly responsible because Granthis always worked together and shared responsibility. Witness denied having authorized either of the accused to spend money on the Singapore deputation. He could not say whether money had been collected from the men who went to Mexico, but he held that accused were liable whether they collected or not. They were responsible unless they put forward some explanation which was satisfactory to the Committee.

Witness also said that a sum of $150 had been paid which had not before been mentioned by the treasurer in his evidence.

His Lordship then intimated that he would be glad to hear from the prosecution what evidence there was to go to the jury that the accused had "unlawfully and fraudulently" converted the money to their own use.

The Crown Advocate replied that the accused had given no details of the amounts they alleged they had spent any at all in that way.

His Lordship—That is only inference.

The Crown Advocate—They have not proved spending a copper cash on the Gurdwara.

Accused then gave evidence, and [illegible] to the jury that the matter was one of account, admitting that certain sums were being paid over to the Ghee Fund treasurer; and asserting that some amounts due had not been paid by the purchasers.

"GOING TO SUE THE COUNCIL."

Sucha Singh told the jury that Amar Singh and himself proposed to sue the Municipal Council for wrongful dismissal from the Gurdwara, and the suggested that the Council had got one in first by initiating this prosecution. He went on to refer to a feud between police and non-police members of the Gurdwara, but his Lordship intervened, saying that this had nothing to do with the case.

In summming up, his Lordship reviewed the evidence at considerable length, and incidentally pointed out that throughout the case not a word had been heard with reference to the peas, mustard oil, and woollen shirts" included in the charge.

After a short retirement, the jury returned with a verdict of not guilty, and prisoners were discharged, his Lordship observing that on the evidence they had heard it would have been dangerous to convict the accused on a criminal charge. He thanked the jury for their attendance and attention to the case, and excused them from further jury service before 1926.

TWO YEARS AFTER

Guarantor Sued for Payment on Behalf of Deceased Friend

The case of a guarantor called upon to pay nearly two years after the death of the debtor, was before his Honour Judge Grain yesterday, when a Chinese sued Mr. W. E. Field for $307, balance due under a judgment of the Supreme Court.

Mr. J. G. Priestwood appeared for plaintiff, Kao Siao-yen, who gave evidence that his claim for $487 was before the court in 1920, defendant being Mr. W. A. Ellis. The case was adjourned sine die upon Mr. Field undertaking to be guarantor for the debt, and Mr. Ellis afterwards repaid $180.

Defendant—Mr. Ellis died 18 months ago.

Mr. Priestwood—But that does not affect your position as guarantor.

His Honour, observing that the case was a somewhat uncommon one, added that ordinarily a guarantor could not be called upon if it were shown that plaintiff had missed any opportunity of obtaining his money from the principal.

Mr. Priestwood admitted that no proceedings were taken against Mr. Ellis after defendant became guarantor. The man died without any assets.

Defendant told his Honour that he signed the guaranty at the request of Mr. Priestwood who, upon finding that nothing could be got from Mr. or Mrs. Ellis, went to him at the back of the court and asked him to be guarantor, saying "Ellis is your friend and you don't want to see him go to prison." After a lot of persuasion, witness consented to sign, Mr. Priestwood saying that it would not affect him at all, that it was a matter of form. When, 12 months later, the instalments were not being kept up and witness was called upon to pay, he spoke to Mr. Priestwood, who said "I am not worrying about Ellis. It is up to you. You are guarantor." He made no attempt to get the money from Ellis.

His Honour—It may be unfortunate for you, but the document is a clear and complete one and you have signed your signature.

Mr. Priestwood—I must disclaim any notion of having told defendant that he was not liable under this written document.

Defendant offered to pay at the rate of $50, and plaintiff asked for $80, his Honour eventually making an order for the amount claimed, with costs, to be paid in monthly instalments of $30.

TALKING TO A LADY

Police Story of Why Motorist Disobeyed Traffic Signal: Case Dismissed

F. C. Raeburn was summoned before Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court on Monday for an alleged breach of a traffic regulation.

Mr. E. T. Maitland appeared for the police, whose evidence was to the effect that, driving a car from Thibet Road south, defendant turned into Nanking Road against a police traffic signal. The Sikh on point duty stated that defendant's car was 45 yards away when he signalled to the traffic to stop. A tramcar had to pull up sharply in order to avoid a collision.

Defendant said that he did not notice the signal, and the probability was that it was given at the moment he was turning into Nanking Road. He did not notice the tram car at all.

Mr. Maitland suggested that possibly defendant failed to observe the signal because he was talking to a lady in the car.

Defendant—I do not know that I was doing so at that particular moment.

His Worship—It does not seem a very serious case.

Mr. Maitland agreed, but added that there seemed to have been carelessness on defendant's part, and at this corner in particular people ought not to be careless.

His Worship dismissed the case.

MR. KELLY AND ASIATIC MOTORS

The Claim for Alleged Wrongful Dismissal and Return of Money

Mr. P. W. Kelly's claim for damages for alleged wrongful dismissal from the employ of the Asiatic Motors Co. was continued in the U. S. Court for China last Friday morning and afternoon before his Honour, Judge Purdy. The plaintiff claims arrears in salary, Tls. 1.433, the sum of Tls. 1,500 in lieu of three months notice, and G900 as reinbursement on shares bought from the company. Mr. F. J. Schuhl appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. R. S. Haskell for the defendants.

Mr. P. W. Giovannini, general manager of the Asiatic Motors Co., one of the witnesses for the defence, stated that there was general dissatisfaction with the service rendered by the plaintiff. Dr. A. C. Selmon, one of the stockholders in the defendant company, stated that he was dissatisfied with charges made by the company for work done on his car, and that his bill was cut down two thirds after his complaints.

Mr. R. S. Haskell, as secretary and director of the defendant company, read the minutes of the company meetings with reference to the termination of Mr. Kelly's services with the Asiatic Motors because of the dissatisfaction of the officers, and reported his conversations with the plaintiff on this point. A Chinese coolie formerly employed by defendants stated that he had been kicked and struck by plaintiff. The [illegible] and bookkeeper of the defendant company identified the vouchers and accounts of plaintiff.

Mr. Kelly himself then explained at length the poor condition of [illegible] for repairs, stating that the original manufacturers were responsible for their defective operations and that he could not be held accountable. Mr. H. H. Winbang, formerly garage manager of the defendant company, stated that he considered Mr. Kelly's services excellent and claimed that Mr. Haskell at one time wished to reorganize the company, eliminating Mr. Mark. This was flatly denied by Mr. Haskell who also stated that Mr. Winbang had come to him with complaints of Kelly. On closing the testimony Mr. Haskell filed a request for the findings on the facts. Arguments were then presented by Messrs. Schuhl and Haskell and the case was taken under advisement by Judge Purdy.

MR. HUSAR'S MISHAP AT SEA

The Final Evidence

The final hearing of evidence in the action of L. G. Husar v. the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. and the U. S. Shipping Board took place on Saturday.

Dr. Birt declared that he examined the patient twice, once in his office and then later with Dr. Martin, the purpose of the latter being to make a comparison of the X-Ray plates and the injured skull itself. Serious vascular meningitis was a very serious disease, even though localized. Plaintiff did not have the symptoms of the malady.

Mr. Schuhl asked if he had tested the nerve stimuli and was responded to with an assertion that he had stimulated the nerves at the 'seat of the injury, there was a normal blood pressure and he believed the plaintiff to have been affected with a mild form of neurasthenia. He would not consider extraction of spinal fluid serious, it would not be called an operation but a diagnostic method.

Mr. Husar, placed in the box in rebuttal, said that his doctor's fees had come to Tls. 750, and he thought that Dr. Birt had not been in his office more than 10 or 15 minutes altogether. The doctor had asked a few questions and looked at the scar, but had not felt his pulse, taken his blood pressure, nor tested his reflex actions.

A PRESCRIPTION FOR DHOBEE ITCH

Claim against American Drug Co. for Alleged Wrongly Prepared Ointment

The action for Tls. 50,000 by a customer against the American Drug Co. for alleged negligence in making up a prescription came before Judge Purdy at the U. S. Court yesterday. Plaintiff, Magdalena Guignard, in her petition, states that on or about November 22, 1923, her husband gave defendants a prescription written by Dr. F. Reiss which called for a mild ointment for the cure of dhobee itch. On November 26 plaintiff's husband inquired of defendants if they could duplicate said prescription, stating at the time that he had not with him the original or the copy of the prescription. Defendants did not deliver the ointment ordered but negligently substituted a different prescription, strong and dangerous, which fact was unknown to the plaintiff until after she was badly injured by its use, confined to her bed for some time, contracted internal injuries from which she will never recover, and has been unable to care for her young baby because of said injuries.

The defense alleges that the defendant company delivered the exact prescription asked for by plaintiff's husband and that since they were not informed as to the use of the prescription asked and made no suggestions as to its use they were not responsible. Mr. F. J. Schuhl and Mr. R. T. Bryan appeared for plaintiff; Mr. W. E. Fleming for defendants.

Mr. E. W. Miller, whose evidence was taken as he is shortly to leave Shanghai, said he was formerly employed by defendant company. Plaintiff's husband asked to have a prescription for ointment refilled which had been ordered by Dr. Reiss and originally filled on the preceding Wednesday or Thursday morning. No indication was given him as to the use of the ointment, nor had witness any knowledge of the previous order. Prescriptions, unless narcotic, were not usually marked with the name of the patient, and the prescription for ointment, ordered by Dr. Reiss on the Thursday morning, and sent to plaintiff on this second order had no mark to show for whom it was intended. The witness did not compound the prescription.

Witness thought the ingredients of the second prescription in question had been entered in the book and said that while it was stronger than the first prescription originally ordered for defendant he would not consider it unduly strong or dangerous. There was a difference evident to the ordinary eye between the two prescriptions. He stated that he had never told Mr. Guignard that he or that his company had made any mistake in the prescriptions although he had stated that a mistake had been made. When asked how he knew that the second prescription was the one filled on Thursday morning and not Thursday afternoon the witness said that he based his assumption on the fact that the writing was same as that of the other morning entries, and that the afternoon entries were made by another clerk.

The hearing was adjourned until May 22.

STATUS OF VISITORS OF KIANGWAN

Interesting Mixed Court Judgment: Club Servant who Assumed Police Duties

An interesting judgment was delivered in the Mixed Court, on Monday, regarding the claim of Mr. Solomon Libby against the International Recreation Club for Tls. 50,000 as damages for an alleged assault and imprisonment following on "a pretended charge of parking a motor car in an unauthorized place" during a race meeting at the Kiangwan course. Mr. F. J. Schuhl represented the plaintiff and Mr. G. H. Wright appeared for the defence.

The judgment states in part:—

With regard to the allegation of imprisonment, it is quite clear from the evidence that the plaintiff was imprisoned by the police of Chapei, who were on the premises of the defendant club to maintain law and order during the race meet which was being held at the time. These police were not the agents or servants of the defendant club, which, therefore, cannot be held liable for any of their acts. The Court, therefore, has to deal only with that part of the plaintiff's allegation which reads:—"That the said plaintiff was assaulted, his clothing torn and his person injured."

THE USE OF FORCE.

In spite of the statements of Pointsman No. 2 to the contrary, the Court is of the opinion that Pointsman No. 2 must have used force to compel the plaintiff to go with him to the small room within the enclosure. The plaintiff was entirely innocent of the charge for which he was being taken to this room and under such circumstances it was natural that he would resent such action and possibly resist such action. Furthermore, the guilty man was present at all material times and yet Pointsman No. 2 persisted in detaining the innocent party. Mr. Encarnacao, an entirely disinterested party, stated that he saw Pointsman No. 2 holding plaintiff by the neck and dragging him along.

The Chapei police were in the immediate vicinity for the purpose of maintaining law and order and Pointsman No. 2 should have called upon them to detain any person violating the parking regulations, rather than undertake that task himself, even though the offending party were willing, as he alleges. In the exercise of this force by Pointsman No. 2, it is reasonable to believe that the plaintiff was injured as he alleges. There is a possibility that plaintiff was also injured by the police later on, but since Pointsman No. 2 had no authority whatsoever to arrest anybody the benefit of the doubt on this point should be given to the plaintiff.

STATUS OF VISITORS.

With regard to the liability of the defendant club for the acts of Pointsman No. 2, the Court is of the opinion that it is liable. The defendant club cannot say, as its attorney stated in Court, that since it is a private club any person coming on its premises does so at his peril. Although the defendant is a private club, yet it depends upon the public for support and actually advertises to the public the dates upon which its race meets are held and invites the public to attend upon purchase of tickets at the entrance gates. The plaintiff attended the races on such an invitation and was not therefore a trespasser.

Furthermore, an incident of the kind at issue could easily have been avoided had the club given proper instructions to its employees as to the proper action to be taken when a visitor infringes one of the rules, namely, to call the police who were on the premises. In this particular case, the police do not appear to have been called at all; they appeared on the scene when the tumult caused by the acts of Pointsman No. 2 arose.

PLAINTIFF'S MISTAKE

Commenting on plaintiff's injuries, the judgment states that they were not very serious, nor were his clothes torn very badly, and it continues:—

With regard to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the Court is of the opinion that the plaintiff did not do all that he might have done to explain in a cool, calm manner his connexion with the parking of the car. He did not treat Pointsman No. 2 with all the deference which was due him as an employee of the club, as such the plaintiff recognized him to be, in assisting him in carrying out the parking regulations. Had the plaintiff, instead of arguing with Pointsman No. 2, immediately asked his friend, Mr. Giovannini, to park the car in the proper parking place, the incident would certainly never have occurred.

Judgment was given for Tls. 500 damages.

BOGUS LOTTERIES

Chinese Swindler and Gullible Seamen

A Chinese, who has, according to the Water Police, as well as those on shore, been victimizing the itinerant sailor in port was before the Mixed Court on Thursday morning. It was his custom, as the evidence showed, to frequent the wharves and jetties, when sailors came from their vessels, and with a cleverly worded plea, induce them to purchase worthless lottery tickets.

Inspector Woodfield told the Court of accused's actions in 1921 and 1922, at which time the "North-China Daily News" printed a warning to sea-faring men with reference to his nefarious swindles. Finally apprehended, he was then sentenced to serve six months in gaol, followed by expulsion.

During recent weeks accused had come into prominence again in a similar game and three sailors from the U.S.S. Penguin gave evidence as to how he had induced them to purchase three tickets at $20 per ticket. It also appeared that a steward from the str. Sarpedon had fallen a prey to his clever talk, while the officers from Hongkew Station, too, knew something of his actions.

Accused was sent to prison for two years and will then again be expelled.

A quiet wedding took place on Saturday noon at the Danish Consulate when Miss Esther Sherfig of Denmark was married to Mr. R. C. Jensen of the Great Northern Telegraph Company. A reception and tiffin at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. K. Rothe of 291 Rue Chapsal followed the ceremony.

Interest on deadweight debt, 1924	£ 365,000,000
Total debt reduction since 1919	£ 650,000,000

London, Apr. 28.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, has cancelled some of his Welsh engagements in order to preside at a meeting of the Cabinet which will deal with the Budget to-morrow morning, differences having apparently arisen on the subject of the McKenna duties.

There are strong Liberal and Labour demands for the entire abolition of these duties, but it is now thought that they may only be reduced, and a crisis in this connexion is predicted in some quarters.—Reuter.

London, Apr. 29.

The House of Commons was crowded and animated when it reassembled to-day for the Budget. The Galleries were full, including the Dominions Gallery, in which were Sir Joseph Cook, the High Commissioner for Australia, and all the Agents-General. The Australian Senator Wilson and several Indians were among the oversea representatives.

The Ministerialists loudly cheered the entry of Mr. Philip Snowden, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who began by appealing for indulgence in view of his lack of Ministerial experience.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that a surplus had been realized of £49,329,000, which had gone to reduce the country's debt. Of the surplus, £18,500,000 was due to excess of revenue, £27,750,000 to reduced expenditure, and the balance to the surplus on last year's budget. A surplus of £7,178,000 in customs and excise was due mainly to spirits and tobacco. The increased consumption of spirits was apparently due to the long and cold winter and the effects of influenza, for which whisky was reputed to be a specific (laughter). Motor-[illegible] had increased by £1,000,000. Death duties had exceeded the estimate by £[illegible], and [illegible] by £8,331,000, but the Excess Profits Tax had been £12,000,000 below the estimate. Death duties had yielded £57,500,000 as compared with £56,871,000 the previous year. [illegible] amounted to £347,250,000, the surplus [illegible] Savings under these were due, inter alia, to the change of programme regarding the Middle East and Singapore.

Redemption of Country's Debts.

The total dead weight debt on March 31 was £7,680,000,000 as compared with £7,772,000,000 on March 31, 1923, and the floating debt on March 31 was £774,000,000 as compared with £810,000,000 a year ago.

As regards the provision made to deal with the Five Per Cent. War Loan, the precise figures were not yet available, but the sum converted was not less than £150,000,000.

The Government had to raise nearly £150,000,000 of maturing bonds. Mr. Snowden was afraid that the burden of debt must be very heavy for some years.

Pending the report of the Committee on the National Debt, [illegible] available resources must be devoted to reduction of the country's debt (cheers), which improved international trade and the terms on which money could be borrowed for industrial purposes, in view of the great reconstruction scheme we must carry out [illegible] (some Opposition cheers). The maintenance and improvement of British credit was a matter of very vital importance (cheers).

The dead-weight debt of £7,680,000 involved an interest charge of £305,000,000 as compared with the debt of £8,000,000,000 and interest of £345,000,000 in December, 1919 (cheers). Our one real external debt now was to the United States of £940,000,000 and £45,000,000 worth of market loans in America. The total debt reduction, external and internal, since December, 1919, was over £650,000,000, or practically the amount of the National Debt at the outbreak of the war (cheers). That was a wonderful and very creditable national achievement (cheers). Moreover, there were large debts owing to us (loud cheers). We had to pay interest on them, which was a very heavy burden on taxpayers. When we received interest on some part of these debts, we might hope to reduce our own indebtedness or taxation much more rapidly than was possible out of our own resources.

The total expenditure for the year would amount to £790,000,000, while the total revenue on the existing basis of taxation would be £828,000,000, leaving a surplus of £38,000,000.

Reduction of Duties on Foods

Mr. Snowden announced that the tea duty would be reduced by one-half.

The sugar duty is reduced by 1½d. per pound.

The duty on dried fruit is not renewed.

The postal rates are unchanged.

Tax on theatre seats up to 6d. is abolished.

There is no alteration in income-tax or super-tax.

The duties on cocoa, coffee and chicory are reduced by one-half, that on cocoa from April 30, and on coffee and chicory from May 5.

The duty on tea is reduced from May 5.

The duty on dried fruit will lapse on August 1.

The inhabited house tax is abolished.

The Corporation profits tax is abolished.

Only the recent 50 per cent. increase of duty on dried fruits is abolished, not the whole duty.

Mr. Snowden announced that the Government would introduce a Bill to re-establish the Land Valuation Department.

Imperial Preference.

Mr. Snowden stated that the Government were unable to endorse their predecessors' Imperial preference proposals. He greatly regretted any disappointment to the Dominions, but declared that the last Government were responsible (loud Opposition protests). No Government should attempt to bind Parliament over a period of years upon such a controversial issue as tariffs, as it only resulted in raising hopes which were bound sooner or later to be frustrated. The Government did not propose abolition of the preferences now in force, but reserved full liberty to propose to Parliament reduction or abolition of duties on all commodities to which preference was applied whenever they deemed it expedient. The Government would give an early opportunity for full and free discussion of the Imperial Economic Conference resolutions, and, if the House adopted any of them, the Government would make provision for them in the Finance Bill.

Two matters arising from the Imperial Conference required financial resolutions: (1) in regard to immunity of State enterprise from taxation, which he proposed to postpone till next year in order to afford opportunity for further consultation; and (2) he hoped to include in the Finance Bill a clause giving effect to the reciprocal arrangements made last year in regard to double taxation of shipping, it being understood that it was voluntary and permissive.

A reduction in the duty on sugar to 1½d. a pound would operate from April 30. This would cost £17,700,000 this year and £18,400,000 in a full year. Reduction of the tea duty by one-half from May 5 would cost £5,400,000 a year and reduction of the duties on cocoa, coffee and chicory by one-half (on cocoa from April 30 and on coffee and chicory from May 5) would cost £843,000. Non-renewal of the 50 per cent. increase on the dried fruits duty, imposed in 1915, would cost £250,000. Thus every one of the food duties would be reduced (loud Ministerial cheers). It was estimated that this would cost £23,700,000 this year and £24,893,000 in a full year.

McKenna Duties Abolished.

Announcement of the abolition of the McKenna duties from August 1 was greeted with loud Ministerial and Liberal cheers. This will cost £2,500,000.

Mr. Snowden declared that the country had given a very decisive vote against these duties at the last election and the Government was bound to give effect to that policy.

In addition to abolition of the tax on payments for admission to entertainments up to sixpence, the tax on payments up to 1s. 3d. would be reduced, costing £3,400,000 this year. Repeal of the Corporation Profits Tax would cost £2,000,000. The cost of all the reductions in taxation would total £34,050,000, leaving an estimated surplus of £4,024,000, which he would keep to provide for supplementary expenditure. He did not suppose that this would be sufficient to meet the expenditure on outside estimates, which Parliament might sanction during the year.

For example, the House of Commons was committed to removal of the thrift disqualification for old-age pensions and there would be calls for housing and unemployment.

Mr. Snowden was convinced that considerable economies could be effected during the year.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer spoke for an hour and three-quarters and was given an ovation when he sat down.

Note:—The McKenna duties were a war measure imposed in 1916. Mr. Bonar Law undertook to remove them after the war.

They included tariffs of 33⅓ per cent. on imported motor-cars, pianos, watches, clocks, cinema films and a few other articles.

There have been intimations in the newspapers lately and recently on the part of a number of manufacturers in the trades concerned, particularly motor-car makers, that abolition would mean wholesale dismissals of workers. Hence there was doubt whether the Labour Government would abolish the duties and Mr. Snowden's explanation to-day that the date of their abolition had been fixed for August 1 was in order to avoid inconvenience to the trades concerned.

Opposition Congratulations.

Later.

The necessary resolution with regard to the tea duty was carried and the remaining Budget resolutions agreed to.

While reserving the right to criticize the proposals later, the leaders of the Opposition congratulated Mr. Philip Snowden on his lucid statement and applauded the evidences of the sound condition of the national finances.

The ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Robert Horne, expressed the opinion that the statement, with slight modifications, might well have been made by either of the older parties (Labour cries of dissent). He twitted the Government with seeking a trade agreement with Russia and rejecting a trade agreement with the Dominions.

Mr. Asquith described the Budget as a thoroughly sound financial operation, containing nothing to which the Liberals were unable heartily to subscribe.

On the conclusion of Mr. Asquith's speech, Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George walked to the Treasury Bench and shook hands with Mr. Snowden. A little earlier Mr. Austen Chamberlain had thrown the Chancellor of the Exchequer a note, with which the latter was very pleased.

Press Tributes.

Apr. 30.

Papers of all shades of opinion pay tribute to the cleverness and moderation of the first Labour Budget, acknowledging with relief that "no more decorous or respectable Budget has been produced in the last half century," though the Conservative organs suspect that the moderation is more tactical than sincere, and suggest that the Budget is intended as a sleeping draught. They also roundly condemn the repudiation of the Imperial preference proposals and likewise the proposed abolition of the McKenna duties as a blow to important British industries.

The Liberal press complacently hails "the Free Trade Budget as safe, sound and practical." It notes with gratification its advance towards the ideal of a free breakfast table.

There are indications that the Budget has already considerably modified the recent dissatisfaction of the Liberals with the Government, whose position is likely to be strengthened. The Budget and its reception have gratified the Labourites.—Reuter.

A General Improvement in Shares; Reduction in Price of Sugar

London, Apr. 30.

The Budget was very favourably received on the Stock Exchange. The markets all round are good. Tea shares are active. Some heavy-priced shares are £1 higher and smaller-priced shares 5/- higher. Industrials responded well to the repeal of the corporation Tax. The produce markets were similarly affected. Sugar futures advanced in anticipation of a great improvement in demand. On the reduction of the duty coming into force today, refiners will reduce home prices by 14/-, the equivalent of the tax.

In the course of the Budget debate in the House of Commons to-day, Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Colonial Secretary, refuted in a spirited maner the idea that the Conservatives were the only party who were jealous of the position of the Empire. He stated that out of 32 resolutions of the Imperial Conference two were at present under consideration two were definitely opposed by the Government and 282 were being put into operation.—Reuter.

ALLIES' VIEWS ON PLAN FOR SOLVING GERMAN REPARATIONS QUESTION

Majority for Accepting Experts' Recommendations: France Insisting on Proper Guarantees from Germany

Paris, Apr. 26.

The Allied Governments' replies to the Reparations Commission regarding the experts' reports have been published.

The British Government promises to do its utmost to facilitate adoption of the reports in all matters coming within its jurisdiction: (1) restoration of the fiscal and economic authority of the Reich over all its territory; (2) to take steps to give a binding effect to new guarantees and controls in so far as they are not clearly covered by the Peace Treaty; and (3) inclusion of all Germany's treaty liabilities in a single annuity.

French Stipulations.

The French reply says that the Governments concerned have the right to expect from the Commission a definitive decision embodying the experts' conclusions, supporting them with argument, giving them practical form and completing them on certain points. It adds that the Governments can only take useful action after the Commission has completed this work, and states that the French Government must consider under what conditions the present French and Belgian guarantees shall be merged in or exchanged for those which will be handed as an undivided whole to all the Allies. These operations, it says, cannot be effected until Germany has effectively put the plan into execution.

The Belgian reply accepts the conclusions as a whole and expresses a hope that the Commission will consider the German draft laws and decrees and lose no time in preparing measures to enable the plan to be promptly enforced by common agreement of the Allies, with whom Belgium is entering into immediate contact.

The Italian reply states that the Government is prepared to adopt integrally the conclusions and the principles inspiring them.

The Reparations Commission has taken the first step in the application of the experts' plans by a dinner that the chief delegates gave to Mr. Pierpont Morgan, as the beginning of a campaign of consultation of leading international financiers, including neutrals, especially in connexion with the flotation of a German loan.—Reuter.

Chicago, Apr. 26.

General Charles Gates Dawes, in a wireless message declining an invitation to a dinner in his honour, explains that he and his associates on the experts' committee agreed neither to speak nor write regarding the reparations report lest their remarks should invite controversy or be construed as an interpretation of the report.—Reuter's American Service.

New York Ready to Lend.

New York, Apr. 25.

The International Acceptance Bank announces the establishment of an American banking syndicate for granting the new German gold bank unrestricted credit facilities. It is expected that these will lead to the reopening of channels of trade with Germany. An initial advance of $5,000,000 will be made.—Reuter's American Service.

German Secret Societies.

Berlin, Apr. 25.

The Allied Ambassadors have jointly requested Germany to put an end to the activities of secret societies, which are contrary to the peace treaty and are threatening the safety of the occupying forces.—Reuter.

Favourable Comment in French Press: Difficulties Not Unsurmountable

Paris, Apr. 27.

The replies of the Allies on the experts' reports are very favourably commented on by the Paris press, which emphasizes the conciliatoriness of the replies and declares that, though there may still be certain divergencies, and the Allied conversations may be long and delicate, there is no difficulty that cannot be surmounted and there is every hope that an agreement will be reached.

Later.

It is reported from Duesseldorf that the German Chancellor in an electoral speech advocated a policy of execution of treaties, thus helping a Franco-German rapprochement. He said that the advent of the Right extremists to power would spell disaster for Germany. It would mean the collapse of the whole of Europe. Fanatical patriotic propaganda was a crime against the German people. He noticed that the nearer he came to the occupied territory, the more reasonable the inhabitants were and the further removed from ultra-Nationalist ideas.—Reuter.

Conference Between French and Belgian Premiers

Paris, Apr. 28.

The Belgian Premier, M. Théunis, and the Foreign Minister, M. Hymans, arrived in Paris to-day and conferred with the Premier, M. Poincaré, at the Quai d'Orsay.

They emphasize that the conversations do not constitute a formal conference, but merely an exchange of views prior to their return to London. They stated that Belgium thus marks her solidarity with France, though she cannot be expected to neglect her own interests. They denied that the object of their visit to Paris was to mediate between France and Britain.

Later.

Both sides express complete satisfaction and say that a perfect identity of views prevails following a meeting of over three hours of the four French and Belgian principals and the heads of all the French departments concerned in the experts' report, which, it is understood, was discussed in all its aspects.

Apr. 29.

It is understood in French diplomatic circles that MM. Poincaré, Théunis and Hymans have agreed:—

(1) Rigidly to insist that Germany shall put the experts' plan into operation before the persent control measures in the Ruhr and Rhineland can be withdrawn;

(2) That the re-establishment of the economic and fiscal unity of Germany does not necessarily involve the automatic cessation of the military occupation of the Ruhr;

(3) That the railway communications of the occupation troops must be safeguarded and not be dependent on German railwaymen. Reuter.

A Golden Opportunity.

London, Apr. 28.

Let there be no doubt about it,' said Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, the Prime Minister, acknowledging the presentation of an illuminated address at Port Talbot to-day. "The experts' report is an opportunity for a peace settlement, which, if not taken advantage of by European statesmen, would be one of the most golden opportunities ever neglected and lost."

Mr. MacDonald declared that the last thing he wanted was that France should be isolated. He wanted M. Poincaré to know that, as far as her security was concerned, France had no better friend than Britain.

The Prime Minister was profoundly convinced that the experts' reports, joined with four years' experience, would make both France and Britain see that by common friendship, by working with Italy and Belgium and small nationalities, and by offering Germany a real chance to make a pledge and keep it,—"only in that open and friendly allied way can we open the new door to peace and happiness and international co-operation."—Reuter.

Allied Experts in America

New York, Apr. 28.

General Dawes, Mr. Owen Young and Mr. Henry Robinson, the American reparations experts, arrived here to-day on board the Leviathan. They jointly made a statement urging American participation in the execution of the experts' plan, particularly with regard to flotation of a loan for Germany, which, they declare, would be amply secured, would start the Dawes plan working and would restore the economic tranquility and buying power of Europe and lead to an era of peace and goodwill.—Reuter's American Service.

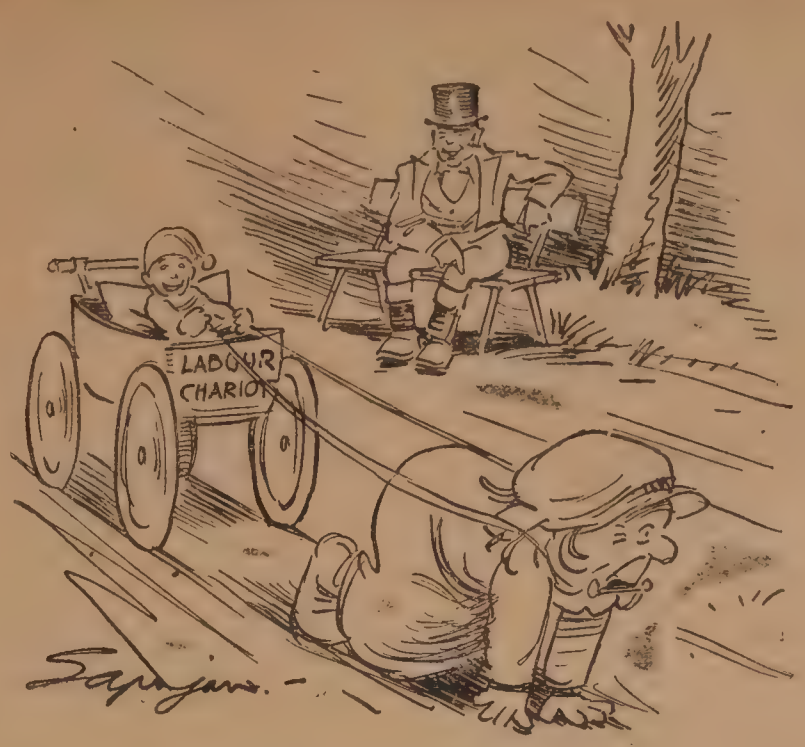
Washington, Apr. 30.

President Coolidge received today General Dawes and the other American members of the experts committees who have thus concluded their services regarding reparations. It is understood that they received the President's congratulations.—Reuter's American Service.

Paris, Apr. 29.

The Japanese and Jugo-Slav Governments' replies to the communication of the Reparations Commission of April 17, with regard to the experts' reports, have been received, and the Commission will consider them as well as the British and Italian Governments' replies.

Japan's reply states that she is prepared to adopt the experts' conclusions in their entirety.—Reuter.



The Liberal Party, so far from being able to strangle the Labour babe, complain bitterly of the rudeness of that tyrannical infant.

THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS

America's Extensive Naval Building Programme Approved by Senate

London, Apr. 30.

In the House of Commons today, Mr. John Harris (Liberal) drew attention to the American Bill authorizing construction of eight new cruisers, each of 10,000 tons, and suggested that the Government should approach the United States with regard to the possibility of another naval conference with the object of preventing a new race in the construction of cruisers.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, in reply, referred to the statement of President Coolidge on April 22 that it appeared impracticable at present to attempt any further limitation of armaments. He was glad to find that President Coolidge agreed with the attitude that the Labour Government had always taken up, that before discussing limitation of armaments we must first remove some of the difficulties of the political situation in Europe.—Reuter.

Washington, Apr. 30.

A naval building programme complete with air-craft carriers, destroyers and submarine tenders, light-cruisers, modern submarines and other units is urged by the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Coontz, in a statement which is given much prominence in the newspapers, alleging the inability of the American fleet to manœuvre faster than 10 knots, due to the slowness of the auxiliary ships and the failure of submarines to function in the work of the Fleet, and also severely criticizing the shortage of minesweepers and the incompleteness of the anti-aircraft batteries on the older ships.

Later.

The Senate to-day approved without a dissenting vote, and with little discussion, the Naval Appropriation Bill, providing for a total expenditure of $275,000,000, an increase of $700,000 over the sum approved by the House of Representatives. The Senate, like the House of Representatives, voted a rider calling a naval and aerial armaments conference, but adding the number of naval personnel to the topics to be discussed and broadening the rider to extend the proposed invitation not only to participants in the conference of 1921, but to such other nations as the President shall deem advisable.

There is accordingly no doubt with regard to the concurrence of Congress in any armaments conference the President may ultimately call.—Reuter's American Service.

Australia's Programme.

Melbourne, Apr. 30.

It is announced that the Government's Naval programme for the next five years includes the construction of four light cruisers and some long-range cruising submarines, costing about £250,000 each.—Reuter.

SOVIET DEMANDING BRITISH LOAN

But Totally Refusing to Admit Recognition of Debts and Return of Property

London, Apr. 26.

An earnest plea for a loan as the only way to solve the question of Russia's pre-war debts and to promote trade between Britain and Russia was made by M. Rakovsky in a statement to the press.

He declared that the larger part would be spent in England for orders already drafted. M. Rakovsky declared categorically that Russia would never concede some of the demands by the British bankers in their recent memorandum which were inadmissible and an attempt to interfere with Russia's internal politics. Neither would property be restored to its former owners, but he suggested that their enterprises might be leased to them on a concessionary basis.

The Russian Chargé d'Affaires in London emphasizes that the protest of the All-Russian Council of Trades Unions against the London bankers' memorandum to the Prime Minister must not be regarded as official: although it contains some points according with the views of the Government, it does not represent the policy of the Soviet in other respects.

M. Rakovsky states that hitherto the negotiations in London have gone very well. Goodwill is being shown and there has been no serious difference of opinion. He believes that definite results on some of the questions will be reached next week. It is not intended, he says, to postpone settlement of individual points until a general settlement is reached, but to conclude agreements as arrived at.—Reuter.

Communist Propaganda as Ever.

Riga, Apr. 25.

On the occasion of the anniversary of the foundation of the so-called Eastern University of Moscow, M. Trotzky, Mme. Clara Zetkin, Dr. Radek and others spoke enthusiastically of the Eastern revolutionary movement, which the University solemnly swore to support by providing "thousands of steadfast, loyal Communist revolutionary champions."

M. Trotzky incidentally termed Mr. Ramsay MacDonald more reactionary than the Turkish Nationalists.—Reuter.

More of Trotzky's Tactful Talk

Moscow, Apr. 30.

"If the British Labour Government had the courage and valour demanded by Russian workers, it would seize an opportunity to conclude a treaty with Soviet Russia which would result in re-mapping Europe," said M. Trotzky in a speech at the Bolshoi Theatre today.

He added that a combination of Russia's wealth and resources and British technical knowledge would enable both countries to dictate to Europe.

"But there is no such Government in Britain. Therefore we must be prepared to accept any agreement which we shall carry out in the hope of greater mutual advantages later."

M. Trotzky accused Mr. Ramsay MacDonald of suppressing Afghanistan's struggle for freedom and of increasing Britain's military burdens.

M. Trotzky is having a remarkable "come back." He received an ovation to-day and looked the picture of health.—Reuter.

THE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY

Acceptance of the Versailles Treaty and Experts' Report the Main Issue

Berlin, Apr. 27.

There were serious disturbances in Berlin to-night in connexion with an electoral meeting of the German People's party. Communists blocked the neighbouring streets and seized and belaboured supporters of the People's party with life-preservers and rubber truncheons until the police were reinforced. Over 40 persons were injured. Sixteen arrests were made.—Reuter.

Berlin, Apr. 29.

The main issue in the elections to the Reichstag is "Shall the Treaty of Versailles and the experts' report be unequivocally accepted by Germany as the basis of peace in Europe?"

Supporters of the extreme Nationalist party and the German National party reply in the negative; the Socialist party, the German People's party, the Centre party and the Democratic party reply in the affirmative. The Nationalists, who are also Monarchists and furiously anti-Semitic, are expected to poll in large numbers, but it will be impossible for them to secure a majority. Herr Helferich's death has weakened the German National party and Herr Stresemann's German People's party, which includes prominent industrialists, is adopting a middle course which favours the restoration of Monarchy by constitutional means, while the majority of the Centre party are Republicans.

The favourable reception of the experts' report will undoubtedly influence the elections in favour of the Democrats, Socialists and Republicans.—Reuter.

FRANCO-JAPANESE RELATIONS

A New Economic Entente in the Far East: Commercial Treaty Under Discussion

Tokio, Apr. 30.

Relations between France and Japan are being given much attention here in connexion with the visit of Mr. Merlin, the Governor-General of Indo-China, and the contemplated discussions on commercial relations in the Far East, which, it is expected, may be embodied in a new commercial treaty which Japan has already proposed to negotiate in Paris.

The fact that M. Merlin will be accompanied by the chairmen of three Indo-Chinese Chambers of Commerce is regarded as emphasizing the purpose of his visit. It is believed that the mission plans to lay the foundation of a new Franco-Japanese economic entente in the Far East.

It is pointed out that Japan wishes revision of the Indo-China tariffs, which have hitherto been regarded as discriminating against her, because the old treaty with France did not extend to Indo-China, and also opportunities for investment of Japanese capital in Indo-China's natural resources, in which the Mitsui firm is principally interested.

In this connexion, it is officially stated that a politicial understanding between France and Japan is not contemplated.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Paris, Apr. 30.

Viscount Ishii, the Japanese Ambassador in Paris, has recently been discussing with M. Poincaré the conclusion of a Franco-Japanese commercial treaty. The proposals of the Japanese Ambassador concerning this treaty are being considered by the appropriate departments.—Reuter.

Insuring Against Germany.

London, May 1.

Referring to the "growing Franco-Japanese Entente," the Diplomatic Correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" mentions the report that the Governor-General of Indo-China on his coming visit to Japan intends to negotiate an agreement for admission of Japanese emigrants on a large scale into Indo-China. He adds that there is little doubt that France's main purpose is to insure against a possible Russo-German alliance by means of a Franco-Japanese defensive pact.—Reuter.

RAILWAY DISASTER IN N. LONDON

Football Cup Special Crashed into by Electric Train Outside Euston

London, Apr. 26.

An electric train crashed into the rear of a special standing in a tunnel a mile outside Euston. The latter was crowded with excursionists from Coventry for the Cup final at Wembley. It is feared that several persons were killed and injured.

Later.

It is officially stated that the number of persons injured is not definitely known but probably 20. Two persons are stated to have been killed.

The special, into which the electric train crashed, was from Birmingham and elsewhere in the north. It was crowded with Aston supporters. It stopped near the terminus and the majority of the passengers were standing up and getting their wraps and overcoats when the electric train crashed into its rear where most of the casualties occurred. Rescue work was carried out in semi-darkness in the tunnel. Many were injured seriously. A few women were aboard the train.

Later.

Thirty-five injured persons in the train crash at Euston have been taken to hospital on stretchers improvised out of carriage cushions. Two persons have died. A few have broken limbs but most of the cases were slight injuries. All the victims were surprisingly cheerful. Some of them, after their injuries had been dressed, expressed their intention of going to the Cup Final. Most were from Coventry, but four Londoners in the electric train were injured.

Later.

Altogether 50 persons were injured in the Euston disaster.

Distressing scenes were witnessed in the dark tunnel. Rescuers, working with light flares and acetylene lamps, were extricating the injured passengers from the débris of several coaches that had been smashed to matchwood.

The difficulties and dangers were increased by the stifling fumes of fused rubber-covered cables and gases, the train cylinders repeatedly catching alight.

A conflagration was averted by very prompt application of extenguishers and continuous supplies of water. The relief party wielded pickaxes and crowbars and improvised the woodwork of the carriages as stretchers.

The line was cut [illegible] for the rest of the day.

Later.

The death-roll in the Euston disaster has been brought up to four by the death in hospital of two of the injured. The condition of the driver of the electric train, whose legs have been crushed, is serious. The others are progressing favourably.

Good progress has been made in clearing the wreckage from the tunnel. It is anticipated that the full train service will operate to-morrow.—Reuter.

A Signalman's Negligence

London, Apr 30

The signalman giving evidence at the inquiry into the accident at Euston on April 26, when an electric train crashed into the rear of a special standing in a tunnel, admitted to-day that he had forgetfully passed the electric train to the line on which the express was standing.

Later.

The fifth death as the result of the Wembley collision occurred in hospital to-day.—Reuter.

Thomas, had a long interview at the Colonial Office to-day with the Prime Minister of Ulster, Sir James Craig, and the High Commissioner of the Irish Free State in London, Mr. James MacNeill.

London, Apr. 29.

DUTCH AIRPLANE TRAGEDY

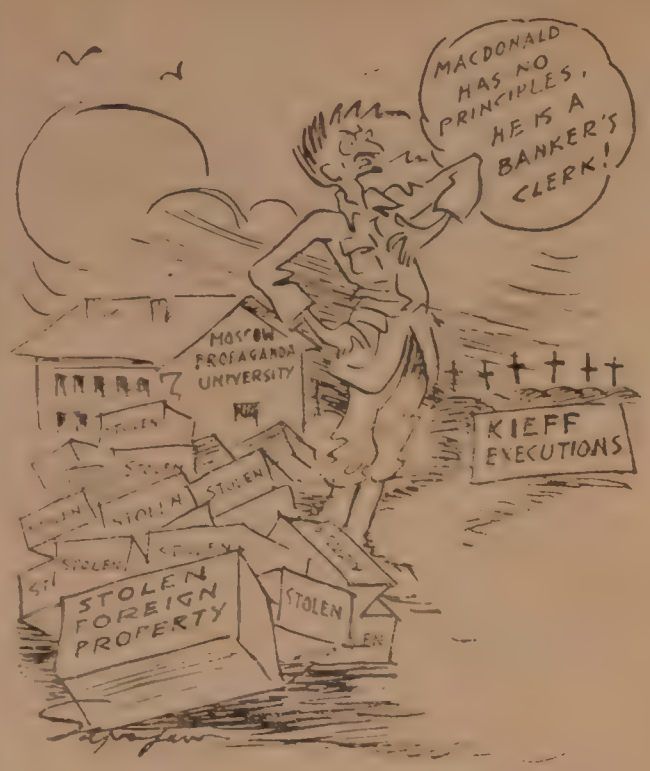
Trans-Channel Plane Lost with Two Passengers and Pilot

The Hague, Apr. 25.

An aeroplane belonging to the Royal Dutch Air Service, which left England for Holland yesterday evening with two Dutch passengers, is missing. Three naval aeroplanes and a torpedo boat are conducting a search. The company announce that there is no hope of rescuing the pilot and the passengers alive.—Reuter.

Amsterdam, Apr. 26.

The aeroplanes and warship have returned after vainly searching for the missing aeroplane.—Reuter.



M. Trotsky's virtuous indignation conveniently ignores a few little deficiencies of principle on the Soviet's part.

London, Apr. 26.

An exhaustive search for the missing aeroplane proved resultless. The pilot and passengers were all Dutch. One was M. Van Hein, a Dutch Indies planter. British and Dutch aeroplanes scoured the route all day yesterday. A Dutch machine saw [illegible] wreckage on the Goodwins at low tide. A British machine found oil on the surface of the sea near by but it is impossible definitely to establish connexion with the missing machine.—Reuter.

London, Apr. 26.

The Prince of Wales to-day unveiled at Chatham one of three memorials erected at British ports in memory of the 25,563 men and women who perished in the naval service during the Great War.

The memorial at Chatham contains 8,543 names.

His Royal Highness said that it was impossible to erect a monument to these heroes similar to those in the battlefields of France and Gallipoli, for all the seas of the world were their battlefield and their grave. Through the victory won by their sacrifice, the ships of Britain still sailed to the uttermost ends of the earth.—Reuter.

Then was a further explosion two hours later. The fire is still burning.—Reuter.

Later.

Two firemen are missing from the steamer City of Singapore and it is presumed that they were blown to pieces in the first explosion.

The total casualties are three killed and 11 seriously injured, including the chief officer and the fifth engineer. Scores off others have sustained minor injuries.—Reuter.

A telegram from Adelaide states that the fire on the City of Singapore is under control. The vessel is hard aground. From the engine-room aft the depth of the water is equal inside and out. Washington, May 1.

A despatch from Alaska states that there is anxiety regarding the whereabouts of Major Martin, the leader of the world-flight.

Major Martin was detained at Chignik by severe weather and 400 lb. of ice accumulated on his machine. FRANCO-JAPANESE ENTENTE

M. Merlin's Visit to Japan: Expected Settlement of Economic Relations

Paris, May 1.

A long semi-official statement regarding the visit to Japan of M. Merlin, the Governor-General of Indo-China, deprecates the "tendencious comments of the British press." It says that M. Merlin is merely perpetuating the tradition, well established by the visits to Japan of his predecessors. He is going in order to offer the condolences of the French Government on the occasion of the recent disastrous earthquake and the congratulations of the French Government on the marriage of the Prince Regent. He will also probably lay the foundation stone of the new French Embassy.

The statement adds that it is also possible that the Japanese authorities will take the opportunity of discussing with M. Merlin questions affecting the Customs between Japan and Indo-China, which conversations might lead to a settlement of Franco-Japanese economic relations. The statement officially contradicts the reports that Indo-China will provide an outlet for Japanese immigration.—Reuter.

MAY DAY IN EUROPE

Disorderly Demonstrations in Paris, Athens and Koenigsberg

London, May 1.

Three thousand people marched in procession in the rain to Hyde Park to-day to attend the international Labour May Day demonstration, which was very orderly.

Just before a meeting at Kentish Town under Liberal auspices in support of free speech was timed to begin, two chars-à-banc drove up, filled with sturdy young men wearing badges inscribed with a large "F." The leader explained: "We are members of the British Fascisti and we intend to check the rowdyism which has recently occurred at meetings."

The celebrations in Paris were also conducted in a holiday spirit.

The only trouble in Germany occurred at Koenigsberg, where two persons were killed and two wounded in a collision between police and Communists, while the police in Berlin prevented the Communists holding open-air meetings.

Crowds gathered at Athens in spite of prohibition of meetings and refused to disperse when a fire-hose was turned on them, but fled when troops fired in the air.—Reuter.

ADVENTURES OF U. S. NAVAL OFFICERS

Mistaken for Russian Pirates by Japanese Watchmen at Paramushiru

Paramushiru, Apr. 24.

The John D. Ford was caught in the tide-rip late this afternoon and narrowly escaped colliding with the Tokitsukaze by dragging her anchor. She was, however, brought under control, another was dropped, and her anchorage was shifted.

Three redoubtable Nimrods from the North country, Capt. George O. Clark, Ensign Arthur H. McCallum, both Language Officers attached to the Embassy in Tokio, and Ensign W. R. Cooke, attached to the Ford, were this afternoon mistaken for Russian pirates and nearly shot, when they unearthed two of the island's inhabitants, both of whom laid an ambush as the explorers advanced.

The mistake was quite a natural one, as all have neglected to patronize the barber since leaving Yokohama.

The officers, luckily for themselves, succeeded in establishing an entente cordiale with the inhabitants, who proved to be two Japanese employed as watchmen of a small canning factory operating during the summer, and who had not seen anyone for more than six months, and had heard lurid tales of Russian atrocities.

The Japanese promised to assist in solving the food problem by directing future bear-hunting and fishing activities.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Paris, May 2.

With the approach of the elections on May 11, the campaign is waxing ever hotter. There are daily acts of violence at election meetings in Paris and other large cities. M. André Tardieu has been attacked several times. A Radical youth assaulted Prince Murat at Cahors. The Mayor of Mélun was shot at as he entered his motor-car at the close of a meeting.

The "Journal des Debats" declares that revolutionary teaching is bearing fruit. Most of the voters have to choose out of seven and sometimes eight mutually antagonistic lists.—Reuter.

AN ENGLISH TRAVELLER IN AMERICA

China's Demand for Machinery for Her Factories: The Moral to Be Drawn: Coueism in America: Crusade for Restriction on Immigrants

San Francisco, Mar. 28.

The observing foreigner from China who moves around the commercial offices of the large centres in this country cannot fail to be struck with the increasing number of native Chinese manufactures that are finding their way into the American market in increasing volume. In the big department stores one finds evidence of the work of energetic Americans who have introduced all sorts and conditions of Chinese wares. Similarly, to anyone conversant with prices in China one hesitates to determine how these same energetic merchants can work on such close margins, for the prices that are asked are very often practically identical to, or very little above, those charged for similar articles along the Nanking Road—plus, of course, the American duty.

ASPECTS OF CHINA'S INDUSTRIES.

Apropos, I may remark that despite the fact that trade has been bad in China for some three years or more, I am astounded to find the progress being made, admittedly against the greatest odds, of native industries and the export of products from your native factories. There is only one sound principle for the development of industries in any country, i.e., to purchase and if necessary also export the maximum quantity of raw material, and to produce and export the maximum quantity of finished products. An ideal Customs tariff would admit raw materials free and exempt native-finished products from export duty; while, on the other hand, it would place heavy import duties on foreign-manufactured goods except productive machinery, and a heavy export duty on native raw material. How far this will be realized in China at some future date is a matter of doubt. In some ways it would not suit the foreign merchant, whose admitted aim is largely to carry on his own country's trade—the Briton for British, the American for United States' trade, the Japanese for Japan's trade, and so on—with an application of the above principles to that particular country instead of China.

Nevertheless, it seems to me that the tendency for China to become a manufacturing country with such a policy is unavoidable, and has, in fact, been largely stimulated by foreign merchants at Shanghai and other ports, who, partly through altruistic motives and partly with a view to immediate profits, have fallen in with the natural desires of the Chinese people. Whereas in the early days of China trade (as your studious readers will know) China exported to this and other countries only somewhat unique products, such as tea and silk in exchange for foreign products unknown in China, she is now importing multifarious necessities for herself and exporting abroad foodstuffs and a host of other more or less useful products which are emerging in increasing volume from her own native factories.

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE MATTER.

While talking on this subject, one may notice another change that is slowly but surely going on—a fact which men in China do not so readily sense, however. By importing machinery and acquiring technical knowledge, China will supply herself with growing quantities of necessities that she previously bought from other countries. You can see this today in a hundred articles if you care to make comparison of Customs records of, say 1910 and 1924 no, I beg the Customs pardon, the 1924 figures will not be on hand for several months! Soaps, candles, all sorts of household goods, not to mention the cheaper cottons and manufactures that run into fairly big money, come within this category. China ceases to buy from abroad immediately she finds that she can make for herself more cheaply. In the long run this must embrace practically all her necessities, so that the general imports that the foreign merchants of the China of the future will handle will be largely machinery and luxuries—China will be making all the rest, and possibly not only supplying her own domestic needs but entering into competition in other Asiatic markets. There are those who will smile, but I fear that our grandchildren will not be able to ignore the fact as we to-day may think we can. How remote is this stage would do us no good to discuss, but I think that we may as well proceed irrespective of the political situation in China, which must, however, naturally affect the speed at which China will move in this economic emancipation.

We all are prepared to admit that China must become a gigantic buyer before she can become a serious competitor, but I think the average man who does business with the Chinese in the China ports often loses sight of the fact that, while the market for machinery may be large, it is not indefinitely so, whereas the markets for the products of the machinery may be almost illimitable. The byword of to-day in China-commerce, therefore, should be cooperation. Foreigners should combine with Chinese and encourage them in their industrial development. The foreign business man in China who does all that he can to quicken the cooperative spirit between himself and the Chinese is doing more for the permanent upbuilding of trade than the man whose horizon is bounded by his immediate profit taking.

"EVERY DAY, IN EVERY WAY . . ."

A few nights ago I listened with several hundred others to a discourse by Emile Coué. The evening was frankly enjoyable. While I heard him talking I could not keep my mind from wandering to China—what would happen, thought I, if we could produce a dozen Coué's to help the Chinese nation solve its ills? Coué has had a remarkably successful tour in the United States, and his latest book is one of the best sellers. I am not prepared to dogmatize, but I believe that the American public will have been done some good if one-half of one per cent. of the people who heard him heed his wisdom.

That auto-suggestion is a channel by which man can be shown that the burdens of life are, at least in large measure, of his own creating is, to my mind, beyond doubt. We reproduce in ourselves and in our circumstances the thought of our own minds, and the universe, it may be said, exists in mind—in our mind. If we can get the unconscious to accept an idea, realization follows automatically. The only difficulty which confronts men in the practice of induced auto-suggestion is to ensure acceptation, and that is precisely the difficulty which no method, prior to that of Coue's, it is claimed, has satisfactorily surmounted. We can think of the unconcious, so Coué tells us, as a tide which ebbs and flow. In sleep it seems to submerge the conscious altogether, while at our moments of full wakefulness, when the attention and will are both at work, the tide is at its lowest ebb. Between these two extremes are any number of intermediary levels. When we are drowsy, dreamy, lulled into a gentle reverie by music or a picture or poem, the unconscious tide is high; the more wakeful and alert we become the lower it sinks."

One would assume that every man who thinks at all would have known this, but the audience showed a quite uncommon enthusiasm, giving the busy alert little Frenchman a rousing reception.

By the way, Coué is alleged to have been "discovered" to the English-speaking world by Lady Beatty, and the announcement she is said to have made to the effect that she had been cured of serious illness by the exponent of thought-suggestion attracted the attention of England and America. Auto-suggestion presents endless possibilities for good. Coué claims that it will cause a revolution in our system of education, for hitherto we have been training only the conscious mind, but by his methods we can reach and train the more important sub-conscious. Well, well,—here is the chance for some practical Frenchmen in China to get busy and induce Coué to first learn Chinese and then do for mankind in China what he will probably never be able to do in any other country; convert them to Couéism by the million!

IMMIGRATION AND THE MELTING POT.

The question of a further restriction of immigration is a topic of growing importance all over the country here. The proposed legislation reducing the quota and changing its basis from the census of 1910 to the census of 1890 will be acrimoniously debated during the present session of Congress. Ten years ago there were many who openly urged an absolutely unlimited immigration in the United States, while nominally conceding the desirability of forbidding the entry of the insane, criminal and diseased. But what a changed opinion in a decade! The old American idea, as I saw it put a day or two ago, inherited from the 19th century, of the efficacy of the "melting pot," still prevailed 10 years ago. Looking back over even a short period of time (I quote from a long article in one of the academic magazines of the month)

"it seems strange that this fatuous belief in the all-pervading power of Democracy to obliterate race characters in a single generation could persist so long. One would suppose that our three centuries of experience with the Negro problem would have militated against this very satisfactory self-confidence, but it was not until the passions generated by the Civil War had evaporated that we Americans were able to regard that problem in its true light. When we did so regard it we found that we had acquired several similar problems, both racial and religious. The awakening came with the Great War, when Americans were forced to the realization that their country, instead of being a homogeneous whole, was a jumbled up mass of undigested racial material. Then they learned somewhat to their surprise that the country was no longer Anglo-Saxon nor Protestant, and that in some localities there were indications that it might not continue to be English-speaking."

The statement is then made that the population of the United State would be substantially as large as it is now if no immigrants whatever had come in during the last hundred years, and it is equally certain that the Americans would not have despised manual labour as they do now. Only in parts of the country and in occupations where the competition of the alien is not felt, the native American works cheerfully at the most laborious tasks. The immigrant, it is asserted, has thus done a very serious damage to America "by teaching our youth to despise hard manual labour." The promotion of Americans into what is characterized as "an upper class," resting upon strata of aliens of lower standards, has also had the effect of reducing the native American birth-rate. This is undeniably true. It is a phenomenon universal in Europe, and by no means of recent date; the upper and wealthier classes tend to lower their rate of reproduction, while reckless breeding generally goes on among the lower classes.

Statistics given out by the Census Bureau at Washington only yesterday show the annual death rate of the United States to have been 12.6 per 1,000 of population in the first nine months of 1923, compared with 11.8 for the same period of 1922. The annual birth-rate was 22.8 per 1000, compared with 23.1. It may be noted that Montana had the lowest death-rate (with 7.0 per 1000) and Vermont had the highest (with 15.8). North Carolina had the highest birth-rate with 30.2 Montana, with 17.5, being the lowest.

"LOAN OF AT LEAST $500,000,000."

Many of your readers will remember Mr. Charles Denby, who was American Consul-General at Shanghai from 1907 to 1909, if I remember rightly. Mr. Denby has had a long career in China, and his opinion on things Chinese is to be respected. He served as secretary of legation at Peking from 1885 to 1897, and acted as foreign adviser to the Governor-General of North China, and in 1918 was special representative for the Department of State in Japan and China. In the "North American Review" for March, Mr. Denby contributes a very readable article on the "Crisis of the Chinese Government," and one finds oneself entirely is sympathy with him until he begins to point out that the purpose of his article is to show how the Central Government at Peking may be put in order. This is Mr. Denby's plan:—

"The best plan would be to select the most acceptable strong man in China now in conflict with other strong men and help him, by moral and financial support, to overcome his rivals. This support might take the form of a loan to the recognized Government of sufficient funds to pay off the armies of rival military leaders and to meet the most urgent of China's financial obligations: with the provision that this loan should be administered under expert supervision, that the taxes for its repayment should be levied, collected and distributed under foreign control, and that so far as this involved foreign protection armed foreign guards should be admitted into the country. In short, leave to China the formation of her own Government and the handling of her own people, and reserve to the foreign Powers such control as to assure a well conducted Government and an honestly handled revenue. Under such conditions China's credit would be good for an initial loan of at least five hundred million dollars. . . . Such a plan would involve the least interference with China, the least use of military force, and the least use of foreign money, and it would promise an economical and trade development which would repay a thousand fold the efforts necessary to put it into effect."

Mr. Editor, I have no comment to make—the man or the government who takes this on in all seriousness will go down to history as having proved that the race of optimists is not yet dead.

Foot and Mouth Disease in California

April 6.

One of the most serious problems that has faced this part of America for many years is the foot and mouth disease that has been raging for some weeks. So serious has this now become that another appropriation of $1,000,000 is to be asked for at Washington by the Department of Agriculture. The chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry is to come out West, and several other foot and mouth disease experts from adjoining states are either already on the spot or on their way. For as long as modern farming has been carried on in this state, such an epidemic cannot be remembered, and it looks as if hundreds of large cattle ranchers will become paupers. In America, however, they certainly use all the knowledge at their command, together with money, to stamp out dangers to agriculture, no matter what form they take. Strict embargoes against all livestock, dairy and agricultural shipments from California have been imposed by Arizona and other neighbouring states, as also by the Hawaiian Islands. In many sections up and down the coast dogs are not allowed to be carried in motor cars, police permits have to be obtained for travel on highways running through infected areas, golf links are closed in places for periods from three days to a fortnight, and at some county lines passing automobiles are subjected to an interior spray with a preparation of sheep dip—an extremely odiferous preparation.

I hear that 23 lions at Universal City, of movie fame, are facing starvation. They have been fed on horse meat, but this is now not allowed to enter the city. The animals cannot eat beef because of its fattening qualities, and horse flesh is absolutely necessary to keep them alive. As a matter of fact, the movie people are being hard hit. The Fox Company want to take three camels to a "desert" scene in Southern California, but the law says no, and work on the whole picture is held up. One of the biggest carcuses in the country, also, which regards this time of the year as its best season has been forced back into winter quarters.

SNOW SURVEYING: A HINT TO CHINA.

During the last day or so, however, heavy rains have fallen throughout the states on the Pacific Coast, which will doubtless ameliorate conditions with this dreadful foot and mouth disease.

Drought has been a serious affair also. For many months, up to very recently, California had had no rain, and fruit was regarded as being a doomed product for the coming season. But now comes the news that in addition to the rains the snows have been surveyed, with the discovery that there is more snow than was anticipated. By the way, this surveying of the snows will be of interest to China readers who have watched the peculiarities of the Yangtze at Hankow soon after the snow waters have come down. In my time it was always a hazard as to how much snow water there was to come from far-away Tibet, but nobody seemed ever to know, least of all any Government department. It is, therefore, of interest to learn that extensive "snow surveys" are often made by the Weather Bureau of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in regions where the water required for irrigation is obtained almost entirely from melting snow. The mountain slopes constitute natural reservoirs, from which the moisture that falls in the winter as snow is gradually fed through the spring and summer to the surrounding country. In order to ascertain the total amount of water available, the snow surveyor travels over the watershed, often on skis or snow shoes, cutting sections of snow with a cylindrical snow "sampler" and weighing them with a small spring balance. The Weather Bureau also maintains in certain parts of the country a number of special stations at which daily measurements of snowfall are made for the benefit of irrigation projects.

The heaviest snowfall in the United States occurs in the high Sierra Nevada (of California) and in the Cascades (of Washington and Oregon). At places in both of these regions more than 65 feet of snow has fallen in a single winter. China is a long way from such scientific procedure, but there can be no doubt that famine might be avoided if something of the kind were instituted, for in this way the farmers would know well ahead what water they were likely to get for their crops.

NAVAL MATTERS—ENTER WILBUR.

Denby has gone (but is not forgotten), and Wilbur has entered into the guardianship of naval matters. Mr. Curtis Dwight Wilbur, the new naval chief, is a Californian and a very popular Californian, and many people are convinced that President Coolidge has made a wise choice. So soon after his arrival at Washington it would be futile to express an opinion or even form a conclusion on what he will do, but I see that some enterprising Washington journalist has been getting him to talk. This is, in America, an absolutely necessary affair. No matter what you want to do, you must talk, and in very many cases you are compelled to pay fairly heavily for your publicity. But you must have publicity. Without publicity you will get nowhere—and so you talk, and endeavour to secure as much publicity as you can, much of which will be crude. What is published may not be, probably will not be, what you said, or even what you intended to say; but still, it is publicity, and if you "put over" publicity you are on the road to success. Your personal power in persuasive publicity will determine success.

So it is, probably, that Mr. Wilbur, the new head of the Navy, found time to explain to a newspaper man, as he is reported, that he was a firm believer and staunch supporter of two American institutions: one of these is the Navy and the other is marriage. Wilbur has not been known at Washington, so the reporter gives us this sketch of the man:

[illegible] high brow; his cheeks have [illegible] out of ruddiness, as though he [illegible] the outdoors—and he does. The [illegible] sweeps through his manner at [illegible] moments, and then again the [illegible] twinkles in his eye, as, for instance, when he told how Mrs. Wilbur fell in love with Washington. "She loves the city. She has gone out house hunting, pleased [illegible]."

Mr. Wilbur then stated crisply his position on conservation—the conservation of the Navy's oil and of the nation's resources generally. A conservationist, but not a miser, he is reported to have said that he intends to keep and develop all that he can for the Navy, and to make the American Fleet the most effective in the world. Mr. Wilbur announced that he stood for a thoroughly modernized sea force, and said that it was neither patriotism nor economy to have ships that are outranged by the ships of another Power. . . . "It would be terribly wrong, if we ever have to face a foe, to send our young men to face him with guns less effective than his. The people are interested in the Navy now. We'll never have a big army—our people won't stand for it, but they want a bang-up Navy."

Thus Mr. Wilbur is reported to have spoken. He has not yet announced any programme, but it will be interesting to see what stand he will take when he definitely gets into harness.

KAISER'S NEPHEW IN NEW YORK.

Prince Wolfgang, of Hesse, a nephew of Wilhelm, tried to slip into New York incog., under the name of "Wolfgang Wildhof, of Frankfurt," but it didn't work for long. He seems to be a more than ordinarily handsome young man, wealthy so it is said, but what the New Yorkers cannot understand is that he is extremely shy. He told his friends in the east that Niagara was the only thing that he had seen in America to come up to his expectations, and ran the risk of being ejected lock, stock and barrel when he declared publicly in New York that Riverside Drive—the place lying nearest the heart of all true New Yorkers—was not to be compared to Unter den Linden. Having seen both, I regret that I cannot agree with him.

He also shocked a good many when he told them that he thought New York more drunken than Berlin. He is not alone in his opinion, however. for I notice that a very reputable Republican, from Massachusetts, lately declared that another part of the country—the district of Columbia—was "300 per cent. more drunken than Paris and 200 per cent. more murderous than London," and he straightway gave figures to prove his point. He said that statistics of police departments disclosed a civil depravity and social disintegration under present conditions in the national capital of the United States that was appalling.

JAPAN'S GENTLEMEN'S AGREEMENT.

In the opinion of certain prominent public bodies at San Francisco, Japan should be placed on the "quota" basis for immigration. A few days ago representatives of the American Legion, the California branch of the American Federation of Labour, the Native Sons of the Golden West and the California State Grange—all of them highly responsible institutions—telegraphed to President Coolidge as follows:

"It is established beyond controversy that the so-called 'gentlemen's agreement' between the United States and Japan for more than ten years has been and is now being violated by Japan and her people. In 1909 the Pacific Coast was assured by President Roosevelt in a telegram to the California Legislature that if such an agreement failed to accomplish a reduction in the number of Japanese in the United States, the Federal Government would take such action as would accomplish that purpose.

"Such population has not decreased, but, on the contrary, has greatly increased, and in our judgment the time for Federal action in accordance with President Roosevelt's promise is at hand. The provision in the House Immigration Bill excluding from entry aliens ineligible to citizenship with certain classes exempted offers the speediest and surest means of accomplishing that purpose."

KRUPPS' PROPOSED TRANSFER TO SPAIN.

I wonder whether your readers have noticed, or if they have noticed, fully appreciate the significance of the announcement made that Krupps are transferring their great shipbuilding establishment to Spain? This is certainly one of the most important sidelights upon the European situation, and incidentally one of the most vivid disclosures of the temper and intent of Germany. In Spain, of course, they can resume and expand their manufacture of war material, which the Versailles Treaty disallows in Germany.

The "North Atlantic Review," one of the sanest magazines published in the United States, recently referred editorially to this matter, remarking that if this were to be the case Krupps "would be doing in Spain for a potential German navy what is being done for a German army by the huge German establishments which have been organized in Russia." There are also to be added the transfer of hundreds of millions of dollars of German capital to Great Britain, the United States and other countries, so that it cannot be levied upon for the payment of Germany's just debts, and so that the German Government can plead poverty and piteous pleas can be emitted for succour for the starving children of the Fatherland. Of course, as the writer I quote from says, "all this is nothing more than was to be expected of Germany," but it was not expected, after that great day when peace was declared, that the Powers would permit themselves thus to be duped and flouted.

OUR PARIS LETTERS

Fiscal Proposals: Pathetic Life Story of Princess Louise

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Mar. 7.

M. Poincaré is not at all pleased with the lack of alacrity shown by Parliament in accepting his fiscal proposals, which are now before the Finance Committee of the Senate. This body sent the newspapers a note to the effect that, while they accepted most of the proposals, they did not see the necessity of giving the Government power to legislate by decree. Yesterday morning the chairman of the committee, M. Milliès-Lacroix, went to see M. Poincaré, to tell him the committee's views and let him know the points on which they desired information. The interview was of a somewhat heated character, and M. Milliès-Lacroix hastily sent out a notice to his colleagues to meet early in the afternoon. M. Poincaré attended this improvised meeting, and said very plainly that too much time had been wasted already, that the note issued by the committee was a mistake and likely to damage the public credit. He requested the committee to accept the scheme just as it came from the Chamber and report on it at once, so that the Senate would be able to begin the debate in four days. He added that unless he received a promise to this effect, he would go to the Elysée that very evening and tender the resignation of the Cabinet. M. Milliès-Lacroix was about to say what he thought of this attitude on the part of the Premier when the latter left the room, remarking that he had no intention of going into details on that occasion.

The committee talked it over and decided to send M. Poincaré a letter intimating that they would hear what he had to say at whatever time would suit him best. This closed the incident, at any rate for the time being. It is simply a repetition on a small scale of what has repeatedly happened in the Chamber of late. M. Poincaré says in effect: "If you don't like my plans, find another Government."

THE PAUPER PRINCESS.

The death of Princess Louise of Belgium, no doubt reported by cable, took place in an hotel at Wiesbaden just a week after she had won her action against her creditors and, for the first time in her life, was likely to have money of her own. M. Jules Sauerwein, of the "Matin," who was one of her most chivalrous defenders, relates that she once said to him: "I have had a good many troubles in the course of my life. I have been slandered by my husband's family and my own, shut up in a madhouse for seven years and driven from town to town, and never once did I have any money I could call my own. I always had to borrow, sometimes at ruinous rates of interest." Had she lived another month or so, she would have been in possession of over a million francs, but it was just at this point that her robust constitution broke down and she succumbed to pneumonia. At the end of January she wrote to M. Sauerwein: "How I regret Paris! Although it must always be associated in my mind with a great grief (the death of her faithful companion, Count Mattachich) its atmosphere was indispensable to me, because in Paris there were some people who, I knew, sincerely sympathized with me. Here in Wiesbaden I suffer in solitude. I have neither fixed income nor pocket money; nothing but good advice. If the little girl behaves nicely she shall have 3,000 Belgian francs a month and promises for the future. How dreadful it is to be unable to get anything one wants and to be dependent on such people! I hope something will be done, but the future is dark. I seldom go out, I see nobody, and I work so as to forget my troubles."

HER LONELY DEATH.

After she was taken ill, Princess Louise was anxious to see her daughter, the Duchess of Holstein, but this consolation was denied her. The Duchess of Holstein did not arrive until after her mother's death. Two maids and a lawyer were with the unhappy princess at the last.

Lawyers have always figured prominently in her life. When her father, King Leopold II, died in 1909 she left Budapest for Brussels with an escort of six, consisting of four lawyers and two representatives of her creditors, who had formed themselves into a syndicate. They were all watching her closely, so as to get all they could out of her expected share of her father's great wealth. Unfortunately the will gave her no satisfaction, and produced nothing but lawsuits so far as she was concerned. Even her mother's fortune was sequestrated in the interest of creditors.

UNABLE TO PAY HOTEL BILLS.

The princess had to resume her wanderings from hotel to hotel and from town to town. Several times she was literally turned out because she could not pay her bills. It was the business of Count Mattachich, who got her out of the lunatic asylum, to borrow money for her at all costs It was such an arduous task that after his death the princess said of him: "He worked every day for 18 years to keep me alive." Her sisters and other relatives more than once showed a disposition to help her, but always on condition that she left Count Mattachich, the only man who had even been really devoted to her. When she left Paris two months ago she was told to go to Wiesbaden and was promised enough to live on. In the meantime the gold mark made its reappearance in Germany and her pension became insufficient. An appeal was made to Baron Goffinet, private secretary to the late King Leopold and trustee of the Empress Charlotte's estate. He finally made the journey to Wiesbaden, probably with money in his pocket, but it will have served chiefly for the funeral expenses. Princess Louise survived her faithful friend only five months. She was certainly anything but a calculating woman. She was extravagant, but she never knew the value of money and was not brought up to know it.

A BRAVE WOMAN.

Some of her relatives persecuted her, and others grudged her what they could very well have spared. They were very numerous: perhaps each one hoped that the other would do the generous thing, or perhaps they felt that Louise of Belgium's disregard of conventions was a disgrace to their order. It was not a clever calculation, because the spectacle of a princess begging the necessaries of life from her family does not help to sustain the prestige of royalty. When the principle of noblesse oblige is forgotten, people argue, what respect are we to feel for highly-placed personages who show themselves no more generous than the masses? It is a great tribute to Princess Louise to say that she was never soured. She still believed in humanity, and she has been known to shed tears over an anonymous letter expressing sympathy with her in her troubles.

BARBARITIES OF PENAL SYSTEM.

Several reported escapes of convicts from the penal settlements in French Guiana have drawn from an official of the Prisons Department the reassuring statement that these gentlemen are very unlikely to return to France and wreak vengeance on the witnesses. It is not at all unusual, he says, for a convict to get away, but he very seldom regains his liberty. If he escapes being shot by a warder, he finds himself defenceless in a forest containing a fair share of wild beasts. Should he get through the forest, he must find the greatest difficulty in keeping alive until he reaches civilization, as he has no clothing. Nine out of every ten escapes are made from a camp called Charvein, to which all the most insubordinate convicts are sent. In local slang they are called the "incos," a corruption of "incorrigible."

NAKED CONVICTS.

As Charvein is called a "repression camp" it can hardly be a pleasant place to live in, and the prison officials, knowing that desperate men will take almost any risk to regain their liberty, have tried the expedient of depriving them of clothes. Their costume consists simply and solely of a straw hat. In spite of this, some convicts have been known to make repeated attempts to escape, ending in their being driven back to the camp by hunger. It has been suggested that recaptured convicts should be guillotined "to encourage the others," but the official who supplied this curious information added that he did not think the death penalty would have any effect, so great being the thirst for freedom among the "incos." Perhaps some future French Government will realize that the system of transporting white prisoners to an unhealthy tropical climate is an anachronism that ought to be abolished.

Fresh Light on Daudet Tragedy: Action of Political Police

Mar. 13.

The inquiry into the death of Philippe Daudet, son of the Royalist deputy who is editor of the "Action Francaise," continues to raise fresh questions as to the doings of the Sûreté Générale, the body which combines the functions of Scotland Yard and the political police—a survival of the organization which Napoleon found so useful. In theory, detectives exist for the purpose of finding out facts and communicating them to the persons entrusted with the administration of justice.

In this case an examining magistrate was appointed as soon as M. Daudet asked for an inquiry into the death of his son, but it now appears that the Sûreté Générale knew a good deal more about the matter than it cared to disclose, and that it held back material information which should have been submitted to the magistrate without delay. M. Daudet is now doing his best to find out the motive of this action. As I have related in a previous letter, he believes that his son was found at Le Flaouter's bookshop in the Boulevard Beaumarchais by detectives, who did not know his identity and who had been told to look out for an armed anarchist, and that, thinking Philippe was about to draw a pistol, one of the detectives shot him. This, according to M. Daudet, was very unwelcome to the officers in charge, who knew who the youth was, and they concluded that the best way out of the difficulty was to stimulate a suicide. They accordingly put him into a taxicab, primed the driver with the necessary story and promised him protection.

AN OFFICIAL ADMISSON.

It is certainly curious that Le Flaouter, on reading a paragraph in a newspaper about an unknown youth who had shot himself in a taxicab, should take the trouble to go to the hospital and see the body. Although he recognized it as that of the youth who had been to his shop, he pretended ignorance, but lost no time in going to M. Lannes, an official of the Sûreté Générale, and telling him what he had seen. A week later M. Lannes said to him: "We have known since November 27 that Philippe Daudet, who shot himself in a taxicab, was the anarchist who came to your shop, but I was not allowed to tell you."

Another singular circumstance is that, on November 26, two high officials of the Sûreté Générale, MM. Delange and Blondel, went to the hospital to make inquiries about the supposed suicide—a task they would certainly have left to a subordinate had there been nothing more in the case than what met the eye. They afterwards told the examining magistrate that at this time they had no idea that there was any connexion between the unknown suicide and Philippe Daudet. The head of the hospital having declined to give them any information, on the ground that the Préfecture of Police already had the affair in hand, they accepted the situation and, with rare docility, went away.

MATERIAL INFORMATION WITHELD

Still another point that requires clearing up is why M. Delange paid another visit to the hospital more than a month later (December 31) to make sure that Philippe Daudet had not said anything after his admission to the ward. He questioned the nurse who tended the unfortunate youth, and he was able to take back the report that Philippe Daudet was in a state of coma from first to last and did not utter a word.

When called as a witness before M. Barnaud, the examining magistrae, M. Delange told the story of his first visit to the hospital, but said nothing about the second. He even closed his deposition by stating that he took no active part in the case after November 27. So remarkably discreet was the Sûreté Générale that the mystery would have remained impenetrable had it not been for the operations of another force, the police judiciaire, which was set to work by the magistrate. Quite by chance, a detective called on Le Flaouter, who was known as a "militant" and asked him if he knew anything about Philippe Daudet. In this way one set of the police stumbled on information which another was carefully hiding. Why?

HIGH POST FOR LANDRU'S JUDGE.

It is customary in the Chamber of Deputies, when subjects of a technical nature are under discussion, to give the Minister in charge of the Bill outside assistance. He can appoint a "Government Commissioner," almost invariably a high official, who takes a seat on the front bench next to the Minister, gives such information as may be required, and answers questions, without, of course, taking any personal part in the debate or endeavouring to influence votes by argument. During the consideration, two days ago, of a proposal to alter two clauses of the Penal Code, a new Commissioner appeared in the Chamber and set forth the pros and cons of the matter with an ease and fluency that showed the practised speaker. His bearded face seemed familiar to many of the members. They had vague recollections of caricature and photographs in the newspapers, but could not "place" the Commissioner. They made inquiries and found that he was M. Gilbert, who was the presiding judge at the trial of Landru and who performed the social duty of passing the death sentence on that sinister criminal. He also officiated at the trial of Mme. Bessarabo, the literary lady who killed her husband, packed his body in a trunk and sent it off to Nancy, for which feat she is now serving a long sentence. In France the judicial function does not possess anything like the independence accorded to it in England. A judge is simply an official under the Ministry of Justice, which has several higher positions in its gift. One of these was conferred on M. Gilbert, and he is now Director of Criminal Affairs at the Ministry. It was in this capacity that he appeared in the Chamber of Deputies and, instead of putting questions, had to confine himself to answering them.

THE WORD OF LIFE

A Sermon Preached by the Rev. A. N. Rowland, M. A., in Union Church, Shanghai, on Easter Sunday, April 20, 1924

"The Word of Life"—1 John 1:1.

This is John's definition of the Gospel—the Word, Message or Revelation of Life. In other parts of the New Testament it is called the Word or Revelation of the Kingdom, of the Truth, of the Cross, of God's grace, of our salvation. But at Easter we specially think of it as the message of Life. That puts it in tune with the spring and the glory of it. Spring is the gospel of renewal for every cell and seed. Easter is the gospel of renewal for the soul.

When we think of the gospel as the word of truth we know it is in need of constant revision as the human mind moves on. When we think of it as the message of the Kingdom it is evidently in need of continual extension if it is to keep pace with social advance. But these cares and toils are wonderfully lightened when we remember that the gospel is also the word of life, that it tells of a power that can carry us on and finally brings us home when we are done with the study of truth and the service of the Kingdom.

THE RESURRECTION STORIES.

Let us consider the root of that Easter confidence and joy under the shadow of which the Church has sat down nearly 2,000 years. We think first of the immortal stories which close the Gospels of Luke and John, that tell us how the original disciples were convinced, how their doubting minds were satisfied, their aching hearts comforted. We rejoice with them as they become conscious of the Real Presence in the rapture of early morning by the lake, or at evening on the Emmaus road when "the holy time was quiet as a nun breathless with adoration," or again in the happy hour of lively fellowship with one another. With its power of surprise it counteracted and healed the shock of the crucifixion. It transformed their careers, and made a group of peasants the pivot of a new world.

THE STRANGER IN THE VILLAGE.

But I am convinced it would be a mistake to look to these proofs of the resurrection as our final evidence for the truth of personal life in the Beyond. We are not driven to pierce together the reports of those experiences until they present a flawless case. The manifestations of the Lord after his death fitted in with what the disciples had known of him before. It is enough for us that they were satisfied, that in spite of the scepticism of cold hearts their conviction triumphed. But we have reasons for our belief that could not weigh with them. Our evidence is bound up with the very being of Jesus. The heavenly home was the secret of all his prayers and labours, the strength of his endurance in all circumstances, his satisfaction when everything else was taken away. As one of his followers put it, it was "for the joy set before him" that he endured the cross.

We are like the inhabitants of some remote village, some of whom have never crossed the district boundary or seen the other side of the hill; but they have read newspapers that belong to the metropolis and they wear and use things with the stamp of the city upon them. One day a visitor arrives, like themselves but with something about his speech and manner that fits in with what they have read in the papers. And there is no need for them to ask the question for they know whence he comes. So it is with Jesus Christ. It is Himself who brings home the proof of personal reality in the unseen, who persuades us that life's source and fulfilment are not here but there.

SPRING SPEAKS TRUE.

The question of our hearts is whether there is a song of the redeemed to match the music of Spring. Has the magic of the renewed earth a meaning for us or is it a mockery of our intuitions? Can it be that the physical creation is better off than this personality of ours? Or does the restoration of nature bear witness to a human resurrection?

In giving us his answer to these questions our Lord did not let us remain in any doubt. (1) Consider how his teaching was based upon the hypothesis that life's meaning is to be found in the fuller light of God. He recommended his disciples to live strenuously and generously so as to furnish mansions in the Father's House. He begged them to be faithful in the smallest things and so to enter into the joy of a Lord who was not yet in evidence. He persuaded them to be meek and self-forgetful because it was the road to a royal influence. He encouraged the free expenditure of love because it counted for so much beyond the terms of this life. He himself took infinite pains with the humblest person, happy to think of the rejoicing it caused among the angels of God.

THE FAITH OF CHRIST.

(2) Beyond all that he taught it is clear that Christ staked his very life on the truth that our hopes are not invalid, our intuitions not mistaken. His whole mission turned on the fact of personal life beyond. In Paul's famous argument for the resurrection he declared "If Christ be not risen then our faith is in vain." Might he not have gone farther and said "If Christ be not risen then his own faith was in vain?" In the unspeakable event the cross would have been the final refutation of any hope in God. There is a touching sentence in Luke that "Jesus began to be about 30 years old." He began his ministry when he had grown to the height of his powers and reached the prime of his pure life. And he deliberately let it all go, not in a mood of despair, not because his life was taken from him, but because the Eternal Spirit called to the spirit within his breast, and he answered "Lo I come, to do Thy Will O God."

JOHN MORLEY ON EASTER.

What would be left of the faith of Jesus Christ if there were no centre and home of personal reality beyond our ken? That Death is only "the shadow that is cast by turning" from a lower to a higher phase of existence is a truth that was interwoven with every word of his teaching and every act of his life. It is a grand mistake, or foolish error, as Paul has told us, to let our faith in the resurrection turn upon questions as to the form and substance of the body. In the name of the entire ministry of Christ we are to broaden the basis of our belief. Lord Morley in his "Recollections" tells of his hero and teacher John Stuart Mill, how towards the end of his life he broke away from his agnostic set and wrote a book on Theism. There he gave a philosophic estimate of God and an aesthetic appreciation of Christ, but he left out Easter. And Morley has to admit that "this scheme of possible contingencies, low degrees of probability, permissive hope and dubious potentialities could never bring comfort worth the name to aching hearts at 'eternal parting of the ways,' and although Mill's estimate of Jesus Christ was glowing and sincere, a book without the sunshine of Easter reduced the full shining noon of Christian faith to a dim twilight of bare possibilities and blanched peradventures." In fact it would be a gospel from which the strength had leaked out.

NO EASTER NO CHRIST.

Let no one imagine then that the doctrine of the resurrection, that is of personal life beyond, is a kind of postcript to the life of Christ and can be cut off as if it meant no more than striking sail; it would be more like springing a leak. Or let me give you this homely illustration. You have seen potatoes growing in luxuriance between the long furrows, and you might think it a small matter to cut off the green tops for you do not eat them. Yes, but they are the means of life and growth to the tubers beneath, and if you cut off the tops you destroy the hidden parts. Just so if you cut off the resurrection of Christ you destroy the power of his ministry. All his ethical teaching, all his spiritual standards go with it, for he always read life sub specie eternitatis and reckoned every value from the standpoint of immortality.

My message this Easter is that we cannot remain in the twilight; we are faced with these alternatives. If Christ is not risen there is no Christ, and we may as well close our churches and our Bibles. We must either choose that darkness or accept the astounding fact that true life, like light, is not centred here but there, and let that fact of sunshine have its full effect upon our outlook, our behaviour and the whole temper of our life. That is to be a Christian, for Jesus Christ is the heart of the Word that reveals and interprets Life.

TRANSIT OF MERCURY ACROSS THE SUN'S DISC.

Mercury, being an inner planet revolving within the orbit of the earth, passes periodically between the earth and the sun. This occurrence is called inferior conjunction, and happens on the average every 116 days. The planet, however, usually passes a little north or south of the sun, but on May 8, of the present year, it moves right across the disc, and will be visible upon it as a small dark spot, but not large enough to be seen without a telescope.

The diameter of Mercury is about 3000 miles, while that of the sun is 865,400 miles, or 288 times larger. The first contact takes place at 5.47 a.m., a short time after sunrise; least distance of centres 9.41 a.m.; last contact 1.35 p.m., standard time of the China coast. Mercury moves on its orbit from East to West, advancing at the rapid rate of 30 miles a second, while the sun moves Eastwards in an opposite direction.

Weather being favourable, the whole phenomenon may be well observed in China.

VENUS AT GREATEST BRILLIANCY.

Venus, which is very high up in the Western skies, and approaching our earth since its greatest Eastern elongation, will be very brilliant during this month, attaining its maximum on the 25th. At this period, the planet offers a beautiful spectacle after sunset, and is visible for over 3 hours in the early part of the month, but hastens its setting towards the end.

Venus is in Gemini, in the neighbourhood of the Twins and Procyon.

JUPITER OPPOSITE VENUS IN THE EVENING SKY.

In this month, Jupiter rises in the East before Venus sets in the West, both being diametrically situated at opposite points of the horizon. In the early part of the month, Jupiter rises about 9 p.m., while Venus sets a short time after 10 p.m. The planet increases in brilliancy, and will be at its nearest point to the earth on June 7.

THE SONG OF THE CAMEL BELLS

Sitting by the fire as the dark comes creeping
Through the heavy burdened boughs drooping 'neath the snow,
Through the cold white silence of earth's tranced sleeping,
Strangely loud I hear them, deep and sweet and slow—
Camel bells a-swinging
With a cadenced ringing,
As the pacing caravans through the desert go.

Oh! that sun-steep'd evening, when we heard them coming
Through the rose-red tamarisks to the river strand!
How their mellow music sent old memories homing
To the chiming belfries of a northern land!
Camel bells a-swinging,
Peals of silver ringing,
As the pacing caravan half the sky-line spanned.

What was it he told us—that swart youth who led them.
As we touched a rocking bell and sent its note astray?
Bone—not bronze—the clapper whose soft swaying speed them,
Bones of camels long since dead on that desert way—
Camel bells a-swinging,
Plaintive dirges ringing,
For the pacing caravans of a long-past day.

A SHANGHAI WORLD EXHIBITION

A Sure Commercial Success and a Means to Secure a Fine Permanent Museum

By Arthur de C. Sowerby.

Mr. G. A. Bena's scheme for having a world exhibition in Shanghai, which was reported in the "North-China Daily News" on April 22, seems to be making a very wide appeal to the residents of this port. The benefits to be derived from such an exhibition, not only to Shanghai as a business centre, but to China in general, have been sufficiently dealt with to show that there would be every prospect of success if the project came to a head. Commercially the undertaking could only result in enormous profits to the community at large, as such exhibitions always show a considerable profit if they are properly handled, and the only question here is if we have enough of the right kind of public-spirited people to handle such an undertaking. Knowing what one does of the Shanghai community, both native and foreign, one is inclined to the view that there are plenty of people thoroughly capable of handling such a project and making of it a thorough success.

The article in the "North-China Daily News" lays stress on the business advantages to be derived, though mention is also made of possibilities and benefits to be derived in other lines of human activity. There would, of course, be a large section devoted to the many branches of science that are being carried on in this country, and from this point of view alone such an exhibition would be well worth while. China's mineral wealth is proverbial, and her fauna and flora are admittedly amongst the richest in the world. An ethnographical exhibition showing all the various costumes, household utensils, modes of living, etc., of the different tribes and races in China and neighbouring regions would be a very strong drawing card, for there is no manner of doubt that not only are foreigners interested in the people of China, but the Chinese themselves are also keenly interested in their fellow nationals.

A PERMANENT MUSEUM.

But in such an exhibition as Mr. Bena suggests science would only be a section. Art would come into its own and who can resist the idea of a pavilion devoted to the art products of China, both ancient and modern? We are used to small exhibitions, but never in the history of the port has a really representative exhibition of Chinese art been held. Here would be the opportunity. The writer has frequently urged both publicly and privately, as well as in the newspapers, that Shanghai should have an institution devoted to art, science and literature and there is no need to go over the arguments in favour of this again. A little while ago, working in conjunction with Dr. Chatley, I outlined a scheme whereby, by a small addition to the rates, a fully equipped institution of the value of about $500,000 could be erected in Shanghai in some suitable spot and paid for in about 30 years, leaving the community of Shanghai the richer for having a temple devoted to the intellectual side of life. Now comes Mr. Bena's suggestion that after the exhibition some large central building which has been used during the exhibition for meetings, congresses, etc., should be used at its close for a permanent museum such as has been repeatedly outlined in Shanghai papers. By this means Shanghai would become the possessor of a very sorely needed institution and I feel sure that those who represent the intellectual side of the community will give their fullest support to Mr. Bena's suggestions.

RABINDRANATH Tagore, the famous Indian poet, visited the ex-Emperor Hsuan Tung, in the Forbidden City on Monday afternoon. The former Emperor, who speaks excellent English, had a long conversation with the philosopher in the Imperial Garden.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE BOWLING CLUB NOW LEAVING ITS ANCIENT HOME

I.—Founded Nearly 70 Years Ago and Same Old Buildings Still in Nanking Road But Now Sold

So the Shanghai Bowling Club's alley in Nanking Road has been sold to the proprietors of the Fives Courts, and with it disappears the last visible remnant of the romance of Old Shanghai, So far at least as foreigners are concerned. The old decrepit walls, the ancient door and uneven steps, all are to go. That startling contrast it presented, to stand now for so short a time, of old and modern will be lost, never more to arouse the bewilderment of the uninitiated and the griffin.

The history of the Bowling Alley is a long one and varied, and it has taken us, with the aid of Dr. Goodie, the present honorary secretary, some time to compile but the results have been well worth the trouble. The names of old residents long forgotten leap out at us from the pages of the old minute books and documents recalling memories of men once famous in the Far East, and now forgotten,—almost unknown, excepting to the few.

The idea of the Club was first conceived in the early 'fifties and on February 8, 1855, we find recorded in an ancient minute book the report of the first meeting. The account is not a very comprehensive one, but is worth giving in its entirety. It reads:

At a meeting held at the Jinkee Hong a few days since the undersigned were requested to act as a committee to make arrangements for the construction of a building suitable as a bowling alley. We now beg to submit the following report.

The contract has been made [illegible] sions on the land belonging to the Fives Court, the building to be 124 feet long outside, the walls to be built of brick 1 foot thick with 4 brick pilasters on each side, 2 windows in and a door———ft. by——ft. the entire building inside to be plastered: the alleys to be 90 ft. long and 80 ft. of Singapore wood and 10 feet of China wood, to be bolted through and through by 50 iron rods in each alley: [illegible] corner with a fire place, the whole to cost complete $1,550.

Sgd. JAMES CRAMPTON.
D. O. KING.
F. FOSTER.

The wording is somewhat peculiar and hardly does the grammar of our forefathers much credit. However, the contractor seems to have understood it, for the building was erected. It is interesting to note that no mention is made as to where the alley was to be placed, and right throughout that particular minute book, lasting as the Club as it does from 1855 to 1880, no mention is made regarding the Club's situation. In fact the books were kept in a very happy go-lucky style throughout till more recent days. For instance a somewhat startling error, which was not noticed by any secretary in office at the time, occurs between the years 1858 and 1870. In the minute book there is a gap, no entries being made during those years, until, on June 17, 1870, the then Secretary, Mr. John H. Purden, makes the following statement:—

"The proceedings of subsequent meetings to this are entered in the visitors' book. This is an error, so this book, the proper one, is resumed. June 17, 1870, J. H. Purden, Hon. Sec."

How such a remarkable mistake could have been committed it is difficult to understand, and unhappily the visitors' book in which the entries were made cannot be found.

But to revert The report of the first meeting concludes with the following paragraph:—

The undersigned hereby agree to pay their proportional part of the expenses of erecting a bowling alley in accordance with the plans submitted by the building committee, the number of members being limited to 20.

EXTERIOR OF THE BUILDING.

This, then, was the actual founding of the Club. Whether any rules were then made, or conditions laid down it is impossible to relate, for at no time till recent years were any rules ever entered in the minute book. What the original rules were we should dearly like to know.

CAUTIOUS FINANCE.

In the early days of the Club the members seem to have chosen some cautious secretaries and treasurers, for while the reserve fund always stood at a huge figure the balances in hand were frequently showing a deficit, a fact which later aroused the indignation of one old-timer who complained of the harshness of the word deficiency when applied to their balance in hand, and all the time there was a huge sum standing in the reserve fund. But this happy state of affairs did not last for ever, and the time came at a later stage in the history of the club when the finances got into an extraordinary tangle. Subscriptions were collected in advance to pay old debts, money was borrowed to meet expenses which should have been met by the former year's subscriptions, already collected, and more money was borrowed again to pay off the first debtor.

During the period when the error occurred whereby the minutes were entered up in the visitors' book, however, the Club seems to have been fairly flourishing, for at the annual meeting in 1870 the Chairman, a Mr. Bell, comments on the fact that there are more applications for shares than there are shares to be had. Considering that the cost of one share was Tls. 130 it would certainly seem that the Club was in a flourishing state.

THE FATE OF PROHIBITION.

Judging by the records whiskey was practically unknown in the club Brandy and sherry appear to have been the favourite drinks and enormous quantities of both were consumed. One rule, rashly made, ordered that the bar should be closed during the hot summer months between June 1 and September 1, but by general consent members remained blind to the regulation, the officials forgot it and probably the boys never knew it. Certainly no one ever enlightened them and a delicate subject was left well alone till 1870, when Mr. John H. Purden, who seems to have been one of the most energetic secretaries the Club has ever had, took the bull by the horns and suggested at the annual meeting that the rule be either rescinded or put into operation. Needless to relate it was rescinded. His suggestion that members should bring their own liquor met with strong disapproval.

Perhaps the suggestion was not so seriously meant, however, for Mr. Purden was very much of a humorist in his way. He it was who brought in one man to the Club and got him elected strongly against his will. The victim was a Mr. Singer and he protested strongly. He wrote the words "not a member" against his name posted in the Club and retired in great indignation. It was useless, however, for one morning he received a letter on his breakfast table from Mr. Purden asking for his share money. Some very acrimonious correspondence ensued, Mr. Purden's attitude being one of pained indignation at Mr. Singer's ingratitude. Mr. Singer appears to have been not pained but furiously indignant and said so. However, matters righted themselves somehow, though the record gives no indication of the methods or whether Mr. Singer did finally agree to join.

A TACIFUL REMINDER.

John Purden also seems to have been gifted with tact, for what could be more beautiful than this letter, circularized to members for the benefit of the defaulting ones:

"September 30, 1868.

Sir,—The club is somewhat indebted to the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, the estimable manager of which, however, scorns to take advantage of this and pays his subscription like a man, setting an example that all should be emulous to follow. Other amounts are owing to an absent shareholder, one of the champions, for his share in the victory over the Junior Club and to the late Secretary. But the greatest deficit is from the honourable members absent and present not paying. Behold the accompanying list and see if it is one worthy of the senior bowling club. The undersigned therefore confidently appeals to those persons, who have in the excitement of tea and telegrams overlooked the little matter to devote a compradore's order to it and to the representatives of the absent but not forgotten ones, and to take responsibility of paying the amount due."

The exhortation concludes,

"Pray pay and play with a pleased conscience.

Sgd. JOHN PURDEN."

A demand couched in these terms must have come as refreshing after the usual curt and ominous demands from creditors to which most people are used.

II.—Involved Financial System and its Disastrous Results

As stated previously, the Club's finances at one period got into rather a muddle, and judging by the system (?) on which they worked this is not altogether surprising. Either the old hands were extraordinarily optimistic or steeped in the Eastern spirit of maskie. We have one amazing instance of this in 1868. The Bowling Alley received a challenge from the Union Bowling Club. The records go to show there was a considerable amount of bickering and voluminous correspondence on the subject of terms, and though the minute book is somewhat vague, we may reasonably take it they eventually decided to play for Tls. 500. The game was played, and although the Bowling Alley had been very pressing on the subject of the stakes, they were the recipients of a hearty licking. The consequence was they could not pay up and got much behind with the accounts. Matters were put right eventually by a private subscription, but the evil had set in and they soon got into a most bewildering tangle.

ARE WE DOWNHEARTED?

In August of 1872 the treasurer informs the Club that the rent has not been paid for four years, and they are Tls. 200 in arrears. Further more they had not the money to meet it. But does this worry the members of the Bowling Alley? Not a bit of it. The solution is simple, just collect 12 months' subscriptions in advance. This they did and at this same meeting, in spite of these new debts we read the Club accepted the offer of Mr. Farnham to relay the alleys and repair the building at a cost of Tls. 1,500.

The following year the old members are surprised to find themselves in debt, and another Tls. 1,000 is borrowed from Mr. Bell at eight per cent. per annum. At the same time the monthly subscriptions are increased to Tls. 5 to pay off the capital and interest from time to time.—On January 6, 1874 Mr. Bell goes home and it is decided to pay him Tls. 500 and interest, at the same time borrowing Tls. 250 from a Mr. Paterson.

By 1878 matters become so muddled that a meeting is called with the object of proposing the re-organization of the Club to improve the "tone" and put it on a different basis. "Putting the club on a different basis" really meant borrowing Tls. 1,500 from the Trustees of the Recreation Fund. Furthermore a repayment of Tls. 100 of his share to each member was made out of the Reserve Fund in order to make shares cheaper and so attract more members and the membership was increased from 20 to 30.

By 1879 they appear to have got straight again, for Tls. 750 is repaid to the Recreation Fund, and a few years later the membership is officially reduced to 25, at which figure it stands to-day.

THE SABBATARIANS.

A problem which produced a rift in the lute for many years was the question of Sunday bowling. We are apt in these modern days to think of the real old timers as very bad lads, hard drinking and hard hitting, working like mad when the mails come in, and painting an already very pink town red the rest of the time. It comes as something of a shock, therefore, to read of the stern opposition this revolutionary measure met with. The alleys were always closed on Sundays in the old days, and the idea of using them on the Sabbath was first mooted by Mr. Wheelock in 1868. The Sabbatarians won a grim struggle by nine votes to eight, and the matter was allowed to drop till '76, and this time the Sunday bowlers were overwhelmed, the motion for Sunday play being defeated by 10 votes to two. Two years later Mr. Burroughs brought the matter up and a very fierce argument seems to have occurred. Mr. Burroughs' point of view was that most other clubs in the Settlement played their games on Sundays and there was no reason why they should not do the same. They had no neighbours to annoy and Sunday games would be a convenience to himself and others. As regards those people who objected on sabbatarian grounds only, it was up to them not to vote. A heated discussion ensued in which the opposition claimed that the alleys needed one day's rest in seven for oiling and cleaning and to keep them in condition. A Mr. Davies commented bitterly on what he termed the selfishness of new members. He seemed to be of the opinion that new members should be seen and not heard, for he said outright that the wishes of the old members should be accepted. Again the motion was lost, but its adherents kept on plugging away till a special meeting in 1890, when victory was their's and a rule was obtained whereby the alleys may be used on a Sunday providing notice be given to the boy before 11 a.m. That rule holds good to this day.

OUTSIDE MATCHES.

The Club's chief bowling opponents in past days appear to have been, primarily the German Club Concordia, the Union Club and Junior Bowling Club, all three of which are now extinct. Kobe frequently sent over interport teams and occasionally Hankow and Amoy, but the Shanghailanders usually won. The Club Concordia matches appear to have been annual affairs, and, sad to relate, more often than not resulted in the defeat of the Bowling Club. However, it should be remembered the alley had but 24 men to draw from and the Concordia some dozens. The Bowling Alley's method of getting a team is rather a unique one, for instead of selecting men, a ballot is taken.

Probably the most distinguished team to roll the bowls in the alley was a naval team headed by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh and containing as well the names of Admiral Lord Charles Beresford and the then Captain Stanhope, both of whom have achieved fame. The other members of the team were Lord C. Scott, Lieutenants Rougemont, Fitzgeorge, Hallifax and Borien. They were well beaten by the Alley, however; this was in the '70's.

In the early history of the club they also ran a cricket team, which, though it never became famous, always acquitted itself creditably. There are, hanging round the walls of the Alley, a number of photographs of club teams, and it is really remarkable how well known to-day are most of the names.

THE CANDID FRIEND.

Printed and framed directly underneath the photographs is a commentary, frank and without flattery, on the merits of the players. Some of these are well worth giving; they read:—

R. Carr.—A hard hitting bat with little defence owing to his hitting too much from the shoulder. A fair change bowler and a good field. Might with advantage buy a new cap and should not look so surly when spoken to by the captain.

He seems to have taken this advice for we read under his 'photo the following year:—

"Wears his new cap consistently owing to generosity of the Club. What price authority?"

T. S. Nazer.—With practice might bat a little. Is a slow field and has been known to bowl; did bowl in one match.

R. Macgregor.—An excellent captain. Had better fortune this year with the bat. Hits well to the "on" in a somewhat crumpy style. Has kept wicket throughout at which position he is an adept at placing the field. For further particulars see match "All New York v. English Amateurs,—Sept. 1868.—Chews gum.

H. A. J. Macray.—. . . has skill as an all-round good cricketer we are told. The peak of his cap usually faces the ladies tent.

XI.—When the Premises Nearly Collapsed: A Wife's One Exception: The Duke's Excuse

The dilapidated appearance of the Bowling Alley is familiar to almost Shanghailanders and mild surprise is occasionally expressed that the premises have never fallen down. It might be of interest to readers to know, therefore, that on one occasion they very nearly did. This was one Saturday night in 1919 when the Secretary of the Club received an urgent message from the boy to the effect that he thought the building would collapse if something were not done pretty quickly. Investigation showed that in connexion with some work going on in the premises on the west of the Bowling Alley a channel had been sunk in the earth, undermining the walls of the Bowling Alley. Heavy rains fell during the night and the Alley walls had sunk two feet into the earth. Hard work on the following Sunday averted the danger, however, the walls being shored up with the aid of P.W.D. coolies. Further inquiries went to show that when the Club was originally built no foundations had been laid at all, the walls being just built on top of the earth.

PECULIARITIES OF A CUP.

In modern days the Club plays nothing like so many matches as in the past, but the habit of match playing has not altogether fallen into disrepute, for games are frequently played with naval teams, and annual meetings take place between the Bowling Alley and the P. & O. Company, and, until fairly recently, the Alley and the China Mutual.

One of the proudest possessions of the Club to this day is the Leverett Cup, presented by a member of the Club in 1911. One of its peculiarities is that it is almost impossible to win right out, for as soon as a member shows promise of doing so, the handicappers get to work and see that the task is put beyond him. To be won out right the trophy must be won four times in succession, and though it has been won three times consecutively on a number of occasions it has never been won a fourth. It stands on a wooden pedestal, round which are three shields inscribed with the names of winners, and containing over 70 signatures.

THE DUKE'S EXCUSE.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh during his stay in Shanghai spent a considerable amount of his spare time in the Alley, and was very popular with its members. Indeed, it is whispered, that on many occasions, at the conclusion of dinner he would jump up in a martyred kind of way, frown heavily, mumble something regarding an important despatch and then make the best of his way to the Alley. The Duke was the contributor of a number of cakes to the Alley, which are said to have been made by Mrs. Clarke of the Kalee Hotel. Cakes have always been more or less linked up with the history of the Bowling Club and it has been the custom for many years past for old members to present the Alley with a big Buzzard's cake at Christmas.

Hung on the walls of the Alley, and containing well over a hundred names, is a roll of those members who have made the highest score it is possible to make, 300. The roll dates from 1864, and the last name on the board is that of Mr. Cannan, who made his 300 in 1917, since which time the score has not been registered. The outstanding name on the roll is that of Dr. Little which appears no less than 18 times. Among the more recent names comes that of Captain E. I. M. Barrett, who seems to have excelled at this as at all other sports, his name appearing some five times

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS.

A casual glance through the old visitors' book brings to light very many well known names, names not only famous in the East but famous throughout the world. We find the signatures of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, Lord Charles Beresford, Sir Wootton Brown, the well known aviator; Sir Ronald Macleay (British Minister to China), Sir Reginald Edward Stubbs (H. E. the Governor of Hongkong), Sir James Jamieson and a host of others almost equally familiar.

An unusual source of income to the Alley is the Roll-off Fund,—whereby members are penalised and fined on every occasion they fail to knock over any of the pins three times in succession, and on one occasion not so very many years ago one gentleman rolled-off so many times and paid so much in fines that the members unanimously agreed to present him with a Roll-Off Cup, suitably inscribed and purchased out of the Roll-Off funds, all of which was carried out as per plan.

THE ONE EXCEPTION.

An amusing story is told of another member of the Alley whose wife allowed him to go to no other Club in or out of the Settlement. The poor lady heard such terrible tales of the drunken carousals that were supposed to go on in every other club in the town, that her unfortunate husband found it impossible to persuade her to give him permission to enter them. A distinction was made in favour of the Bowling Alley because there, as he virtuously explained, "it is impossible to sign a chit." Whether or not the lady had ever seen a copy of the regulations showing her that her spouse was entitled to drink as much as his principles allowed, is a doubtful point.

In concluding these brief recollections of the Alley and its members, we take the opportunity to wish the Shanghai Bowling Club every success in its future home, wherever that may be, and a future existence longer and as interesting as the one we have traced from day to day in these columns.

LESSONS IN GOLF

IX.—Slicing and Pulling

By Harry Vardon—Six Times open Champion.

The intentional slice and the intentional pull are among the most scientific shots in golf—only, indeed, to be attempted by the person who is tolerably certain of hitting the ball in exactly the manner he proposes.

Of much more concern to the average player are accidental slices and pulls, with all the punishment that they heap upon their perpetrator in hazards and long grass. Nearly everybody—even to the golfer of championship rank—suffers at more or less frequent intervals from an attack of slicing or pulling, and it is necessary to know some of the causes before seeking the cure.

If, of these two evils, there is a worse, the distinction can surely be accorded to slicing, for, in addition to making the ball swerve off the line, it involves a loss of distance by reason of the "cut" spin.

STANCE FOR THE SLICE.

The first point to consider is the stances. When a good golfer wants deliberately to slice a shot, he stands so that the body is more behind the ball than when he is attempting a straight shot. In fact, he has the ball opposite the left big toe, with the right foot in a forward position, the result thus being to turn the body farther towards the left than for an ordinary stroke. The reason for this is that, with the body thus turned appreciably towards the left during the address, the tendency of the club-head during the down-swing will be to cut across the intended line of flight from right to left.

It is because the club-face is coming across the ball from right to left at the impact that the slice is imparted. Consequently, when you are slicing without meaning to do so, it is as well to note how you are standing.

You may be too far behind the ball, with that object more or less opposite the left foot, and the right foot so far forward as to pose the body for a slice. To all intents and purposes, the only result possible in these circumstances is a slice. The first thing to do is to bring the right foot back several inches—sometimes it is necessary for a bad slicer to bring that foot back six or seven inches. This will have the effect of compelling the left foot to be put forward a little so that the player's body is turned less towards the hole, and the ball, instead of being opposite the left foot, is well inside its limits.

A VITAL INSTANT.

No doubt it is realized that swaying the body towards the right during the up-swing will cause slicing. In point of fact, this much-discussed fault will cause anything, so we must assume, for the purpose of dealing with a special complaint, that the player is not a swayer, but is slicing in spite of the fact that he is screwing the body round correctly at the hips and not leaning towards the right in the process of taking the club back.

Then the chances are that he is beginning the down-swing wrongly. This, indeed, is by far the most prolific cause of slicing, and all the mischief is done in a fraction of a second.

What happens is that the player starts to unscrew the body at the hips before he moves the club head from its position at the top of the swing. The result is that the club-head is late by an incalculably brief but vital period of time.

It is trying to catch up with the movement of unscrewing the hips, and to do this, it takes a short-cut down. Instead of descending by the same track as it followed when ascending, it is thrown forward a trifle at the beginning of the down-swing. The premature turn of the hips throws its forward. There is no other way in which it can catch up with the movement. And being thus thrown forward, it cuts across the back of the ball at the impact, and so produces the slice.

I know what happens in my own case at the top of the swing. When the club is there and ready to come down, my hands—and, therefore, the arms—drop two or three inches. This occurs before any other part of the body moves from the posture at the top of the swing.

The result of this slight dropping of the hands is to recover the club from the back of the player's head without allowing the implement to be thrown forward. It starts the club-head from its topmost position without turn and the club-head begins to any attempt at hitting. Once it is completed, the hips begin to work up speed for the impact.

HOW TO HOOK.

To secure a deliberate pull, the player needs to stand in front of the ball, which should be about opposite his right foot. The body should be turned in some small degree away from the hole—that is, with the left foot a little in front of the right.

The rest consists largely of turning the right hand over slightly at the impact, and this is promoted by holding the club comparatively slackly with the left hand and firmly with the right.

As a result of the stance and the slight turn over of the right wrist at the instant of striking, the method of hitting at the ball is rather like that of a person mowing grass with a scythe. The club-face turns over in a small degree on to the ball, and "draw" is imparted to the shot.

The stance here indicated was once the accepted and recommended manner of standing for all wooden-club shots, presumably because the ancients believed in the pull. Faith in it has declined a good deal, save as a special shot for special circumstances, and nowadays one seldom sees a player standing with left foot in front of the right.

Accidental pulling comes mostly of faulty wrist-action. It may be caused by a failure to turn the left wrist towards the body at the start of the up-swing. If that left wrist is arched outwards instead of inwards at the top of the swing, it may drag the right hand over coming down—and, as we have already seen, the turn-over of the right hand at the impact promotes a pull.

Similarly, an unduly tight grip with the right hand will tend to hook the ball round to the player's left. That is why people who hold the club deeply in the palm of the right hand, instead of mostly in the fingers, are often hookers.

X.—Some Special Shots

It is one of the charms of golf—charming because of the variety that it introduces—that the player has to enter into competition with Nature as well as with his mortal rival.

Wind and the configuration of the ground both demand his earnest consideration. For this reason it seldom happens that any two shots in the round are alike, although they may be of the length and present similar aspects to the casual observer.

To the average golfer, no influence is more harassing than a stiff wind. Frequently, however, the efforts to cope with it are carried to excess. A real gale unquestionably is very troublesome; it calls for all the skill in ball control than even a champion can summon to his aid.

WHERE A MISTAKE IS MADE.

In what we may term an ordinarily stiff breeze, blowing across the course, I am certain that a great many players make a mistake in trying to impart slices or pulls to their shots with the object of getting the spin to work in co-operation with the wind and so add to the length of the shots.

We saw plenty of this in the days of the gutta-percha ball—a light article, the flight of which might be affected by any wind stronger than a mere zephyr. With the wind blowing from right to left, the player would hit his ball out a trifle to the right and try to impart pull spin to it, so that as its velocity was dying it would swerve round towards the left with wind to assist in lengthening its carry.

With the wind blowing from left to right, the player would drive slightly into it and endeavour to introduce slice spin, so that when the slice took effect, the wind—coming from the direction in which the ball was now spinning—would enter into the scheme of adding 10 yards to the shot.

These were very skilful strokes, although I often wondered whether they were worth the risks that they entailed and personally did not practise them except in such turbulence as offered no alternative.

THE STRAIGHT PATH.

In a stiff breeze from the right, for instance, I did not try to work the pull so as to come in from right to left with the wind. I preferred to hit the shot straight down the middle with cut on it so that it would not be carried to the left towards the end of its flight, but would fight its way into the wind through the influence of the cut spin, and so finish on the middle of the course.

I found fighting the wind more profitable than trying to work with it—for winds are fickle institutions. One may have sacrificed a few yards in this way, but one could depend fairly well on keeping straight. Still, the old fascination of trying to make the wind help has not disappeared; many players are to be seen succumbing to it and often paying heavily for their experiments.

In an ordinarily stiff wind, the present-day ball flies so strongly to play a straight-forward shot, that the safest plan is, I think, without deliberate slice or pull. One may allow for the probable influence of the wind on the ball's flight, but to attempt to introduce spin in one direction or the other is only to add to the difficulties of the game.

DOWN OR AGAINST WIND.

Drives down wind or against the wind afford more favourable opportunities for variation of method, since the player does not depart from the fundamental principle of trying to hit the ball in a straight line.

Against the wind, it will profit him to keep the shot low, since it will suffer less resistance at a low altitude than at a high one, where the wind is in full blast.

To do this we need a slightly lower tee than usual, with the ball mid-way between the feet instead of rather nearer to the left foot than the right. We want to come down on the back of the ball the instant before the club-head has reached the bottom of the arc of the swing. In that way, we do not hit it up.

Conversely, for a drive down wind, we need to hit the ball up so as to obtain the assistance of the following wind. Therefore, we tee a little higher than in the ordinary way and stand more behind the ball than for a normal drive. By these means, we strike the ball just as the club-head is beginning to rise from the bottom of the arc of the swing.

These are shots without quite the same complication and danger as intentional slices and pulls.

UPHILL AND DOWNHILL LIES.

Another phase of the golfer's competition with Nature is represented by the variety of stances which he may have to adopt in the course of the round.

Often his ball lies on a slope. It may be uphill or downhill. In either case, it presents an awkward problem.

When the player is presented with a hanging lie—that is, the ball resting on a downhill slope—my principle is to stand a trifle more forward than for a simple shot.

It is only a matter of an inch or so, but I have found that if one stands in the ordinary way, with most of the body behind the ball—where the ground is higher—there is considerable danger of striking this higher ground just before making the impact. Standing an inch or two forward helps to bring the club-face into direct contact with the ball and avoid the high ground behind it.

When the lie is uphill, I believe in standing a little more behind the ball than usual. The fact that the ground has a rise immediately in front of the player—and, indeed, even at his very feet—makes it easy to come into contact with that incline a fraction of a second too soon. And then the club is checked and the shot is spoilt.

If the player stands an inch or so farther than usual behind the ball for an uphill lie, he may hope to make the impact just as the club face is rising from the bottom of the swing and so adapt its passage to the rising ground.

THE BOOK PAGE

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

Louis Couperus is the only Dutch novelist with whose works British readers are familiar. Messrs. Allen and Unwin, however, are publishing "The Fortunes of a Household," a novel by Herman Robbers, regarded, since the death of Couperus, as the most distinguished of Dutch fiction-writers.

Mr. G. K. Chesterton has evidently turned playwright. He has already completed one play, and is in the thick of another dealing with the Crusades.

Mr. Fred M. White, in his new story, "The Conscience of Falconhoe" (Ward Lock, 7s. 6d.), has invented an international detective agency, and with the help of wireless, aircraft and foreign plots, has concocted a narrative for the students of the exciting life.

Those who only know Mr. "Ian Hay" as a playwright and a novelist, have yet to make his acquaintance as an observer of life, its pathos, its humour and its foibles. They may do so in a book entitled "Playtime," which he has appearing with Hodder and Stoughton. He calls it "Playtime" because it is the fruit of some of his recreations as, for instance, seeing a football match, a cabaret show, or the Oxford and Cambridge boat-race. We also find him in the gallery of the Lyceum among the gods, on an Paris-bound train going to Paris, studying the animals at the Zoo, or taking a rest cure by looking on at a professional billiard match. He has a specially good subject for one essay because it is on the opening of the "Tiddler Season" at the Serpentine.

We are this spring to get quite a lot of reminiscences, and among them will be one promised by Mr. Thornton Butterworth, "Myself Not Least." This does not mean that Mr. Butterworth has written it, although he probably could, for we are not told who the writer is, and he just signs himself "X." What we are told is that behind the most impersonal letter of the alphabet there is concealed one of the wittiest and vivid personalities of the time, a personality with a name that has long been familiar in literary, journalistic, political and social circles. Naturally he would thus meet most of the prominent and interesting people who have figured in our public life. It follows that he should give us a wealth of lively and significant anecdotege with stories of people like Queen Victoria, Lord Randolph Churchill, Charles Stewart Parnell and Bernard Shaw.

Do houses, through the impress of personality that has been made upon them, exert a definite influence on their inhabitants? This is the text on which one of our most intellectual women novelists, Mrs. Elinor Mordaunt, founds a new book appearing with Hutchinson, "People and Houses." It is not to be taken or mistaken for a mere random collection of short stories. It is a volume of delicately portrayed impressions of houses and the rooms in houses which seem to be intimately associated with the people who live or have lived in them.

No kind of book, if it once greatly succeeds, keeps a hold on the public longer than a history. Macaulay's "History of England" is an old example of this, and Green's "Shorter History" a nearer example. Some 40 years ago Mr. C. A. Fyffe wrote a history of modern Europe, covering the period 1792 to 1878. It was accepted as a valuable and permanent contribution to our knowledge of European history, being scholarly in style and authoritative in its materials. The work has been out of print, but now Cassell are to publish a new, revised edition in two volumes, which will be welcome.

THE REAL JAPAN

Revelations in a Realistic Novel

Japan, the land of the Rising Sun, the home of the cherry blossom, the dainty background of the charming little geisha, has provided many a European novelist and dramatist with the material of many a pretty, whimsical tale. That was in the days when the Anglo-Japanese Alliance was a novelty and the little people of the East seemed to us delightful children in a delightful setting. Since then, however, Japan has come to imitate the West, and unsentimental travellers from the West have visited Japan. And it is a different tale about Japan that the novelists and travellers are telling us now.

One of the foremost prophets in this new realism of the Orient is Mr. John Paris. In a new novel, "Sayonara" (Collins, 7s. 6d. net), Mr. Paris resumes the attack from a new and interesting angle.

In this story his hero is one Richard Aylmer, a priest of the Church of England, who goes to Japan full of lofty missionary ideals. Part of his idealism is that, in order to convert Japan, he should marry a Japanese wife, and circumstance brings it about that he does marry a girl who has escaped from immoral surroundings. The result is degradation and the swallowing up of Richard Aylmer by the baseness of native life. How he is rescued may be left to the reader to find out.

Indeed, the story is not what matters in this striking book. Mr. Paris has a thesis to expound, and his characters are not much more than lay figures who point the moral he wishes to bring out, which is just that of Kipling:—

> East is East, and West is West,
> And never the twain shall meet.

But it is a novel full of striking descriptions and sensational opinions about Japan and the Japanese.

A HIDEOUS SYSTEM.

It was Richard Aylmer's first "convert" to the Christian faith who introduced him to O Yuki, the courtesan he was to marry. She came from a place of evil:—

> The Japanese kuruwa is an institution which is entirely antagonistic to our ideas and our hypocrisies. We prefer to daub our vices with a camouflage of romance. We prefer the casual encounter at the street corner or in the café, the pretence of love, the illusory self-congratulation which would fain believe that the purchase is a conquest, and the spurious coquetry of our demi-monde. But it is otherwise in Japan. There is no mistaking the market or its purpose. It is advertised clearly by its solid architecture and by its beating drums. It appears to be—and it is—a public building of municipal importance, like a school, a library, or a town hall.

And O Yuki had been sold into the kuruwa by her perfectly respectable parents, according to Japanese custom, in order to save the family fortunes!

THE JAPANESE INTELLECTUAL.

Then this semi-Europeanized "convert" of Aylmer's! Mr. Paris gives us some startling specimens of his conversation. This is how he explained his difficulties about accepting the Christian faith:—

> "I am just now pragmatical philosopher," exclaimed the Japanese, his spectacles falling from his nose at the excitement of this avowal; "also I sow wild oat."

> "Do you read your Bible?" Dick asked.

> "Bible I find many superstitious tale for old woman and babes—silly thing for progressive person."

> "But Jesus Christ—what think you of Him?"

> "Inspired leader of men, but not enough pep, I think. I think more great Bismarck."

So Richard Aylmer's eyes are opened, until he learns the truth about Japan Mr. Paris would have us believe. It may not be the whole truth, but this document is not to be ignored. "Sayonara" is not meat for babes. It is, however, a necessary antidote for those who have derived their notions of the East from "The Geisha"—"that amiable epic of a non-existent Japan."

THE CALL OF THE KEYHOLE

A Best-Selling Volume of Gossip

By Philip Gwedalla.

"Uncensored Recollections." Anon. Nash and Grayson. 12s. 6d.

The tone of this compilation is strangely familiar. The patient cultivation of the Great, the sedulous avoidance of the Good, a passing brush from the wing tips of Royalty itself—these are qualities which evoke from a publisher, usually so unemotional, the ecstatic comment that "it is probably the best Book of Gossip that has been published during the last 20 years." If only it could be the last also.

Mr Beerbohm epitomised them all, years ago, in the margin of a drawing entitled "Noblemen's Memoirs," and depicting a lady in the act of writing:

> Industrious Anonyma: I saw a good lot of the Prince of Wales—afterwards Edward VII. in those days, and I must say that a truer sportsman—and, I may add, a better pal—never stepped in shoe leather. I remember once after I had been having rather a rotten day at Newmarket he came up to me and, slapping me on the back said etc., etc.

It is an unchanging formula. Our present author opens with the Royal gambit:

> Oddly enough, one of my very first recollections of anything is connected with the late King Edward, and in rather a comic way. . . . He (himself then a mere youth) came suddenly into the nursery . . . I remember the incident because my nurse, Coralie. . . .

One is far from asserting that the book and others of its kind are deliberate compilations fabricated to meet a purely commercial need. It is enough to say that the present example makes no pretensions as literature, and that as history its claims can hardly be higher, since its author shows himself to be afflicted with a memory so unreliable upon points where his assertions can be checked, that one hesitates to accept him as a guide in the more problematical regions which he normally frequents.

A MISTAKE ABOUT A DUKE.

One can make no claim to speak with equal authority upon the elegant misdeeds of the British aristocracy, upon which he dwells with such loving detail. But in his contacts with the facts of French history under the Second Empire he is singularly unfortunate. It is hardly surprising that a memoirist of this calibre repeats the familiar myths that Napoleon III. was the son of a Dutch admiral, and his Empress the daughter of an English peer. But when this highly-placed personage ("the Ney family," we learn, "are cousins of ours") describes Morny as "the Empress's illegitimate brother by the Comte de Flahant (sic), and of course, and without the least doubt, the person who engineered the entire coup d'état," one is a trifle shocked. A misprint is pardonable; but a misstatement which overlooks Maupas, Saint-Arnaud, and Louis Napoleon himself, is less venial. The story proceeds with equal insouciance: "But when the coup d'état came, hey presto! all was changed. Morny became Duke and Foreign Secretary, and the first time Hancock waited on him at the Quai d'Orsay. . . ." Morny, alas! did not become a duke until 10 years after the coup d'état; and he was never Foreign Minister. So poor Hancock at the Quai d'Orsay is left rather in the air.

Our author has no luck at all with Morny. He miscalls his little farce about M. Choufleury; and his narrative of the Duke's last days seems to owe at least as much to his acquaintance with Daudet as to his visits to the ducal table. Somehow, one hesitates to accept from so tangential an authority a new story that Louis Napoleon "often stayed. . . . with his friend, Walter Savage Landor," upon whom he is hitherto known to have called but twice.

A PROPHETESS.

On a later page the author makes a grave contribution to the history of the dark antecedents of the war of 1870. His prefatory observation that "the insolence of Benedetti threw all the fat in the fire" suggests that caution is advisable. And when he relates as "a well known fact" that Madame de Pourtales foretold war with Prussia over the Spanish succession "some months before the incident of Ems," one is tempted to wonder how the prophetic lady managed it, since the Hohenzollern candidature was only launched in its provocative form 12 days before the declaration of war. But the strangest story is to the effect that the Emperor changed his mind after a conversation with the Empress about 6 o'clock one morning, and sent a melodramatic pencilled note to Baron de Rothschild in these fevered terms: "Tout est changé: c'est la guerre.—N." One is the more curious as to the episode, to which our author assigns no date, as the decision was hitherto believed to have been taken in the late afternoon of Tuesday, July 12.

He adds a vivid and rather horrible detail to the story of Maximillian's execution in Mexico, describing the Emperor in agony after the first discharge "tearing the buttons off his waistcoat." Unhappily the tragic garment exists, and has been photographed. The bullet-holes are there, but all eight buttons are in place.

Perhaps, however, it is unkind to look too closely after accuracy in a breezy raconteur who tells us: "I remember when the Liberals went out and the Tories came in (71, I think), I was staying at the Derbys." One would naturally remember staying at the Derbys. But need one forget that Mr. Gladstone remained in office until 1874? Enough, perhaps, has been written to show that our author's memory sometimes betrays him. Perhaps it betrayed his judicious publisher into that unguarded remark about "The Best Book of Gossip." Because the best gossip is frequently accurate.—"Daily News."

BOMBARDIER WELLS

"Physical Energy." By Bombardier Billy Wells. Werner Laurie. 3s. 6d.

It appears that Bombardier Wells was walking one day in Kensington Gardens when he came upon G. F. Watts's equestrian statue, "Physical Energy." It struck the Bombardier "all of a heap," as the saying goes, like a right to the jaw from Dempsey. It filled him with the desire to write. It was, in fact, "the source of inspiration for my ideas of a new method of Physical Culture"—ideas which he has now published to the world in book form.

After all, there is nothing very revolutionary about it. The "new" method of keeping fit is simply to take up boxing, using the punching-bag when no sparring partner is available. And even then the Bombardier feels compelled to admit by implication that lawn tennis is just as good. He proves from his own career that a man who has learnt to box has incidentally prepared himself to play most other games as well; and he certainly makes out a damning case against that kind of physical culture which relies on what schoolboys call "physical jerks," and only succeeds in producing "strong men." But there is nothing "new" about all this.

FRENCH STATESMEN

"As They Are: French Political Portraits." By X. X. X. Translated by Winifred Katzin. Heinemann. 7s. 6d.

It cannot be said that this little picture gallery of living French statesmen gives one a very high opinion of the condition of politics in France. To adopt a well-worn phrase, it does not leave a particularly pleasant taste in the mouth.

The name of M. Caillaux is second on the list and there are others. But the author does not presume on his anonymity. There is no idle gossip and no bitter cynicism here. Indeed he does not conceal his personal predilections.

The unkindest thing he can say for M. Poincaré (whom he evidently likes) is that "his business is to plead causes, and at the present moment he happens to be pleading the national cause, and that is all." He has the confidence of the nation, and "every Frenchman's wish is for his success." While M. Caillaux gets what he deserves, M. Loucheur seems to be treated with undue severity. To the foreigner, who perhaps sees most of the game, it would seem that the one player with a personality of outstanding interest is M. Clemenceau, and the author so far acknowledges this as to put him first on the list. But his analysis of the Tiger's character is meagre. "The peace he made was in his own likeness, the peace of a master off polemics pursuing a philosophy one hundred years out of date."

THE RED MAN

"Indian Days in the Canadian Rockies." By Marius Barbeau. Macmillan. 12s. 6d.

In the days of the explorers and the fur traders the American Indians commanded respect and inspired hatred or fear, but now that they have dwindled rapidly in the great national reservations, our attitude has changed to one of sentimentality. This fascinating study of the Stonies and Kootenays of the Rocky Mountains is an attempt to gauge the mind of the Red man, and his attitude to white civilization, as shown by folklore and the visions and prophecies of the native seers or witch-doctors. Mr. Barbeau explains why the tribes sullenly refused all the blessings of European civilization except disease, firewater and the rifle. The difficulties of the early missionaries are exemplified by the subtlety of a noted sorcerer among the Western Crees, "an adroit imposter who had been baptised," and claimed in trance to have gone to the white man's Heaven; he reported to his tribe that it was far too exclusive a Kingdom for the dusky people of the prairies and mountains, that he had found there none of the spirits of his ancestors, nor fishing, hunting and dancing.

BREATHLESS

A gigantic bank robbery—a simultaneous plundering of several of the biggest banks in New York—makes a good and exciting opening to Victor MacClure's thrilling and exceedingly well-written romance of the near future, "Ultimatum" (Harrap, 7s. 6t. net). The staffs have all been put to sleep in a mysterious and unexplainable manner, and any gold article in the vicinity of the raid is mysteriously tarnished. All the stolen securities are quickly returned by the thieves, but two and a half million dollars in gold have been spirited away. This outrage upon society and security is swiftly followed by the raiding of a liner carrying gold. As with the bank watchers, the passengers and the crew have all been doped into unconsciousness. Then comes a raid on the Bank of England, and the discovery that these successful assaults on the gold stores of the world have been instigated by a League that has deliberately brought about this chaos in the world's commerce to show its mighty power.

The League has for its object the abolishing of war, and demands the disbandment of all armies and the destruction of all weapons of war. Mr. MacClure has so ably invested his story with actuality and excitement that it would be unfair to hint at the way in which the world deals with this threat of the League. "Ultimatum" is a breathless yarn which should be very popular.

SHANGHAI MOTHER GOOSE

Dickery, dickery, dock!
They've taken away the clock.
Now every one
Awaits the gun.
From eleven o'clock to the height of the sun
There really is not very much work done.
At last! The delicious shock!

Extravant Frank
Went to the Bank
To fetch a bag of money.
He waited awhile,
Received a smile
That was anything but sunny.
The manager laughed,
"More overdraft!
No! really this is too funny!"

Little 'Change Broker,
Straight as a poker,
Rode on the step of his trap.
He felt full of swank
As he dashed to the Bank,
But came out a humble wee chap.

There was an old lady who lived in Hongkew.
She'd so many servants she didn't know what to do.
Boy pleased her but "squeezed"
her;
Cook fed her but bled her;
And amah's relations got deader and deader.
So at China New Year, when the whole of them fled her,
She took to her bed-a-bed-bed-ah.

ART'S ACME

The Happy Union of the Useful and the Ornamental

By Elizabeth Peyps.

We were talking of the latest thing in the Arts—of pictures so futuristic that no one in the present knew what they were intended to represent, of music so modern in its cacophony that no one could bear to hear it, of poems so subtly perfumed with suggestion that all music was lost in the significance of its undertones. In short we were being our best high-brow selves, and feeling rather successful inasmuch as there was that indispensable concomitant to every brilliant salon, a few good listeners.

One of the latter, however, began to show lamentable signs of getting out of hand, her glance roamed round the room or out through the windows to her gardens just putting on their spring lovelinesses. Since we had all been lavishly tea-ed, cigarettes were within reach of every one and it was hardly time to serve cocktails, her failure to give the speaker of the moment her undivided attention was annoying. A clever talker deserves a rapt audience.

To bring back the erring sister to the fold Chloe tactfully included her in the conversational circle. "And speaking of music, Doris, are you keeping up your music with that adorable Professor Stepansky?" No, she had dropped that for the time, and also her work on the illustrations of her husband's book. Perhaps she was continuing her correspondence course in the Short Story. Repeated negatives seemed to waken Doris to the fact that something was expected of her if she would retain her place in this little coterie of earnest thinkers, so stung to it, she finally came out with her defence: "I've been working out a little theory of mine in sublimation, and there will be just time for me to demonstrate it to you before the cocktail tray comes in—if you're interested that is."

SUBLIMATING THE ART URGE.

Those who had been leading the conversation were patently not so anxious for a diversion as were those who had been trying vainly for the last half hour to introduce a theory of their own; but we all assented more or less warmly. After all she was our hostess.

"You may think I'm materializing, instead of sublimating," continued Doris, as she drove us upstairs to the library and flung open the door into her own room, "but it's given me the self-expression my soul craves, and what more could Freud do?" Her more timid hearers winced, others brightened up. We were all surprised when amah appeared in the doorway with a hat in her hands.

"This is no place for a bachelor," announced our best amateur poet, sliding to the door. But he was stopped by an imperious gesture from Doris, and a command to her husband "Let no guilty male escape, Tom. I'm tired of having hats and frocks and wraps and the all-important accessories looked down upon, as if the fine art of dressing were a soulless occupation. Look at this hat!"

We did so. It was worth looking at. Even the men had to admit that. It was made in cloche style, with the little turn-up to the brim that marks the great gulf fixed between the cloches of this spring and last winter. I fancy all the women grasped this important fact at once. Doris explained it cogently to the men. "You must have the scientist's observations and accuracy; you must have the painter's eye for colour, you must have the creative artist's daring, but the greatest of all these is knowing what suits your type," and with a flourish Doris pulled the almond vert hat with its grosgrain cockade down on her shingled head, and after extinguishing one eye, looked round for approval with the other.

A TANGIBLE INSPIRATION.

She got it, and proceeded. "Of course I could have written three sonnets and done a sketch or two in the time it took me to make that hat." Polite murmurs of incredulity from the women and admiration from the men. "Of course I didn't make the straw, silly, but I found it, and had it reblocked and cut off a bit here and a bit there and selected the ribbon for the cockade and found just the angle to wear it. Personally when I wear it I feel I'm contributing as much to the world as if I had given a recital and dragged you all to it."

"Moreover," continued Doris, beckoning to amah to bring in some spring costumes, "here are the other volumes of the trilogy, a green-yellow jumper made of ribbon faggoted together, an almond green flannel skirt plaided in black and the cape to match. The ribbon struck the spring note of the symphony. We had to orchestrate the rest of it. Don't tell me that the time I spent assembling these from different shops of Shanghai and instructing the tailor would have been better spent on writing an essay on early Chinese art or psycho-analysis. Why the tailor is modern Chinese art, and didn't I have to psycho-analyze myself before I could tell what would fit my type, spiritually as well as physically?"

"And besides," she continued, "there's a heap of research and laboratory work behind these simple frocks. I appeal to you as a biologist, Phil, to tell me what this is?" Mystified, but obliging Phil followed her pointing finger to the embroidered motifs, slender, arrow tipped lines, about the middle of the long straight dress.

BIOLOGY APPLIED.

"That's, that's a white line on a rose dress?" "Not a bit of it, that's the vestigial waist. That's to indicate that women once had waists, to give the suggestion of the girdle without actually expressing any thing so demodé. What's that?" An expression of defeat crossed the scientist's face and Doris went on: "That's the reminder of the sleeve, an interesting style survival. That splashing bow is a bustle in embryo. This scarf is the great-granddaughter of the useful muffler. If I only had time to learn a few catch-words I could speak so scientifically you couldn't tell the difference between a style talk and a lecture before the Quest Society. Are you willing to admit it takes an intellect to dress properly? Yes? Then this will be all for to-day.

THE OUTDOOR FROCK

Country Clothes for Summer Months

By Elizabeth Peyps.

Are there among our readers those with experiences that date back to the days when to be a good sportswoman was to sacrifice beauty to comfort and becomingness to efficiency? Probably not. Gone are the days of the Dr. Mary Walker suit, the bulky Turkish trousers of the emancipated Mrs. Bloomer, the impossible Greek-like draperies of the Delsarte enthusiast—gone save for their revival by an irreverent group of college girls portraying the now and the then of it.

To-day if one's sports clothes are up-to-date one hardly needs to worry much about other day costumes for after all, the most popular type of informal frock is that adopted by the woman who may take an active part in the current tournaments at the Country Club or who may again join the comfortable, if lazing, onlookers in the shade.

SMART SIMPLICITY.

The simple frock not only holds its own but drives its elaborate competitors from the field. The tub dress of crépe de Chine, wash silk or voile never needs to apologize for its severity. Indeed we are all paraphrasing Tennyson and saying.

STREET VOGUES

Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only stylish to be plain.
Tub clothes are more than fluffy frills,
And simple frocks than gewgaws vain.

Both the plain white and the apple-green, rose, beige, mauve, yellow or powder-blue shades are used but perhaps the quite white costume has the preference and certainly it lends itself advantageously to decoration with the gay scarves to which we have all succumbed.

The trim trigness of men's wash silk shirts, than which few things seem tidier, has been seized upon for sport clothes. Scant trimming is seen on these demurely smart little dresses, but pleats are always permissible, and what cannot be done with them? The pocket, whether a genuine repository, or a mere decorative blind, may also be introduced on almost any occasion and with the ubiquitous monogram adds a crisp, yet effective decorative touch. When it comes to "Button, button, who's got the button?" most of us can play at that game, for besides the undeniably utilitarian value of buttons they are decidedly ornamental, without appearing fussy. The crystal buttons on coloured backgrounds are charming, and used as cuff links on bright blouses add another fascinating bit of glitter.

AMUSING FADS.

Those who cannot be content without a bit of embroidery may always find the appropriate bit of handicraft in the monogram or initial or even more in the motto which is all the rage. One favourite device, the motto of one's house, or, in the instance of the unco young and frivolous, a college slogan or the slang phrase of the moment may furnish interest as well as ornament.

White felt cloches are most affected, though natural straw or even brown, worn with matching or harmonizing shoes, gloves and pocketbooks are also popular. Shoes and stockings or even stockings alone often convey the one note of colour in a costume Sweaters and separate skirts are always good form and flannel, jersey and other light wool fabrics are the most used.

The sports clothes designed by Parisian artists have an entirely different air, although you can see that the creator has manfully struggled to be breezy and debonair. Despite his efforts, however, the French frock is most useful on the side lines where scant skirts are not maddening and where touches of lace and an occasional ruffle do not look out of place. These are the only turnouts with which jewels may be worn, and a high-born spectator is reported as having appeared in a black and white costume continued with one black and one white pearl ear-ring, with the same combination in rings and diamond and onyx-set watch. But before we wander further from the simple and appropriate sports frock to its alluring imitators, let us write a hasty Finis.

SPONGES

Some Social Parasites.

No. I don't mean the people who never ask you to their parties although they always come to yours. I don't mean the tribe of borrowers and beggars who infest every grade of society. I mean quite nice people like little Mrs. So-and-So, who fastens on to you like a leech and doesn't let go until she has drained your mind of all it contains, and clever Mr. This-and-That, who peppers you with questions until he knows not only your past and present but your probable future as well.

After an interview with persons of this calibre you feel rather like a squeezed lemon, sourish and lacking in sap. For these human sponges make a habit of absorbing everything and yielding nothing in return.

"AN IDEA FOR AN IDEA."

The old saying of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" might be paraphrased for social purposes in this wise—"An idea for an idea, a thought for a thought.

But never an idea does any member of the sponge tribe proffer for the purposes of exchange. Parasites of the worst description, the members of this tribe descend upon you at all hours uninvited, and there they sit waiting for you to dole out subjects which they persistently tender back with a "What do you think about it?" Should you retaliate in kind you are checkmated by an enigmatic smile and an—"Oh, I hold my own views on the subject." But either they regard their listeners as too devoid of intelligence to understand these views or else they do not deem it worth their while to expound them to "the likes of her." Certain it is, you never glean any light beyond the distored flash of the "Monna Lisa" smile—that smile which is the first and last resort of the female sponge.

IMPALED ON AN INTERROGATION POINT.

While sinners of this sort abound among women the type is by no means exclusively a feminine one. The most colossal sponge I ever met was a man, and a well-known author. This gentleman, I have since learned, makes a regular practice of probing the mind of every person he encounters. The milk-boy, the city magnate, the woman from whom his wife buys her jumpers—all manner of people he draws within his net. Then he proceeds to subject them to a barrage of questions until they find themselves stripped of every vestige of their mental reserve.

It is rather a terrifying experience, a meeting with this author. When the introduction looms in prospect you find yourself shivering all down your backbone as you meditate fearfully upon his fame, afterwards, when the ordeal is over, you remember only the sickening sensation you experience when he impaled you, in the manner of a small boy handling a butterfly on the pin of an interrogation point and watched, his ugly, protruding eyes bulging with a cold curiosity, your writhing attempts to escape.

"What did he talk about?" asks the ardent admirer of his works, all innocent of the fact that the said writer never talks save through the mouths of the characters in his novel. Incidentally, instead of "delightful diversions" by the brilliant Mr. Z., these novels ought, by rights, to be described as the drips that emanate from a monstrous human sponge.

THE VAMPIRE AND THE SPONGE.

Compared to this type of person, the bookborrowed and the bazaar fiend are the most harmless of individuals. What they acquire from you is mere trash in comparison to that which the human sponge extracts. It is she or he who robs you of your vitality, your humour, your fund of reserve strength. It is she or he who despoils your mind and leaves you as limp as the discarded remant of a drapery sale ramp.

In the days of our youth a novel entitled "Dracula," containing a gruesome description of a vampire, was wont to curdle the blood in our veins. The human sponge is the lineal descendant of this vampire. So far however, as I am aware no modern author has immortalized the species in book or verse. Can this be because in every writer there lurk certain of the attributes of the sponge, the tendency to glean instead of to give, except, of course, at so much per line? Perish the thought! I prefer to believe, the habits of Mr. Z. notwithstanding, that it is because so much of the present day fiction is pure autobiography that the sentimentalist rather than the sponge figures as the hero of every other modern noved.—Ann Adair, in "Glasgow Herald."

EARTH'S LYRIC

April. You hearken, my fellow,
Old slumberer down in my heart,
There's a whooping of ice in the rivers;
The sap feels a start.

The snow-melted torrents are brawling;
The hills, orange-misted and blue,
Are touched with the voice of the rainbird
Unsullied and new.

The houses of frost are deserted,
Their slumber is broken and done,
And empty and pale are the portals
Awaiting the sun.

The bands of Arcturus are slackened:
Orion goes forth from his place
On the slopes of the night, leading homeward
His hound from the chase.

The Pleiades weary and follow
The dance of the ghostly dawn;
The revel of silence is over;
Earth's lyric comes on.

A golden flute in the cedars,
A silver pipe in the swales,
And the slow large life of the forest
Wells back and prevails.

A breath of the woodland spirit
Has blown out the bubble of spring
To this tenuous hyaline glory
One touch sets a-wing.

Bliss Carman.

FOUND

Who is that charming lady
Her nape I quite adore?
Her chin is most familiar
I've seen it oft before.
Her hat so closely fitting
Discloses not her hair
Yet that confounded necklace
I must have seen somewhere.
Did I not see those moccasins
Once toying with the cat?
That strip of fur that lined the skirt
The color of a rat?
Shall I step forth to greet her
Or shall I just stand pat,
"Good morning, Cousin Alice,
I knew you by your hat!"

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self-governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

PEKING'S APPEAL FOR THE SURTAX

Strong Opposition by London "Financier" to Granting More Money to Peking for Game of Ducks and Drakes

Without knowledge of the facts, the significance of the Chinese Government's request for a preliminary conference with the object of establishing a 2½ per cent. surtax may not be fully appreciated. This surtax was agreed upon by the Washington Conference, but has not become operative owing to the opposition of France, but Peking now seeks to have the increased tax put into force in order to consolidate the financial position and enable liquidation of the huge unsecured debt to proceed. This, at first glance, would appear a laudable object, but, to quote the considered opinion of one competent to judge, "to allow Chinese officials to impose a further tax on trade under the conditions of misgovernment prevailing to-day is merely to hit the foreign merchant without doing an atom of good to China."

If the 2½ per cent. surtax is granted it will place large additional funds in the hands of a weak Administration in Peking, temporarily bolstering up their position at the expense of the development of the internal trade of China as a whole. Deplorable conditions prevail to-day, for the great Provinces are virtually independent kingdoms under powerful military control antagonistic to the Central Government. They have long since ceased to remit revenue to Peking, and they flout all authority from that quarter. The land tax goes into the coffers of the military governors, and the likin, or internal tax, on foreign goods is abused in every possible way. Taxation is extorted wherever possible, and the opulent, though lawless, Provincial rulers grow stronger daily. The root of the trouble is the vicious circle of imposts, having the likin as a foundation. Until this is abolished, definitely and abasolutely, nothing can be done. The Treaties of 1902 and 1903, to which Great Britain, Japan, and America were signatories, aimed at the abolition of likin, but in practice nothing resulted. Even at that period it was suggested that surtaxes amounting to 12½ per cent. might be imposed if the pernicious system of inland taxation was eliminated. Matters drifted on, culminating in the Washington Conference, which agreed that, as the old 5 per cent. tax had, by the reduced value of goods, become only equivalent to a 3½ per cent. levy, it should be reinstated as a 5 per cent. effective ad valorem duty The surtax of 2½ per cent. was further agreed to conditionally upon the repeal of likin. Peking, it will thus be seen, wishes to secure the advantages of the surtax, but entirely for its own ends. To quote the "North-China Daily News and Herald," "until Chinese politicians show that they can so govern China as to enable the effective 5 per cent. to prove of benefit, it would be sheer folly to grant them a further surtax, and the Powers should therefore take further advantage of the reservations which govern this surtax coming into effect." These reservations include the abolition of the internal tax on foreign goods, and Sir Robert Borden's view, expressed at the Washington Conference, holds good to-day in a manifold sense, viz: "The provision of great revenues, or the placing of large funds at the disposal of a weak Administration, is not of itself effective." Sir John Jordan, whose long service in the highest official circles in China enables him to form an authoritative opinion, fully endorses this view, and has recently stated that Chinese public opinion is naturally opposed to the country being saddled with loans for the exclusive benefit of the Peking Government. Sir John maintains that both the British manufacturers and merchants and the Chinese consumers are all one in insisting that the taxation of foreign goods shall not be utilized as an expedient for settling accounts with importunate creditors and patching up an arrangement which, at best, could be only a temporary palliative for Peking's disordered finances.

It is estimated that the unsecured indebtedness of China aggregates £40,000,000, largely for material supplied in addition to which there are other huge sums accruing for less tangible services rendered. Japan and America suffer equally with Great Britain. It is poor consolation to the English holders of the "Vickers" and "Marconi" bonds to learn that at least two American loans are also in default, and that Japanese lenders have not been able to get a penny of interest for years. Nevertheless, the hard facts must be faced, that the unsecured debts stand but a remote chance of liquidation while the present internal chaos prevails. Merchants, not unnaturally, exclaim: "Why put a surtax on our goods to provide funds for old lenders, who must have realized the risk of advancing money without security?" The Provinces say: "Why give Peking new money by surtaxes when we ignore its authority, and the funds may be used against us?" The outlook is by no means a hopeful one so long as the menace of the military despotism in the Provinces is allowed to continue. The revenue from the salt tax itself, which is a contribution to the secured debt service, is in some respects jeopardized. So far as the International Commission which controls the salt tax is concerned, it is effective in its organization and collecting power, and within the sphere of the Peking Administration works without interference, but revenue collected in other Provinces is liable to interception. The military governors are avaricious, and the revenue figures published last January show that some $30,000,000 which should have been remitted to Peking "were either retained locally or appropriated by the Provincial authorities and the military chiefs." The despotic action of the latter is without bounds, and as an instance of the evil effects of their oppression landlords are driven to the recultivation of opium as a means to provide funds to meet the ever-growing extortionate taxation. Thus the patient toil of many years for the cessation of opium cultivation has been stultified.

China has a population exceeding 400,000,000, and her foreign trade is immense, being estimated for last year in the neighbourhood of £300,000,000, but progress has been crippled by the internal chaos, and before fresh facilities are granted to China it is obvious that she must first put her house in order.

POLITICAL TANGLE IN PEKING

Resignation of President Now Denied: Finance Minister Not Resuming Work

GEN. WANG REQUESTED TO REMAIN IN OFFICE

Peking, May 2.

The report that Mr. Sung Hung-yi, former Minister of the Interior, will arrive in Peking shortly is being quoted as an indication of the impending resignation of Premier Sun Pao-chi. It is stated officially, however, that Mr. Sun has now consented to remain as Premier, and that the visit of Mr. Sung, who has frequently been mentioned lately as the future Premier, has no connexion with the political situation.

Mr. Wang Ko-ming, however, shows no disposition to resume the work of Minister of Finance, and the political tangle appears to be becoming more complicated.

Mr. Wang Yu-chih, Chief Secretary of the Presidency, has telephoned to General Wang Chen-ping this morning urging him to withdraw his resignation and asking why he wished to vacate his post.

A group of Members of the Chihli Provincial Assembly headed by Mr. Wu Yung-pin, arrived in Peking this afternoon with the object of urging the Government not to accept Gen. Wang's resignation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RENDITION OF MIXED COURT

Further Application by Peking to Diplomatic Body.

Peking, May 2.

On April 10, as previously reported, replying to the demand by the Chinese Government for the abrogation of the Mixed Court in Shanghai, the Diplomatic Body agreed conditionally to allow civil cases between Chinese citizens to be dealt with in a Chinese court, but the Chinese Government, not being satisfied with the proposal made by the Diplomatic Body, has addressed another Note to the latter in this connexion, declaring that the proposal referred to is not only incompatible with the wishes of the Chinese Government but is also contrary to the spirit of the Washington Conference.—Eastern News Agency.

THE CIGARETTE TAX

Peking Appealing to Provinces to Take it Off

Peking, May 2.

In response to protests frequently lodged by the British and American Ministers to Peking against the imposition by local provinces of the tax on cigarettes, the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs, as a result of a consultation with the Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, to-day wired to all provinces concerned requesting them to stop the imposition of the tax. —Eastern News Agency.

Peking, May 6.

In order to obtain first-hand information regarding the collection of the cigarette taxes in Kiangsu, Dr. Wellington Koo has sent the chief of the Cigarette Department, Mr. Hsu, to make personal investigations and report to the Waichiaopu. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

KIAO-TSI RLWY. COMMISSION'S REPORT

More Dismissals Likely

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, Apr. 27.

After many days of hard work, Mr. Chuan Liang has completed his investigation of conditions prevailing along the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway and left here for Peking on April 23 for the purpose of presenting his report to the Ministry of Communications. Mr. Chuan was met at Tsinan by Mr. Shao Heng-chun, the new Managing-Director of the Railway, who has now arrived here and taken over his post. Mr. Chuan took the opportunity of making various suggestions to Mr. Shao, calculated to benefit the line.

It is reported that the Commission sent here for the purpose of inquiring into the prevailing conditions and future possibilities of the Railway has sent a report to the Ministry of Communications embodying the following features:—(1) general affairs, (2) financial aspects, (3) transportation problem, (5) maintenance of Admiral Wen's squadron; (6) railway police, (7) accident problems, (8) murder of Mr. Keh.

It is generally believed that during the next three months there will be no extensive changes in the personnel of the Railway employees, but after this period a wholesale dismissal of superfluous men will in all probability take place, for it is well known that the Tupan and the new managing director are fast friends and that the former has suggested to the latter to curtail overhead expenses as much as possible without affecting the successful working of the Railway.

Peking Must Support Wen's Squadron

It is worthy of note that the English secretary of Mr. Kao En-hung, in reply to inquiries as to the future operations of Admiral Wen's squadron, affirmed that (1) the squadron was to be supported financially by the Central Government, which meant that it was the business of the Ministry of the Navy and the Ministry of Finance and that it had nothing whatever to do with the Tsingtao Administration so far as the qustion of financial support was concerned, (2) that the squadron would patrol the Gulf of Pechihli, traversing to and fro to guard the port of Tsingtao, the port of Lungkow, the port of Chefoo and the coast of Pehchili, and (3) that the squadron was considered to be a part of the defences of the Territory of Kiaochou Bay.

This statement is reassuring, for up till now it would seem to have been the object of all concerned that the squadron should be supported by public utilities.

The New Managing Director

Tsingtao, Apr. 28.

Mr. Shao Hung-chun, the new Managing Director of the Kiao-Tsi (Kiaochou-Tsinanfu) Railway, succeeding Mr. Liu Kun, who has been transferred to the managership of the Eastern Division of the Lunghai Railway, assumed his duties on Saturday and received a warm welcome from staff officials and employees.

Mr. T. C. Chu, Vice-Managing Director, greeted the new executive on behalf of the railroad and Mr. Shao, in voicing his appreciation of the welcome accorded him, asked for the co-operation of all in the continuance of the service performed by the line for the benefit of the general public, which, he said, he hoped to make more efficient.

Mr. Shao was Consul-General at Vladivostok for a number of years and for the past few years has been engaged in educational work. He was formerly a member of the staff of the Minister of Communications during the incumbency of Mr. Kao En-hung, now Tupan of this territory. Mr. Shao and the Government have been fast friends for many years and a closer coordination between the railway and the Administration is forecast.

Just before the arrival of Mr. Shao, the special commission, appointed by the Ministry of Communications to conduct an inquiry into the status of the railway, completed its labours and is now formulating the results of its investigation into a detailed report to be submitted to the Ministry, which, in turn, will forward it to the Cabinet. Any recommendation of the commission must have the approval of the Ministry and Cabinet, in which event it will be announced and put into effect by Presidential Mandate.

The railway officials are keenly interested in that portion of the report dealing with the expansion scheme for the line, which was submitted to the Ministry of Communications some time ago. This programme calls for the expenditure of several million dollars on many new bridges, rolling stock, double-tracking and equipment.

Funds for the Navy.

Rear Admiral Wen Shu-teh, Commander of the naval squadron at Tsingtao, Weihaiwei and Chefoo, returned to this city yesterday morning and was welcomed at the depôt by a crowd of several thousand, including naval and territorial officials and the naval band. A guard of honour escorted him to the Naval Administration Building.

Admiral Wen has been able to obtain a certain amount of financial support for his squadron, and repairs to the vessels will be made in the near future. They will need a thorough overhauling as they have not been re-conditions for several years.

HIGHWAYS IN CHINA

The Inevitable Regulations

Peking, May 1.

All the Cabinet Ministers with the exception of Mr. Wang Ko-ming, attended the meeting this morning. The official report says the meeting approved the regulations to govern the preparatory department of highways throughout the country, of which Gen. Chang Ching-huai is Tupan.

The meeting also approved the proposal brought forward by the Ministry of Education for Educational Commissioners to be sent from Peking to Chahar, Suiyuan and Jehol districts and for a fourth Commissioner to be appointed for the Metropolitan Area.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WHEN CHINA COMPLAINS

Instant Satisfaction Promised.

Peking, Apr. 30.

The British Legation has been in communication with the Waichiaopu on the subject of the alleged assault by Mr. Darcy Weatherbe on the Octroi official, and Reuter is informed that in the event of a complaint being lodged at the British Consulate the case will be heard in the usual manner in accordanee with treaty obligations.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE WEATHERBE CASE

British Minister's Note to Waichiaopu as to Correct International Procedure

Peking, May, 3.

The British Minister sent a formal Note to the Waichiaopu yesterday regarding the Weatherbe case. It referred to Sir Ronald Macleay's letter to Dr. Wellington Koo of Tuesday last and the conversation between the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the British Minister on the same subject on Wednesday, pointing out that the Octroi official should lodge his complaint over the alleged assault with the British Consul, who would then issue a summons to the defendant. When the preliminary arrangements had been completed, the Legation would notify the Waichiaopu so that a Chinese official observer could attend the hearing of the case.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, May 5.

The Waichiaopu has instructed the Octroi Department to furnish depositions concerning the Weatherbe case, which the Ministry will then forward to the British Legation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MARCONI CONTRACTS IN CHINA

Claim by Commission Agent: Rebates of £80,000 Paid to Officials

Mr. Godfrey Isaacs on March 22 gave evidence for the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co., Strand, London, in the action brought against them by Mr. James A. Malcolm, of Victoria Street, Westminster, heard by Mr. Justice Acton in the King's Bench Divison. Plaintiff claimed commission of 5 per cent. on business done under three contracts with the Chinese Government. The Marconi Co. had advanced money as well as supplied wireless telegraph material to the Chinese Government, and they denied that plaintiff, who, with a Mr. F. Birchal, now deceased, was at the time of the contracts their agent in China, was entitled to any commission on the loans to the Chinese Government.

Mr. W. A. Jowitt, K.C., for the Marconi Co., said they had never before accepted an order for the sale of materials that was coupled with an obligation to lend money to the purchaser. On the general aspect of the case he found this peculiar result in the case of two agents—that one was able to secure a clear order for the sale of £300,000 worth of goods and received a commission of 5 per cent., while the other agent got an order for £300,000 worth of goods with the onerous condition attached that £300,000 was to be lent. If the lattter was to get a commission twice over that would be a curious conclusion to arrive at.

Counsel suggested that to pay 5 per cent. commission on a loan was a ridiculous amount. He submitted that the parties in this case were thinking of 5 per cent. commission on orders for materials and not on the financial business. In fact, no business was done up to the time of Mr. Birchal's death, and no business resulted from plaintiff's efforts. The business was done apart from the plaintiff. Transactions with the Chinese Government, said Mr. Jowitt, could not be visualized in the same way as could transactions with Western Governments. If the same code or standard were applied as had to be applied in the case of our own government no orders at all would ever be got. When negotations were started with the Chinese Government for the sale of anything to them certain Chinese officials had to be, should he say, compensated.

Commission Terms

Mr. Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the Marconi Co., gave evidence regarding the contracts. Witness said plaintiff was introduced to him by one of his colleagues. There appeared to be a working arrangement between plaintiff and Mr. Birchal, and in consequence of Mr. Birchal's experience in China witness was anxious o secure his services in connexion with the Marconi Co.'s operations in that country. The company's first scheme was a big one for a loan and the supply of goods to the Chinese Government. Messrs. Birchal and Malcolm were to receive 1 per cent. on the financial part and 1½ per cent. on the business part. Prior to this the company had never lent money as a condition of obtaining an order. The business which was then contemplated did not, in fact, materialize.

Before it fell through, however, witness received a report that the Chinese Government were asking for tenders, and as the Germans were then active competitors in China—that was the year 1923—withness was anxious that Great Britain should, if possible, get in there. Witness said he had never heard of a commission of 5 per cent. in respect of the fixing of a loan. Such a commission would be an impossible one. Five per cent. was the usual commission on orders received. Defendant company had always been willing to pay that commission to plaintiff's agency on orders received from the Chinese Government, but no orders were, in fact, obtained through plaintiff's agency.

Business in China

Cross-examined by Mr. Henderson, K.C.: It is common in China for two gentlemen to sit down with most serious faces and make out a formal agreement which means something quite different to what it appears to be and both of them know it?

Witness said he had no knowledge personally of how business was done in China, but knew that certain payments had to be made. Witness, said he approved of the business, but did not approve of the payments to the Chinese Government officials, and knew nothing about such payments till some time after they had been made. The whole business was left entirely to the syndicate, which had been formed for the purpose. Witness agreed that the rebates etc., to officials amounted to £80,000, and imagined the price of £220,000 of the contract was increased to £300,000 for that purpose. Plaintiff knew all that was being done and approved of it. Plaintiff and Mr. Birchal stayed their hands at defendant company's request. It was found impossible to do big business in China unless you had behind you the British Foreign Office and the British Legation in Peking.

Mr. Henderson: Your company is associated with companies carrying on business as bankers?—Yes, in a way.

For instance, in Hungary you are bankers?—We are largely interested in a bank.

You control it?—We have together with someone else a controlling share.

I think you are president?—I am a co-president.

Monopoly Contract Broken.

Witness said his company was doing business in Austria with the Government as large shareholders. The Marconi Co. lent money to associated companies in order to assist them in conducting their business. As far as he could remember he had never paid any commission to anybody in respect of money lent. The whole business the Marconi Co. had done with the Chinese Government was under the three contracts in question in this section, and the third contract had been violated by the Chinese Government because they gave a monopoly to the Marconi Co. and had given a contract to an American firm to the amount of many millions sterling. The Marconi Co. were disputing the right of the Chinese Government to enter into that contract.

Mr. Jowitt said the Marconi Co. had never disputed that plaintiff was entitled to commission at 5 per cent. on £66,000 in respect of the second contract when the Marconi Co. got payment under that contract.

His Lordship said he would give judgment at a subsequent date.

THE AUTONOMY OF HUNAN

Promise of Cancellation

Peking, May 2.

Gen. Chen Chia-mu, Military Commissioner and Commandant of the 25th Northern Division (formerly commanded by General Hsiao Yao-nan) has been instructed by Marshal Wu Pei-fu to remain at Yochow and not proceed to Changsha, for the present. The reason for this order, according to Chinese unofficial reports, is that there is a probability of Gen. Chao Heng-ti carrying out his promise to cancel the autonomy of Hunan at an early date.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICA AND THE BOXER INDEMNITY

China Relieved from Further Payments

Washington, May 7.

The House of Representatives today adopted by 211 votes to 114 a resolution relieving China from further payments of the Boxer Indemnity.—Reuter's American Service.

RAILWAY FUNDS AT TSINGTAO

Marshal Wu's Denial of Seizure

Peking, May 8.

Marshal Wu Pei-fu requests Reuter's Agency to state that there is no truth in the statements in the foreign press concerning his alleged seizure of railway funds at Tsingtao and elsewhere for military purposes.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PAYMENT OF PEKING POLICEMAN

New Method by Institution of a House Tax.

Peking, May 1

With regard to the scheme of instituting a house tax to raise funds, inter alia, for the payment of the metropolitan police, Mr. Wan Chun, Member of the House of Representatives, has lodged an interpellation with the Government. Mr. Wan points out that the metropolitan police are controlled by the Administration and should be paid by the Government. In the event of the public refusing to pay this tax, Mr. Wan asks whether or not the Government would feel relieved of its responsibility for their protection. Payment of the police by the municipal authorities should give the latter control over the police. This would require the whole present police system to be changed. Mr. Wan asks the Government to give him a definite reply explaining its attitude on the question.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE FUKIEN CAMPAIGN

Differences Between Naval and Civil Officials at Amoy: Decided in Favour of Navy

Peking, May 3.

According to a consular report received in Peking, Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei is expected to leave Nanking shortly for Amoy to settle the differences that have arisen over the local administration between Defence Commissioner Chang Yi and Admiral Yang Shu-chuang. The Defence Commissioner protested against the continued occupation of the city by the marines in a recent dispatch to Gen. Sun Chuan-fang, and Admiral Yang then appealed to the Naval authorities for support. Admiral Sah Chen-ping, whose marines control the Nantai section of Foochow and who is the Senior Naval Officer in Fukien, has refused to be drawn into the dispute at Amoy.—Reuter's Pacific Service

Peking, May 7.

The Cabinet to-day approved the proposal of the Minister of the Navy to appoint Vice-Admiral Yang Shou-chang Defence Commander of Amoy in accordance with Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei's recommendation.

Thus the question of the control of Amoy, which has recently been active has been settled in favour of the Navy.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

KIANGSU AND CHEKIANG

Complete Agreement Between Tuchuns Resulting from Discord Elsewhere

Peking, May 6.

A foreign official telegram from Shanghai states that Gen. Chi Hsieh-yuan, the Tuchun of Kiangsu, and Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang, the Tuchun of Chêkiang, have reached complete agreement, which was facilitated by the rivalry between Marshal Wu Pei-fu and Gen. Chi on the one hand, while the recent defeat of Gen. Lu's supporters in Fukien, Gen. Wang Yung-chuan and Admiral Tsang Chih-ping, placed Gen. Lu in a position in which he was bound to accept the opportunity of ending the friction between Kiangsu and Chêkiang.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA AND THE SOVIET

Moscow, May 4.

M. Davtian, the Assistant Soviet Representative in Peking, who has returned here, asserted to-day that China's public opinion was increasing its pressure on the Government in favour of the draft Russo-Chinese agreement. He believed that its signature would not long be delayed.—Reuter.

TUCHUN Hsiao Yao-nan has issued instructions to the Chief of Hankow Police to put certain restrictions upon the Chinese Race Club. In future, it is said, only the formal Spring and Autumn Meetings will be allowed and any racing carried out at other times is to be looked upon as simple gambling. Members participating in such events will be liable to arrest.

PROHIBITION

May 5.

DISCUSSION concerning the prohibition laws in the United States is so contentious and confusing, as our own correspondence columns have recently shown, that it may be well to state clearly our position in order to remove existing misunderstandings. With all wisely directed movements to promote the physical and moral welfare of mankind the "North-China Daily News" is in hearty sympathy. Therefore it approves all efforts to eliminate drunkenness and to improve the defective social conditions which so often conduce to it. We advocate the safeguarding of children from temptations to intemperance, and the closing of the drinking saloons in the United States we regard as a much needed reform because these places were usually associated with everything that was vile in political and social life. But when prohibitionists go much further and declare that the one and only way to suppress drunkenness is to make the consumption of even weak alcoholic beverages an offence against the law, and when they upbraid other countries for not taking the same prohibitive measures, we join issue with them on the ground that the success of prohibition has not yet been proved, and that the citizens of a free country should not be deprived of their individual moral freedom. As to statements concerning the efficacy or otherwise of prohibition, all that we publish are impartially drawn from American sources. It is regrettable these statements are so contradictory. On one side it is alleged that prohibition has brought the millennium; on the other, there is the equally positive assertion that the country was never so near utter lawlessness and perdition as it is now. As the whole subject is very complex, involving questions of politics, morals, physiology, biology and eugenics, it should be considered calmly, justly, and with an open mind.

It should be clearly understood that in what is here said the elimination of drunkenness is not the subject; the point in dispute concerns the control of the harmless private acts of individuals by the State. Therefore our first question is, has the State the right to formulate new moral principles, declaring acts to be morally or legally wrong which were never so held before, and which the citizen's own religion does not condemn. The question almost answers itself. With all respect we ask, is the average politician or the average voter in the United States really competent to exercise this spiritual power? Do the legislative bodies, whether Congress in Washington or the State legislatures, evoke the loyalty, reverence, and confidence of the American people? It may be contended that the State as a purely political organization has the inherent right to enact any laws it deems necessary, regardless of the rights that may be claimed by the individual. This is, or was, the German contention. The German people practically worshipped the State and sold their souls to it. They accepted implicitly the pronouncement of one of their greatest philosophers that the State "is the absolute power on earth; it is its own end and object; it is the ultimate end which has the highest right against the individual." Under this system of government the nation unquestionably became very efficient. What was the end? Having surrendered their moral freedom, the nation followed their leaders blindly, and terrible disasters came when the leaders went astray. On the other hand, English writers of political influence maintain that the power of the State to control the private life of the individual should be confined within very narrow limits, as they believe that it is only through moral freedom and the training which it gives that a people can reach its highest political and moral development.

We can logically take our stand on either side but we ought not to change from one side to the other according to our predilections. The Prohibitionists, consciously or not, stand for the absolute power of the State, and in doing so they condemn their ancestors who fought against the State because they held there should be no taxation without representation, also their Pacifist friends who had conscientious objections to army service. If an American patriot and orator of this generation, a Patrick Henry, were to exclaim passionately, "Give me Liberty or give me Death," the Prohibitionists would reply, "No, Patrick Henry, we cannot give you liberty as we are afraid you may abuse it; you must drink water whether you like it or not. Nor shall we give you death, unless you happen to drink impure water without first boiling or filtering it." This is paternalism in government carried to an extreme degree. The moderate consumption of alcohol is not per se a moral offence, and in the long run the State is best served when its citizens are morally free.

Next, as to the ideal of the Prohibitionists. What are their ultimate hopes and expectations? One of our correspondents, eloquent and enthusiastic, confidently predicts that when all Americans are total abstainers, "then in wealth, health, character, power and achievement, America will show the world to what heights a self-governing people can rise when freed from the chains of alcohol." This is splendid. But there is one fallacy. It is quietly assumed that alcohol is the root of all evil, and that abstainers are shining patterns of all the virtues. Unfortunately, the temptations of the world, the flesh and the devil remain even when alcohol is banished. There are nationalities at the present day which have religously abstained from alcohol for hundreds of years, yet they are not at all remarkable for their moral and political progress; indeed, it would be interesting to obtain the opinions of Greeks and Armenians concerning the moral qualities of one of the most noted of these nations as manifested during the Great War and afterwards. Another correspondent wrote a week ago that Prohibition is an experiment in efficiency and that as long as the results of the law are financially beneficial, it will not be repealed. Efficiency in what? In these days of scientific burglary, efficient burglars are probably total abstainers. Is efficiency an end in itself, to be worshipped as Oriental fishermen long ago used to worship their nets? Some Americans appear to think so. An American writer in describing the life of a friend who drank nothing but black coffee, remarks in a recent "Atlantic Monthly," "As with most powerful business men in America to-day, his business was not a trade nor an intellectual pursuit, but a game of wild excitement, played day and night, not for money or the advancement of knowledge, or the benefit of mankind, but for the excitement of the game itself. . . . . His whole life was one huge gamble—which he ultimately lost." Is this the kind of life to which we are to be driven? Our Prohibitionists have little to say of the joy, beauty, human companionship, and other gracious things of life; they speak of nothing but wealth (which is apparently made the measure of national greatness), health, character (quality undefined), power, achievement and efficiency. We are reluctantly forced to the conclusion that prohibition hopes are very materialistic.

We have stated above that with all wisely directed efforts to promote the moral and physical welfare of mankind we are in hearty sympathy and therefore approve of everything that is being done to get rid of drunkenness and the bad social conditions which so often conduce to it. But we do not agree with the Prohibitionists when they attempt to make men sober by force rather than by persuasion, and we hold that to make it a legal offence for anyone to drink a weak alcoholic beverage is an unwise interference with the moral freedom of the individual, and that to grant such powers to the State leads to that worship of it which has caused the downfall of at least one European State. We also maintain that the hopes and expectations of the Prohibitionists, if realized, would create no earthly paradise.

Further, the science of eugenics does not give much support to Prohibitionists. The consumption of alcoholic liquors is coeval with civilization and generally seems to satisfy some physical need. What led to the formation of this instinct, habit, or need is an interesting question. Alcohol in moderation gives a temporary feeling of well-being and promotes sociability, but there must have been other causes. It is a reasonable conjecture that for long ages moderate drinking was beneficial in the struggle for existence. When swallowed in its natural state water is by no means a harmless fluid. Totally ignorant of the dangers of impure water in every generation multitudes of those who drank it perished. Epidemics of cholera at all times and in all lands have swept away with appalling rapidity tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of people. Typhoid fever is another dangerous water-borne disease. For years in the United States 35,000—40,000 persons died of it annually. So late as the beginning of the present century, in the South African war the British Army consisting of 557,653 officers and men had 57,684 cases of typhoid fever with 8,225 deaths, while only 7,582 men died of wounds received in battle. What would have been the mortality all down the ages if impure water had been the only beverage? Prohibitionists should frankly acknowledge that if alcohol has slain its hundreds or thousands, water-borne diseases have slain millions. Between a glass of water heavily infected with the germs of typhoid fever or cholera, and a mild alcoholic beverage free from such germs, only those who prefer death to liberty will prefer the former. It may be that with the purification of drinking water our habits should change. That is a point which remains to be proved. Physiologists still have their problems concerning the action of alcohol in the human body. Some of our Prohibition correspondents have quoted Professor Starling, yet he says: "Our knowledge of the physiology of the nervous system is not sufficiently profound to enable us to give a complete description of the first effects of alcohol in purely physiological language," and these words are also applicable as to the part taken by alcohol in the physiology of nutrition. Experiments in glass tubes are not conclusive.

However, whether a moderate amount of alcohol is injurious or beneficial, there can be no doubt that Nature eliminates families prone to drunkenness, because the failing is evidence usually of a defective family strain that handicaps in the struggle for existence. Heartless though it may seem to say so, from the eugenic point of view this is a better way than artificial protection as the survivors are of a higher type. The Jews at one time were not a very sober people as their sacred writings testify; but they are so now although not prohibitionists, and the contributions of this marvellous people to the higher type of the human race are inestimable. So with the nations of southern Europe that drink weak wine; drunkenness is ordinarily uncommon among them, because those with a propensity to drunkenness have been weeded out; similarly, the "six-bottle men" and their descendants have been weeded out from the English aristocracy. It is a mistake to assert that drunkards must first have been moderate drinkers. There are people of defective strain who have been carefully guarded by relatives so that they knew nothing of alcohol, yet on reaching adolescence and happening to take it without knowing the danger, a terrible appetite was awakened, as if a lighted match had started an inextinguishable conflagration: thereafter they drank and went steadily downhill. As these defectives can transmit their infirmities to their descendants, they are a weakness to the nation and to preserve them artificially is not in accordance with the principles of eugenics. They may be fairly safe under prohibition laws, but there is no certainty that a nation will always pursue the same policy. History shows us that governments and peoples are always swaying from one extreme to the other. A period of puritanical severity under a Cromwell may be followed by a morally ruinous reaction under a pleasure-loving king. The saying of the English bishop that he would rather see England free than made sober by act of Parliament is not to be lightly dismissed. It is considerations such as these which make us doubt the wisdom of prohibition. Once more and in conclusion, let it be clearly understood that we do not approve of drunkenness, we admit the right of every man to be a total abstainer if he chooses, we are in sympathy to no small extent with the Prohibitionists, but we claim that no citizen of a free country should be deprived of his moral freedom. Now let the discussion go merrily on. The word "merrily" is used advisedly, as the pens of some of our Prohibition correspondents seem to have been dipped in gall and wormwood. After all, in morals more is done by reasonable and pleasant persuasion than by harsh force.

THE N. SZECHUEN RD. BLACKMAIL

May 7.

LEST any reader should think we have been giving undue prominence to the story of the recent disturbance over the North Szechuen Road widening, we would ask him to read the report giving the full facts of the case which appears to-day on the front page of our section. And those facts are that the whole episode was a very ugly case of blackmail. The agitators demanded Tls. 50,000 of the landlord and when they could not get it, they turned on hired rowdies to make trouble. They did unfortunately squeeze the tenants for $10,000. With students shouting for "sovereign rights" one can to a certain extent sympathize. Wrongheaded as we many think them, they are inspired with a feeling of patriotism. For the blackmailing agitator, who brings the Settlement perilously near to a riot for his own selfish ends, one can only regret that corporal punishment is not available. We must regretfully add that the Chinese newspapers come very badly out of the affair. Of the Chapei police proclamation, which we reproduce, they must have known, but never a word have they said of it. Why? It is by no means improbable too, that they knew a good deal of the truth of the story. If they have so little decent feeling towards the administration under whose protection they live and prosper, that they did not hesitate to fill their columns with the palpable and inflammatory falsehoods which they have been publishing, at least they might have thought of their countrymen whom they were exposing to the dangers of a riot. From the professional agitator we expect nothing better. From the best Chinese newspapers of Shanghai we do. They have sadly stained their reputation.

In the general upshot it is a matter for congratulation that the ejection of the tenants and demolition of the premises for road-widening passed off with so little actual disturbance. It is disquieting to think that at one time Sikh police were drawn up with their carbines at the "ready" and to realize that we were within an ace of very serious trouble. The police handled a difficult situation with equal firmness and discretion. A little too much of either quality might have provoked the resistance which it was their duty to avoid and, that the critical moment passed without the necessity for a resort to drastic measures, is a very welcome ending to a most deplorable affair. That this part of Szechuen Road is in urgent need of widening and straightening is beyond dispute. There is no place in Shanghai where so much traffic passes over such a narrow and tortuous path. Accidents do happen and the marvel is that they are not more frequent. Chinese residents know this as well as foreigners and it is extraordinary that the agitators, seeking to revenge themselves on the landlord who would not be blackmailed, should have been able to persuade respectable shopkeepers to lend themselves to an agitation so fraught with danger to themselves.

Blackmailers apart, however, there is always a certain section of Chinese with whom it is hopeless to reason on any question about which it is possible to drag in the bugbear called "sovereign rights." They are like the Stuart Kings who held that they had a divine prerogative to govern wrongly. Like them, too, they are unable to see that a possession of "sovereign rights" presupposes a recognition of "sovereign duties." They imagine that a stubborn opposition to all progress is a mark of patriotism whereas it is, as a matter of fact, both unsocial and unpatriotic. It is now nearly fifty years since the first Shanghai-Woosung railway was laid down, running from the place now occupied by the temple to the Queen of Heaven north of Honan Road bridge to Woosung. The laying of that railway was a great feat for those days and the foreign merchants who invested their money in a very doubtful enterprise deserved well of China. Their ancestors ought to have been ennobled to the third generation at least. On the contrary it happened to them as to the men who now propose to widen North Szechuen Road. They were execrated by the fathers of the present generation of obstructionists and the railway itself was torn up; it was a manifest encroachment on the twin gods "sovereign rights" and fengshui. The present generation of Chinese knows that those who opposed the railway fifty years ago were mistaken, but the men of fifty years ago were just as sincere and patriotic in their opposition to the railway as the men of to-day are to road widening and posterity will pass an equal measure of condemnatory judgment on both. There was the same opposition to steamers. When it was proposed that inland rivers should be opened to steamboat traffic there was an outcry that China's rights were being trampled on and that Chinese boatmen would be ruined for the profit of the greedy foreigner. To-day there is scarcely a river without its fleet of steam launches making for swift and easy transport as compared with the old junk traffic. Ninety-nine per cent. of the trade is in Chinese bands and "sovereign rights" seems to get along all right in spite of the innovation.

But no argument has any weight against unreasoning prejudice. If it had it would be easy to recall that scarcely more than a stone's throw from the place where the road is being widened there was a disastrous fire little more than a month ago. A silk filature factory was destroyed and a number of women workers lost their lives in the conflagration. The approach to the factory was by the usual narrow and winding alleys to be found in all Chinese territory. The fire engines could not get close to the building and the poor workers were trapped without hope of rescue. The whole district between North Szechuen Road and the railway is now a dense congeries of alley-ways without one good road to give access to it. Little more than five years ago it was a vacant space on which the coolies dumped the rubbish collected from the dust-bins in the neighbourhood. More than once the Municipal Council essayed to pierce the waste land that has now become a confused mass of houses, with a wide road which would have been of inestimable benefit to the health and wealth of all residents in the locality. The obstructionists, backed by official assistance, succeeded in preventing this beneficial object from being accomplished and so turned what might have been a healthful, residential, Chinese quarter into a slum. And the pity of it is that even educated Chinese applaud their action.

THE KID-GLOVE CADETS

May 8.

In the closing years of the Manchu dynasty two British naval instructors, one a navigator the other an engineer, were lent to the old Imperial Naval College at Nanking to train young men for the Chinese Navy. Of the normal difficulties of their work, even as they arose in teaching the students things which they ought to have known, it is unnecessary to speak. In the river at that time one or two cruisers were lying and it occurred to the engineer-instructor, who was a large, hopeful, breezy personality of undismayed optimism, that there was no reason why these should not be used for practical demonstration. The then Viceroy, the late Tuan Fang, was not unnecessarily eager to provide the necessary coal. However, a few cruises were actually made and regularly once a week there was a demonstration among the cold engines. Did the students appear grateful or eager to profit by their instructor's efforts? They did not. While the British naval engineer crawled round about and in and out among the machinery, perspiring and oily, they stood back as carefully avoiding whatever might soil their hands and clothes as possible and observed with the detached condescension of the truly superior man. They too, like the cadets of the Hwah Jah, had gone, or proposed to go, to sea to be not sailors but captains.

Very deplorable, in the midst of much laughable, is the story we publish to-day of the training-ship Hwah Jah, which awakes these recollections of the old Naval College; and much sympathy must be felt for her captain and officers, who found themselves in an undignified, not to say dangerous position and have ultimately had no alternative but to resign. The Hwah Jah, it will be remembered, was despatched with some ceremony, not to say a flourish of trumpets. It was the first time in China's history that such an experiment had been made. Yet from the outset it became clear that her outfitting had been performed in a very perfunctory way. We do not doubt that the syndicate which financed her paid for everything necessary but, in the usual way, the work was not done. As for the cadets we may sympathize with them in their discovery that instead of going round the world they were to carry coal for a Japanese firm. It was a double indignity. But after all, they were sent to sea to learn seamanship and while this could have been learnt as well on one voyage as another, they showed utter inability to grasp the first duty of a seaman, which is to do the job that has to be done first and take the rough with the smooth uncomplainingly. But we were forgetting: these young gentlemen went to sea to be captains, not sailors; they must not dirty their hands; they must not exert themselves before food; and certainly they must not neglect to wear spats. One wonders if they ever paused to consider how much rough and dirty work a captain of the British navy or mercantile marine has had to do before he reached the bridge.

Seventeen years ago an American athletic teacher, coming to Shanghai to teach Chinese boys physical culture, found that some of them literally could not jump off the ground with both feet together. Their ancestors had never done such a thing and the necessary muscles had to be taught to obey the order of the brain from the beginning. But with the recent cultivation of football and cross-country running among Chinese, one might have hoped for a different spirit among the cadets of the Hwah Jah. Is the tradition of centuries that manual labour is derogatory, which inculcates the long fingernail habit, to show that the owner has never worked with his hands, still unbreakable? Or is it China literally cannot deal in realities and that everything she does is just a gigantic pretence, in which, if face be saved, the whole end is gained? That, it is to be feared is the root of the trouble, when one considers the imposing laws which no one obeys, the armies which never fight and the students who appear to believe that a smattering of Western learning is an unchallengeable passport for high office.

By the way, one of the most curious features of the Hwah Jah episode is that the Chinese ex-Engineer Admiral, now in charge, is said to possess an engineer's certificate No. 0001 issued by the Chinese Department of the Mercantile Marine. Readers will remember some correspondence in these columns a few weeks ago on this very point, that China has no machinery for certificating her officers. It looks as if that correspondence had borne fruit. But it would be interesting to know under what regulations this certificate was issued, as, to the best of our knowledge, China possesses no shipping laws of any description, apart from the altogether unavoidable observance of the international rules for the prevention of collisions at sea, regulations which must be and are accepted by any country owning ships.

BEAVERS AND RATS

May 8.

An American writer recently stated that the great mass of his fellow countrymen could be divided into what he termed beavers and rats, or in other words, the builders and the destroyers. In the earlier days of the States the beavers were in the great majority, in fact rats scarcely existed. The former built up America because it was in their nature to build. Then the rat people came along to house under the roof that others had constructed and it is their nature to destroy. The state of our civilization and its continuance depend on the proportion of the beavers to the rats. The extreme position is reached when the latter outnumber the former. Then civilization collapses as in the phase of the rule of the unfit through which Russia is passing. But then the rats, true to type, turn upon and destroy each other, the result being chaos and anarchy.

To-day, possibly more than at any time in the world's history, we need to keep our eyes on the human rats. It is true there have always existed a number of these vermin in every civilized country, but modern conditions tend to make them increase in both numbers and influence. The rat to-day works in a more scientific and business-like manner than did the underminer of former days. He employs means of propaganda formerly unknown. He makes use of the smattering of what passes for learning and the general lack of a true education which, in their short-sighted efforts to economize, legislators have imposed on their constituents. The spirit of the age favours the efforts of the men of the rat type. The pioneer spirit does not flourish as it did in the old days. The growth of the great towns and cities, while it has in some respects promoted enterprise, has, on the other hand caused many people to live and work under conditions which can only inculcate discontent with their lot. As we know, the occupations of large numbers of people resolve themselves into mere mechanical forms of labour, and, however well it be paid, the human mind is so constituted that it revolts against mere mechanical work. It seeks to expand its wings; it feels the need for pastures new, while still modern conditions fail to offer the scope that those of the old days held. There is the rats' opportunity. They whisper that the only way to obtain release from a burdensome position is to destroy. They do not see, perhaps do not want to see that revolution may be brought about by peaceful methods. They only want to destroy.

The rat species is, however, not confined to any one grade of society. It is to be found among the deep-dyed Tories as well as among the Communists. The man who fails to see that real democracy is a growing power and that the people must come to have more and more say in matters of government may be just as much a rodent as he who preaches revolution. Fortunately the predominance of the rats is a part of the inevitable after math of war. That cannot cease to be felt for some years yet. But there are plenty of beavers in the world and more and more are conditions becoming favourable for their much-needed work.

A FOOL OR A PHYSICIAN?

May 9.

Nobody can possibly feel at his best in the sort of hot, damp, sticky weather we have been experiencing for the past two or three days. No time, therefore, could have been more auspiciously chosen for the week's Health Campaign which is now being intensively prosecuted by a number of institutions both Chinese and foreign. For those who know the Chinese most intimately tell us that, even though in their own country, they are just as susceptible to changes of weather as foreigners. This seems rather at variance with the fact that Chinese flourish in every climate from Pole to Equator. But paradox and the Son of Han are interchangeable terms. Undoubtedly Chinese are weighed down by heat and every house-mistress knows that a sudden cold snap makes them dull and heavy, when they huddle together in the kitchen and let all the other fires in the house go out. So the health campaign organizers have an excellent atmosphere in which to work.

Every man, says the proverb, is a fool or a physician at forty. By which, we take it, the philosopher really meant to imply that anyone who has not sown his wild oats and learnt that "ginger is hot i' the mouth" by the time he is forty is past praying for. In the literal sense, we are all physicians nowadays at a very much earlier age. And this not only in the Far East, where we discuss our insides with a freedom and wealth of detail staggering to the new comer from Europe. But all over the West, and increasingly so, we are happy to think, in the East as well, the inherited, almost instinctive knowledge of hygiene is astonishing. In this at least we may boast that "we indeed are greater men than our fathers." In the reign of Henry III, when the most beautiful cathedrals were being built, an open kennel ran down the middle of Westminster Hall; the floors of the wealthiest baronial halls were strewn with rushes into which the refuse from the table was swept pell-mell, to be left unchanged, perhaps, for weeks; and plague was endemic in the dark, narrow and filthy streets. There were a few men who were ahead of their time: Dr. Caius, in founding his college at Cambridge five and a half centuries ago, was specially insistent that all rooms must be arranged to let in as much sunlight and air as possible, which he realized were the best check on disease. But much nearer our own times, knowledge of rules of health, now common to all, was non-existent. The Lady Napier whose husband was Governor of the West Indies in Nelson's time, describes in her memoirs the gargantuan meals which the merchants ate several times a day, under the popular belief that food was less nourishing in the West Indies than in Europe, (one has heard of this idea in China too), further fortifying themselves with huge draughts of brandy. Sir Frederick Treves's recently published recollections gave a perfectly appalling account of surgical operations in his early days, when one bowl of water and one sponge were considered enough for washing the wounds of a whole ward-full of patients. And it is certainly not more than thirty years since the night air was considered to be peculiarly malignant and closed windows, heavy curtains and feather beds were indispensable to every well ordered home.

In matters of hygiene, as in nearly everything else, the Chinese are a law to themselves. It is the fashion to laugh at their notions of medicine, which certainly in many respects are absurd and even horrible; but at a medical conference in Shanghai some three years ago, it was frankly admitted that some things in Chinese medical practice were well worth preserving. In domestic and social ways China is largely where England was in Henry III's day. Yet the Chinese are certainly lovers of fresh air; they fully understand the importance of hot cooked food; and their methods of agriculture solve one problem of all communities which is the source of many ills. But it would be idle to pretend that there was not abundant scope for health campaigns; and while we wish them yet more success, it is only fair to pay a tribute to the work that they and similar propagandists have already done. There is, for instance, no difficulty now in getting any Chinese in Shanghai to come and be vaccinated; and even in an old-world conservative city like Anking, as we were told the other day, a vaccination campaign achieved great results A special meed of praise should be given in this connexion, to the great influence of medical missions. There is not one of which we hear that does not annually report increasing demands on workers; and from these centres knowledge in the ordinary things of domestic life goes out in an ever widening circle by which the health of the whole nation is gradually bettered. Nor is there any lack of enthusiastic Young China coadjutors, without whom indeed very little could be done. These movements are less spectacular than banditry and politics. But they are not to be forgotten as we look to China's future.

THE ROUGH-HEWN ENDS

May 10.

The story of the arrangement made for Old Bill's declining years leads one to the reflexion, not for the first time, that the destiny of animals is just as strange and unaccountable as that of human beings. One of Old Bill's owners, it will be remembered, lives alongside Lord Rosebery, near Epsom, and the latter has become so much interested in the pony's career that he has asked to be allowed to give him a home in the paddocks of the Durdans when he is too old to race any more. Why should this one pony out of the hundreds that come down from Mongolia every year be thus singled out for favour and distinction? Why has the racing public so entirely taken him to its heart, that when he canters out to the start, cheers break out all along the rails? Other ponies have had records equally wonderful and more so, Blackberry, Cotswold, Marengo, Bornite. But they never captivated popular imagination quite as Old Bill has done. Furthermore, destiny does not necessarily depend on physical ability to do a certain thing better than competitors. It would be possible, up to a point, to breed A 1 men and animals instead of C 3's. But their destiny is beyond control. We may say that much of Old Bill's popularity is bound up in his being happily named. But that only puts the question further back: by what chance were his owners so happily inspired? Furthermore we all feel that there is something "cute" in his personality; he has a look in his eye which comes from something within him; like many animals he has a keen though primitive sense of humour; and he never fails to respond to the applause by waltzing crabwise through the crowd and pretending to do his best to knock over the cinema and snapshot photographers.

As of Old Bill, so of other ponies and animals. Why should one kitten or puppy be born into a household which will make much of it all its life, provide it with the best food and call in veterinary surgeons when it is unwell, while another is born into a slum, gets nothing to eat but what it can hunt up in the gutter and lives the life of an Ishmael to the end of its days? Mere prettiness cannot explain it. Many a gutter cat would be a handsome beast if cared for; and many a parlour favourite is artistically a mistake or, if a dog, a shocking mongrel. Destiny again the inexplicable. Moreover, destiny extends its capricious influence over inanimate things also. We have in mind a certain household into which there entered at Christmas time a little toy monkey that walks by clockwork rather cleverly. Instantly he became a universal favourite. Christened Eli, he has been provided with a special little bed to sleep or nap in (when he is supposed to feel tired) and takes all his meals with the family. Everybody who comes to the house falls under his fascinations and when, the other day, he was supposed to have a cold and kept his bed, one lady gravely brought him a little kettle to steam his throat. It may be said that this was merely the ordinary concession of a grown-up making play for the children. In part, yes: but undoubtedly some part of it was a tribute to Eli's winning little ways. For just as Old Bill's personality has undoubtedly developed in answer to the crowd's fondness, so do the toys on which children lavish special affection become endowed with something which cannot be explained by any material combination of pigments and fabrics. And so too, do the toys of grown-ups. Motor-cars undoubtedly have a soul and moods of their own: any motorist who takes some part in looking after his own car, as contrasted with the man who leaves everything to the chauffeur, knows this perfectly well. There are days when the car is in a happy temper and days when she is not, and no material explanation as to the effect of atmosphere on her component parts, or of lubrication, will explain it. Her driver knows better. Again, we are all familiar with that curious fact of the individuality of rooms and houses. Some are restful and pleasing, some are a perpetual irritant. Furniture has nothing to do with it. The most charmingly furnished room can fail to charm, where one that is utterly casual and haphazard in its colours and arrangement is a haven of rest and good feeling. They have picked up something from the personality of the people who use them and made it a living part of themselves.

We remember reading a story about a boy and a monkey, who had an uncanny affinity for each other; which the old naturalist who kept the monkey explained by the theory that animals' bodies contain the souls of fallen and worn-out men and women, so atrophied and shrunken as henceforward to be useless for human bodies. The idea is altogether repellant. Surely if the like spirit animates a dog or cat that dwells in man, it is on the up, not the down, grade. And who can say that it does not? The late Archdeacon Wilberforce firmly believed that he would meet his dogs in heaven. "I am much surer of meeting them," he would add, "than a lot of people that I know—and I would much rather." What then about the so-called inanimate things of life? May it not be that the beliefs of scientist and pantheist touch and complete each other? The scientist teaches us that nothing in all nature is wasted, that there is only transmutation and that a candle is just as much existent when apparently burnt out as before it was lighted. The pantheist sees divinity everywhere, like St. Francis of Assisi who spoke of Brother Wind and Sister Rain, and the logic of what we have been discussing is that that divinity might go much farther than we commonly suppose. In the history of mankind there is a good deal of "going up and down in the same place" and civilization as measured by aeroplanes and wireless telephony is not necessarily in advance of that recorded in Pyramids or Parthenon. Eppur si muove. We no longer burn witches and there is decidedly more altruism in the world than there was a hundred years ago. Assuredly there is such a thing as progress, but whether it derives from new life continually pouring into the world or old life repeating itself in expanded form is beyond mortal ken. Perhaps in a future existence Old Bill will win the Derby and Eli will be a real monkey and give performances in public like Consul. One rather likes to think so; for then it must follow that all the other animals and teddy bears and toy dogs now pursuing their unnoticed lives—not without secret envy, perhaps, of their more brilliant mates—are on the ascending scale and will yet have their chance to shine.

Dr. Wellington Koo's plan for the construction of a museum in Peking is making good progress, says the Eastern News Agency. A commission is first to be organized with 15 committee-men including Dr. W. W. Yen, Mr. Kao Ling-wei and Mr. Chang Kuo-kan under the chairmanship of Dr. Wellington Koo, and the expenses required are to be derived from a portion of the Boxer indemnity due to the United States. The site for the construction of the museum is to be in the old Palace grounds.

It was announced at the meeting of the Russian Refugee Committee held on Thursday afternoon at the rooms of the King's Daughters' Society that arrangements had been made for the repatriation in the near future of 50 more Russian men from the Eldorado. These men applied for assistance, being very desirous of returning to Russia, and the committee is making all arrangements and advancing what money is necessary, without, however, giving any guarantee as to safe conduct. The two previous groups, of 47 and 50 respectively, which were repatriated previously have sent back very encouraging reports It was stated that the number of applicants at the Soup Kitchen had risen to 700.

The announcement by the Government that grants will be made in the event of officers on ships on the Hongkong register being killed or disabled by reason of piratical attacks, has brought forth the question as to whether this concession is meant to be retrospective. The grants, state the Government, will be made provided that in no case will a grant be made unless the Government is satisfied that the Piracy Regulations have been properly observed. A "China Mail" representative was informed that any claim previous to the announcement would be considered by the Government. This means, that relatives or representatives of officers concerned will have to satisfy the Government that at the time of the attack, the Regulations were properly carried out.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Our New Dress.

Readers will note a difference in the appearance of the "North-China Herald" to-day, which we hope will prove a great improvement on the fashion in dress, or type, we have just discarded.

The type that has been used in printing this paper, probably since it was first published, has been what is known as "modern roman." This is a type face whose principal characteristics are the thick and thin lines that form the letters. Here is an enlarged example:

"Three Blind Mice"

It will be seen that the thin lines are very thin and, consequently, unless they are printed on a slow speed press they have a tendency to disappear altogether and give the page a grey appearance. Further, they are harder on the eyes than some of the newer type faces—a greater strain, though probably an unconscious one, being required to define them.

The new type now used is halfway between the modern roman and the old style roman, and is known as Century face. The thick lines of the modern roman have been slightly lightened and the thin lines slightly thickened. The type must speak for itself, however. An enlarged example for comparison with the above is here shown:

"Three Blind Mice"

But not only is our type face changed. The linotype machines we have used for the past 10 or 15 years have seen their best days and have been partly replaced this week-end by a new battery of eight new models, making ten in all, which we have every confidence will increase our speed of production and improve the appearance of the paper.

The Road Agitation

The violent attack levelled on the "North-China Daily News" by the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" indicates ignorance of the subject on the part of the writer, equalled only by the ignorance with which he credits us. In the first place the statement that it was the workmen who first attacked the innocent tenants, and that the huge crowd outside the houses offered no violence, is a flat falsehood. The reason such a large squad of police was called to the scene was the threatening attitude of the crowd, whose leaders were actually known to the authorities for agitators and bad characters. That a few tenants, unaided, could prove so dangerous to a large force of armed police that it was necessary to level rifles at them is too absurd to be further dealt with. The opposition offered by the tenants was of a very half-hearted description, and would never have been offered at all but for the encouragement of the crowd outside. With regard to the question of sovereign rights, we can simply reiterate our assertion that the land is registered at H.B.M. Consulate in the name of Brandt & Rodgers, a British firm, by whom it was sold to the Shanghai Municipal Council. Surely the Council have every right to do as they wish with their own property, especially when what they propose doing is of benefit to the entire community. The tenants were notified of the proposed demolition some months ago when Brandt & Rodgers proposed it themselves, but as soon as it is noised abroad the Shanghai Municipal Council intends the demolition, we immediately have a hysterical outcry and disgraceful scenes instigated by anti-foreign agitation.

"Truth" and Swaraj

"Truth," admirable paper as it is in many ways, has never had a reputation for being much in love with Imperial ideas and there is therefore the greater pleasure in quoting the following comment from it on the recent tactics of Swaraj:—

The Swarajists are forcing on a critical issue in India, but if they persist it is chiefly the permanence of the Home Rule experiment itself that will be in issue. The rejection of the Finance Bill in the Legislative Assembly and in the Provincial Councils is an undisguised attempt to make government under the present system impossible. The Government has been able to defeat the attempt in the Legislative Council, but, as I understand the affair, only because the short-sighted tactics of the Swarajists gave a loophole for carrying the Bill over the heads of the Assembly. Things cannot go on in this way. In effect, India has been granted a certain measure of self-government "on probation." If her representatives cannot make any better use of this concession than to "hold up" the Government, they demonstrate that the concession was a mistake and must be rescinded. As to that there is practically no difference of opinion in this country, whatever temporary unpleasantness may result from reversion to the old method of government.

The only further comment one would offer on this is that Swaraj's real object is precisely what "Truth" says at the end of the first sentence—to put the whole Home Rule experiment in India in issue. The Swarajists, so far from welcoming the Montagu-Chelmsford scheme are violently opposed to it, because it is genuinely democratic. It would, in fulfilment, make all sorts of people in India whom the dictates of caste cause the Swarajists to regard as so much mud, politically on an equality with them. Therefore they are fighting it tooth and nail. What the Swarajists really want is not democracy, but bureaucracy, a supreme oligarchy composed of themselves with a British army near but out of sight to protect them from the consequences of their folly at home and the British fleet just over the horizon to shield them from abroad. Though there is

Architects and Builders Compendium

China is one of the few countries in the world where no attempt has been made to collect and classify in book form the mass of local information that should be at the elbow of every architect, builder, civil engineer, and prospective or present house or land owner. The demand for such a work has been increasingly felt for a number of years, and the Compendium now published will meet that demand.

Shanghai, in common with many other Treaty Ports of China, is under divided control—International, French and Chinese. In the International Settlement there is a number of Consulates at which land may be registered at varying fees and under numerous regulations. The Compendium classifies these fees and regulations and also contains a mine of information relating to water, gas and electricity rates, costs of local material and labour, etc., that not only every architect must possess, but that is necessary to every prospective landlord and house owner.

The book is divided into four parts, as follows:—

Part I.—General Information connected with Land Property and Buildings:—

- Digest of Municipal Assessment
- Notes on Land Registration and Purchase in Shanghai.
- Information as to Taxes and Municipal Council Fees.
- Charges of Waterworks Co., Telephone Co., and Electric Light Dept.
- Consular Fees.
- Shanghai Municipal Building Rules.
- Architects' and Surveyors' Charges.
- Notes on Building Contracts Forms, Lease Forms, Mortgage Forms.

Part II.—Technical Information for Architects, Builders and Civil Engineers:—

- Memoranda as to Strength, Weight and Properties of Materials.
- Price List of Building Materials and Labour.
- Information as to Local Conditions (i.e., soil, water, etc.)
- Requirements and useful data for estimating cost of buildings.
- Notes on Artesian Wells, etc.

Part III.—A Directory containing:—

- List of Architects and Consulting Engineers in Shanghai.
- List of Architects and Consulting Engineers in Hankow
- List of Building Contractors in Shanghai.

Part IV.—Catalogue of Building Material, etc.

- Alphabetical Index of Advertisers.
- Alphabetical Index of Goods Advertised.
- Advertisements of Building Materials and Supplies classified in Sections.

In addition to the above, the Compendium also contains

Maps of Shanghai and Hankow.

The map of Shanghai is the latest map drawn up by the Municipal Council (reduced in size) and contains many new roads hitherto unmapped.

The subscription to the Compendium is TEN DOLLARS MEX. Future editions will be supplied at FIVE DOLLARS per copy provided that the previous edition is returned.

no caste in China, the situation is much the same—a predatory ruling class, filled with profoundest contempt for "the stupid people." Unluckily there is no much-abused but efficient Raj to see that the work of government is done.

When the Legations "Fell"

The "Saturday Review" contains an extremely interesting recollection of the late Mr. R. S. Gundry, formerly editor of this paper, from one of its correspondents.

The death of Mr. R. S. Gundry, the well known authority on Chinese matters, reminds us of the days when all Europe was scrambling for a bit of China and the Boxers were singing the hymn of hell, he writes. Gundry, who edited the "North China Herald," and set going that powerful society, the China Association, was against the policy of grab. But the "Saturday Review," for which Gundry wrote on China during all those epic times, will most remember him as the man who —when it was everywhere believed, and the "Times" and "Daily Mail" had stated in detail, that all the foreign legations in Peking had been burned and the Ministers and their staffs murdered, printing memoirs of the dead—had the pluck to question the report and declare his belief that all were safe. It was Gundry contra mundum. Unfortunately the editor of that day preferred to put his confidence in the world. The significant point was that Gundry came to his conclusion on no information—for he had none—but from his knowledge and understanding of China and the Chinese. But Gundry carried his knowledge lightly—a fine old English gentleman of infinite charm.

By the way it has never been satisfactorily explained who sent the famous "Daily Mail" description of the supposed end of the Legations though it is on record that the late Lord Northchiffe changed his mind three times before finally deciding to publish.

Diogenes up to Date

The "Soir," of Paris, has set itself, like Diogenes, to find an honest man, and has chosen a rather ingenious means of making the test. It caused a remittance of five francs to be sent from a private address in pretended mistake to members of different occupations, and has published the proportions of each class which returned the money. Here are the results. Politics and literature divided the first place with 80 per cent., while Civil Servants, doctors, and chimney-sweeps leaned to virtue's side by a narrower majority. Among clergymen and magistrates the balance was regrettably the other way, while the cases of restitution among business men were less than one in twenty. The average of honesty proved to be 30 per cent. On the whole one is rather surprised that it was so high. The curious thing is to notice the different categories in which the eighth commandment does not seem to apply. For example, books: there are many people who would be most indignant if their honesty were impeached, who nevertheless appear to think that books borrowed need never be returned. Umbrellas too are apparently considered fair game. It is useless to battle with tradition in these respect. But what is to be thought of the people who deliberately bag expensive opera cloaks and scarves in places of entertainment and even clubs?

Japanese Killing of Chinese

Apropos of our Tokio correspondent's strictures to-day on the sentences passed on Japanese guilty of killing Koreans, the "Osaka Mainichi" reports that the Japanese Government has agreed to negotiate with China on the subject of the killing of large numbers of Chinese in the confusion following the great earthquake. This is interesting news (says the "Japan Chronicle") in view of the fact that Dr. C. T. Wang's visit to Japan to investigate the murders was denounced in the Diet at Tokio as an insult to Japan. The "Mainichi" breaks the news very gently to its readers, mentioning the negotiations on this episode at the end of a long list of minor affairs in respect of which Japan has claims against China. The paper says:

"An agreement having been reached between the Japanese and Chinese diplomatic authorities that the many problems still outstanding between the two countries should be solved quickly, Mr. Oka, Councillor in the Japanese Legation, met Mr. Chen, the Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, on the 26th ultimo to conduct preliminary negotiations. As regards the wireless controversy and the Nishihara Loan problem, they are excluded from the list of issues which are now receiving the attention of the Japanese and Chinese diplomats, because they are too grave and complex.

The "Mainichi" explains that all of these affairs have often been taken up by the authorities of both countries for negotiation since they occurred, but for various reasons no final resolution has yet been reached.

Telegrams to Canton

The "China Mail" of Hongkong contains the welcome announcement that it is once more possible to send telegrams to Canton. Ten days earlier our contemporary had reported the evacuation of the East River region by the anti-Sun Yat-sen troops, thus clearing the territory through which the land-lines pass. Workmen were sent out and repairs have been effected with the result that the service is now resumed. Other installations are being pushed ahead so that the service will be at least brought back to the highest pitch of efficiency it has attained. Some months ago, an arrangement was made with the Eastern Extension Co. whereby cables were sent to Canton viâ Macao. The extra cost entailed will be dispensed with now as the old rates will be charged for the land-line service.

Revival of Queues

Are pigtails coming in again? One certainly sees more of them in Shanghai than three years ago. At a meeting of leading merchants and gentry convened the other day by Marshal Chang Tso-lin we are told that out of 500 who attended, some 320 wore the old badge of servitude. Further evidence of a return to the queue comes from Tientsin, where the Commissioner of Native Police has taken upon himself to interfere with the liberty of the subject by ordering citizens of 60 years or under to remove their pigtails. Millions of Westerners even to-day can hardly imagine Chinese without pigtails, but the signs are not wanting that China may become the romantic China that it is in the eyes of these Europeans. This China New Year festival was observed with even greater ceremony in numerous cities of the interior than towards the close of the Manchu Dynasty, no Chinese will adopt the Gregorian calendar, the barbarous justice of the old Imperial Code is frequently administered, while everywhere, our up-country correspondents tell us, there is a marked tendency towards reversion to picturesque ceremonial and customs of the past. Some observers will say this is merely one aspect of the anti-foreign movement. We are not inclined to attribute it entirely to this movement. Mr. Ku Hung-ming's "educators" who teach but are unlearned, will continue to do so, still more electric light plants will appear in small, out of the way towns along the creeks of Kiangsu and Chekiang, railways will be built, but going on within is a movement resembling in many ways the Renaissance in England. There has not been a reaction against Western learning in China, but that learning has undoubtedly awakened a desire to preserve much more of her old culture. Scholars at present are keenly interested in the literature of the country. At present are they not paying homage to one great "congenial mind from afar," Rabindranath Tagore.

"Plumbers is Plumbers."

It is probable that no profession (with the possible exception of that of the mother-in-law) has been for so long the butt of the humourist at Home as the noble occupation of plumber, with its age-long traditions of procrastination and forgetfulness, added to a penchant for overcharging compared to which, at times, the most rapacious brigand would appear somewhat of a philanthropist. 'Mr. Punch" has given us some priceless drawings and jokes on the subject, not the least famous of which is the one depicting the master-plumber arriving at the church to get married and then, when everything was ready for the ceremony, making a dignified return to headquarters to retrieve his best man and the ring, which, as a true plumber, he naturally had forgotten. It seems, however, that the Home variety is not a species apart and alone, but rather that a plumber is a plumber the world over. One day last week a local resident purchased, at a private auction, a fitting connected with water-supply. It was necessary, after the fitting had been removed, to have a small plug inserted in the water-pipe. A plumber was sent for, the messenger carrying a description of exactly what was needed. After what seemed an interminable wait, the plumber arrived. He surveyed the job at length and quoted a price which was promptly cut by 50 per cent. and agreed upon. He was then asked to get on with the work as the purchaser was in a hurry to get away. "Sorry; no can just now," he said. "Must go back catchee small boy and tools." As that entailed nearly another hour, there is no doubt that our friend is a distinct ornament to his profession, worthy of comparison with the most accomplished of his plumbing brethren in the United Kingdom.

Agriculture in China

China is a wonderful hunting ground for reformers, for well nigh every section of them known to the modern world can find its particular subject in this great country. A little success may come to a few, but progress generally is so slow that many must early became disheartened. It is quite possible that agricultural improvements have been urged upon the Chinese since the earliest days of the foreigner in China, though the effect scarcely is noticeable, but it seems probable that soon there will be great changes, particularly on the live stock side of the farmer's account. Quite recent happenings include a live stock show in Shanghai, the development by a foreign lady of what is believed to be a profitable poultry farm, the opening of several well-kept foreign dairies, the suggestion by Major Keylock to establish pony stud farms (the operation of which necessarily must go beyond the mere care of race ponies), another suggestion to lay down wide grazing tracts, the importation on quite a large scale of pedigree and grade Australian cattle and poultry, and the announcement that a big cattle ranch is to be established somewhere in the provinces. Yesterday a paragraph was received, stating:—

Edmonton, Alberta.—By arrangements made by the Hon. George Hoadly, Minster of Agriculture, a trial shipment of cows and steers will be made in the near future to Japan for the purpose of testing out the possibilities of a market for Alberta's live stock in that country. It is also the purpose of the Department to send with the shipment a qualified investigator who will look into the possibilities of a market for all of Alberta's farm products.

The pushful Canadians are unlikely to stop at Japan and are certain to extend their operations to China. Surely some permanent improvement must develop from the combined effects of all these achievements and suggestions. If Mr. Bena and his associates succeed in bringing the Shanghai World Exhibition into being, they would not go far wrong if they included an agricultural section, but it is most likely they already have that in mind.

Postal Delays

One can afford to be lenient in criticism of the Post Office, for, considered as a whole, its work is wonderful. Any thinking person can form a rough idea of the work necessitated by the collection and delivery of a letter for which the compensation to the Post Office is one cent, and those who have had the privilege actually of following the process from beginning to end only can marvel that there is any profit in the work at all, or any punctuality or guarantee of safe delivery. Yet, knowing what marvellous systems have been evolved by postal experts, occasionally one wonders whether some of the lapses of the Post Office in Shanghai could and should have been prevented. Take the case of a member of our staff. As secretary of a certain institution, he posted about 200 very important notices in the pillar box at the far end of Avenue Road at 11 o'clock one Wednesday night. He spent practically the whole of Friday answering telephone calls from most of the 200 people, who had not received the letters. He was one of many scores of people to whom formal invitations to the opening of our new offices were sent several days before that event last February, and who did not receive them, and to this day he has not received his. On January 19, a married lady friend posted to him a most important annoncement, and it was delivered on Thursday. He has been wondering for months why she has seemed rather distant, and she, of course, has been wondering why he has omitted to make formal inquiries after the little cherub's health, weight and lung capacity, colour of eyes, teeth (if any), etc. Admittedly the letter was sent to an address which had been vacated long before, but as several letters simply addressed, "Mr. ——, Shanghai," in the interim have been safely delivered, it seems curious this other should have been held up for nearly four months. Our Hong List is quite a good reference book.

Protection of Game

Many sportsmen have tried on many occasions to secure the enactment and, what is still more important, the enforcement of a rigid and humane series of Game Laws in China, but never have they met anything but failure. Periodically we refer to the necessity, in the hope that something will follow. The matter comes up again on the complaint of a sportsman, who, while walking in the country, met a Japanese gunner returning with two pheasants, a cock and a hen, that he had shot. In a mixture of English and Chinese he succeeded in getting the Japanese to an understanding that he was entering a protest against such "sport," but he did not manage to impress on him the folly and cruelty of shooting game birds out of season. Even an attempt to show the gunner that he would ruin his own sport at some future date failed. The point principally to be noted is that the Japanese was not a person wilfully evading a written or unwritten law, but one acting in sheer ignorance and suffering from an incapability to understand the consequences of his act, and he is but one of many hundreds, not all of them Japanese, Portuguese or Chinese. The same gentleman on another occasion engaged in conversation with a Chinese professional gunner who was out for snipe, but who admitted that he shot pheasants when he found them. This fellow had some sort of an idea that he was doing at least an unwise thing, but he said that there was no law against it, and at any time there was a market for pheasants. A bird meant more money to him than he could afford to overlook when faced with the opportunity of gaining it, and so he shot pheasants and would continue to shoot them. Game laws, as against the Customs surtax, brigand suppression and similar great questions, may seem too small a thing to worry about, but China must have them soon, and enforce them, or her game areas will be denuded.

A Public Ferry-boat Service

To those whose business carries them about Shanghai harbour by day and night, and to whom the private launch services maintained by the shipping and other companies are not available, a fast public ferry service, operating at all hours, has long been a necessity. The volume of the passenger-carrying trade, by sampan, across and along the river, is so great that it is surprising that a public service, similar to some of those at Hongkong, has not been an accomplished fact for many years. The need has been apparent for a very long time, and it seems more than strange that business enterprise has not acted on the undoubted possibilities afforded by this field of enterprise. It is true that four years ago, when it was estimated that in 24 hours something like 30,000 people crossed and re-crossed the river, or proceeded to and from their ships, by sampan, there was a serious project for the formation of a ferry service by means of a fast fleet of motor-boats, but for some reason or other the idea was not proceeded with. Now comes the news that within a few weeks a public ferry service, touching all parts of the river, will be brought into operation, and there seems no reason why the enterprise, if properly conducted, should not be an outstanding success from the beginning. It is being commenced on modest lines, but should the volume of traffic call for more boats than will be put on at first, we understand they will be forthcoming. We on shore, with our motor-cars and trams and ricshas, cannot wholly appreciate the difficulty that confronts those who have come to Shanghai from vessels moored or berthed a long way down the river and who want to return to their ships late at night. Generally, the sampan is the only means—slow and uncomfortable, and at times leaving the unsophisticated foreign seaman an easy prey to the rapacity of the sampan-man. But apart from this aspect of the matter, there appears little doubt that, with a high-class steam ferry service offering good facilities and reasonable rates, there would be few whose business takes them along the harbour who would not patronize the ferry-boats. The need of them is so apparent that although the new service may be some time in inaugurating a completely satisfactory service, once such a service is an accomplished fact the enterprise of those responsible will be well rewarded.

SONNET

On some triumphant morning when the sky
Is like an oriflamme and the wind's breath
Like victory—then is the time to die—
Oh! when I'm mad with joy come to me, Death!

Not when the heart beats mournfully beneath
A drizzle of gray moments, drenched and tame—
Quench not, I pray, the half-extinguished flame,
Break not the sword that rusts within the sheath.

This rapture's mine. I'll hold it as a glass
Catches, close-burning to a point, the sun—
Let cowards make happiness their daily bread!

I'll fade into delight as at High Mass
Music and incense mingle, and not one—
O'Life!—shall dare to think of me as dead.

ACCORDING to a report issued by the Shanghai Rice Dealers' Association, there was stored in Shanghai during the month of April 65,437.5 piculs of the grain. Of this amount 38,974 piculs was in godowns or rice-shops to the north of Soochow Creek.

THE "Shuntienshihpao" (Peking) reports that a certain high authority intends to relieve Mr. B. Lenox Simpson of his advisership to the President and that Mr. Simpson is also anxious to resign and devote his exclusive attention to newspaper work. The paper further adds that Mr. Simpson, who has been in China for many years, is the chairman of a local bilingual paper.

MARSHAL Wu Pei-fu, hearing of the serious illnes of Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan, Governor-General of Hunan and Hupeh, has invited Gen. Chin Yun-peng, a former Premier, to visit him at Loyang. It is stated that Marshal Wu is considering the appointment of Gen. Chin as successor to Marshal Hsiao and the appointment of Gen. Chow Shu-mo as Governor of Hupeh, the latter post being held concurrently by Marshal Hsiao.

HARBIN reports say that the two Japanese army officers whose release has been demanded by Japan, have been safely taken out of Vladivostok to Chita en route for Moscow. The measures taken by the Soviets were to prevent any forcible seizure of the officers by the Japanese navy, owing to the manœuvring of a Japanese squadron outside Vladivostok, and the Soviets have declared martial law in the maritime province.

ADMIRAL Washington, Commander of the U. S. Asiatic Fleet, arrived at Hankow on board the U.S.S. General Alava on Wednesday evening of last week. The arrival of the Admiral was the occasion for the exchange of many naval salutes and the exchange of complimentary visits with Chinese officials, foreign Consuls and naval representatives kept the port lively throughout the day, several other salutes being fired as occasion demanded.

TIENTSIN is flooded with light-weight copper coins, reports the "Sinwanpao," which states that now 215 can be obtained for a silver dollar and prices for foodstuffs are soaring. It is believed that the coins come from Japan, viâ Mukden, and are being brought from Mukden by the railway employees. Marshal Chang Tso-lin, having received reports to this effect, has ordered his subordinates to investigate into the matter and to execute any persons found smuggling the coins.

THE MURDERED MISSIONARIES OF SZECHUAN

Memorial Stone to Mr. Whiteside and Mr. Watt on Scene of Their Death: Indifference of Local Chinese Authorities to Their Disgrace

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mienchow, Sze., Apr. 13.

We are having a spell of decidedly hot weather, and are feeling badly the need of rain. For upwards of three months there has been no rain, and the spring which supplies the two Mission schools on the hill outside the city has begun to cause us inconvenience.

We have always regarded it as perennial and a good day's rain would restore it to normal.

By the courtesy of the Rev. H. J. Howden I am enabled to send an account of a Memorial Service which has been held recently in connexion with the Watt-Whiteside tragedy.

One reads it with mixed feelings, and it gives food for reflexions' on the state of China generally.

The disappearance of the Commissioner appointed by General Yang Sen to represent the Government in connexion with the event; as also the failure of the soldiers to remain with the party through the journey into the brigand-infested district is significant of the intricacies of bandit and government society. The failure is doubtless due to fear of reprisals and perhaps, which is more serious, to a certain unwillingness to admit the justice of such action.

Undoubtedly if a Chinese citizen were treated by British lawbreakers as these deceased men were treated by the bandits, the British Government would be very definite in its endeavour to show its disapproval of such doings. A failure to rise to these heights of magnanimity seems a serious defect.

Mr. Howden's account is as follows:

The Memorial Party.

Mienchow, April 12.

"Another event in connexion with the tragedy and loss of the two C.M.S. Missionaries, the Revs. R. A. Whiteside and E. J. Watt, last year was completed on Saturday, April 5.

It became apparent to many that a Memorial Stone should be erected in the neighbourhood of the murder as a standing witness and record of the fact. For this purpose a party of three members of the Church Missionary Society accompanied H.B.M. Consul General, G. A. Combe, Esq., proceeded to the mountainous District which lies to the north of Mienchuh, Hsien, which city is two days from Chêngtu.

The range of mountains in this part of Szechuen fringe the vast and wealthy Chêngtu Plain. Immediately outside Mienchuh the view presents a beautiful and unvaried scene of spring crops, mustard, beans, and many other sorts in full flower. Large tracts of opium cultivation are seen within a short distance of the city, and this plant is visible everywhere in increasing quantity even to the more inaccessible recesses of the hills. Busy markets lie at the principal openings of the valleys. At one of these, Han Wang Miao, the party made a halt for a meal, and also to inspect the stone which was being prepared. At this point, ten miles from Mienchuh, the military escort joined, consisting of a ying or battalion of four companies. It should also be mentioned that General Yang Sen had deputed a representative from Headquarters at Chêngtu to accompany the Consul.

Lovely Surroundings.

On resuming the road, which enters the valley, the track ascends gradually to the border hamlet of Shui Kin Men, four miles onward. The river runs at the bottom of the ravine, and presents an ever-pleasing picture of rugged beauty interlaced with patches of cultivation. Shui Kin Men is the border hamlet between the county districts of Mienchu and Maochow. The road from here continues to Ta Pa, It was this direction which the two missionaries took last year, winding their way through the hills to T'ien Ch'ih.

The present party, however, took a shorter road to the lake and plateau of T'ien Ch'ih. Crossing by a picturesque covered bridge to the left of Shui Kin Men, they followed a coal coolie track for five miles The last piece being up a very steep zig-zag path.

The escort was now stationed at intervals along the road and only one company ascended to the cluster of houses at T'ien Ch'ih. It was not possible to investigate the district that evening. The lake of T'ien Ch'ih is about 15 Chinese acres in surface, and nestle amid a bowl of high hills, the one entrance is by the zig-zag path referred to. The inhabitants in the immediate vicinity are not many and were no doubt surprised at the party of foreigners, carriers and military arriving amid their seclusion. The sleeping quarters occupied were the same as those used by Messrs. Whiteside and Watt last year, in the Long Wang Miao (Dragon King Temple), no other shelter being available.

The Memorial Service.

The original intention was to wait here for the Memorial Stone to arrive on the Saturday morning; it was obvious, however, that no place would be possible for the setting up of the Stone without some delay. Moreover except for coal coolies using the path at this point very few others pass this way, hence the purpose of the stone would be lost. The late Messrs. Whiteside and Watt had continued their journey from T'ien Ch'ih, intending to join another C.M.S. party on the other side of a mountain, Peh Yuin Shan, and had already passed some paper factories three miles away. They met the brigands not very far from this spot.

After following a footpath in this direction and learning from the guide many facts concerning the evidence in hand. on returning to the hamlet again, it was seen that the main part of the military escort had withdrawn without any previous information being given, and the representative from General Yang Sen was nowhere to be found, nor did he put in any appearance at the Ceremony later in the day. It was decided therefore to descend the steep hill and meet the stone carriers on the road. About midday the stone arrived, and a spot was selected by the side of the main road, between the market of Shui Kin Mên and the bridge, within the district of the Maochow magistrate.

Haec Meminisse Juvabit.

The main stone is about five Chinese feet high, with a headpiece and base in addition. The inscription on the front is an account of the facts of the murder of the two missionaries, while travelling in the district of the Maochow magistrate. On the reverse side is a short description of the pastorates which Mr. Whiteside held and the scholastic appointment of Mr. Watt.

The ceremony was short but none the less impressive. By one o'clock quite a number of people had gathered in addition to those who belonged to the party and their followers. Prayers were read by the Rev. H. J. Howden of Mienchow and a portion of I Cor. XV by the Rev. V. H. Donnithorne of Anhsien, and an address who given by the Rev. T. Caldwell, C.M.S. Seretary of the West China Mission, and the ppaster of Mienchuh, explaining the purpose and importance of setting up such a record as that on the Memorial Stone.

In adition to the Consul-General being present, Dr. J. H. Lechler of the C.M.S. Hospital, Mienchuh, attended the function.

The party then resumed the homeward journey arriving in Mienchuh about 6.30 p.m.

It is to be hoped that everyone who reads the inscriptions of this memorial stone will ponder upon the loss of these two devoted men, who in the prime of their profession and the efficiency due to long years in China laid down their lives."

OBITUARY

Mr. Fei Chia-lu.

Our readers will, perhaps, be able to recall the series of charming articles commenting on Wu Pei-fu and China in general, published about three years ago in these columns, from the pen of Mr. Fei Chia-lu, whose decease it is our painful duty to announce. His writings are among the best we have received from our Chinese contributors. He had a number of friends in Shanghai, and still more in the north. How sad this intelligence must be to them, we can realize from our own knowledge of his lovable personality, high intelligence, and unimpeachable character.

Mr. Fei Chia-lu was a native of Chinghai, near Ningpo. With the exception of the few years' of school life in the Public School for Chinese, Shanghai, where he received his grounding in the English language from Mr. G. S. Foster-Kemp, it may be said with exact truth that he was a self-educated man. Shortly after he left the School, he joined the "National Review," and there he soon displayed sufficient proficiency in a profession which he was never to abandon even when he was occupying the highest position attainable for his age, namely that of the Secretary of the Ministry of the Interior.

Busy Days in Peking.

It was seven years ago, in 1917, when he left Shanghai for Peking to take up his work as Professor of English in the Peking Government University. He had not to wait long to be admitted into the group of the Intellectuals of the University, consisting of men like Dr. Hu Suh, the well-known leader of the Literary Revolution. The lectures in the University were, however, not sufficient to satisfy his ardent spirit, and he devoted the evenings to newspaper work, which he knew was his real vocation. He was firstly assistant editor of the "Peking Daily News," and then assistant editor of the "Peking Leader," of which he afterwards became the editor.

All this time, he had made a reputation for himself, as much by the honesty of his character as by the excellent quality of his work. Therefore, when Dr. Wang Chunghui formed his Cabinet, which in spite of its many faults, was distinguished by the honesty of its rule, Mr. Fei was given the Secretaryship in the Ministry of the Interior. In this position, he again distinguished himself by his sense of duty and fearlessness of consequences. Some documents, which revealed wholesale corruption in the Ministry, came into his possession, and he petitioned and was given the authority to make a thorough audit of the accounts. The result was that the Vice-Minister had to tender his resignation and left his office with half of the ministerial staff. But services of such value were not recognized when the Government changed, and Mr. Fei had to go with Mr. Wang's Cabinet.

Wu Pei-fu's Appreciation.

If China did not know how to appreciate her deserving servants, General Wu Pei-fu, however, knew how to appreciate an honest man. Twice, Mr. Fei was specially requested to go down to Loyang when this warlord had got himself into difficulties with the foreigners. The last time was in connexion with the Lincheng Affair. When the invitation came, Mr. Fei was far from being well, but realizing the gravity of the incident, he went; against the advice of his medical advisor. Though he was able to do much in setting free the foreign captives, his health, never robust, sustained an injury from which he was never to recover.

This year being his father's 70th anniversary of his birthday, he arrived during the China New Year to make preparations for the celebration. But the trip proved too much for his battered constitution. Shortly after his arrival, he was confined to his bed.

It may be some consolation to his friends to know that during his last days he was under the care of the Sisters of St. Marie's Hospital and had the benefit of the best medical attention. He passed away peacefully in the evening of May 2, 1924, at the age of 34, in the first class ward of the St. Marie's Hospital. In spite of the many important positions Mr. Fei has occupied, he may be said to have died a poor man. His whole estate when realized will hardly amount to more than $4,000 among which is included a sum to be received from his life insurance policy.

Mr. Fei has left a widow and three children, for whom the sincerest sympathy is felt as well as to his bereaved parents.

Manila, May 2.

Mr. Dean C. Worcester, former Secretary of the Interior for the Philippines, died here to-day of heart-disease at the age of 57.

Mr. Worcester was born at Thetford, Ver., in 1866. He was a well-known zoologist and had made extensive studies of birds and mammals of the Philippines. His first visit to the Islands was in 1887, when he accompanied the Steere scientific expedition. Subsequently appointed Assistant Professor of Botany at the University of Michigan, he returned to the Philippines again with the Menage expedition in 1890. He returned to his work at the University and became Assistant Professor of zoology and Curator of the Zoological Museum. He became a member of the United States Philippines Commission in 1899 and remained in the Philippines, becoming Secretary of the Interior in 1901, which post he held until 1913. Amongst Mr. Worcester's published works are "The Philippine Islands and their Peoples," "The Non-Christian Tribes of Northern Luzon," "The Philippines Past and Present" and many papers on zoological subjects. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

APPALLING STORY FROM HANKOW

Chinese Press Report of Cannibalist Practices by a Foodshop

Details of an appalling crime, or series of crimes, in Hankow were published last Friday in the Chinese press. It is stated that the proprietor of a food shop in the native city came under suspicion in connexion with the disappearance of a child, and when, on Wednesday of last week, the police searched his premises the skeletons of eight children were found as well as human remains suggesting that a revolting practice in the way of trade was being carried on. Five arrests were made.

When the discovery was noised abroad, a great crowd quickly gathered outside the premises and a rush was made for the shop, the place being set fire to before the police had left with their prisoners. The crowd was infuriated, and in the excitement of the attack the prisoners escaped from the police, seized various weapons and laid about them as they ran out into the street. In this way, three people are said to have been killed and several injured. Troops had to be called out to assist the police in dealing with the situation.

AN OLD MYSTERY OF THE YANGTZE

There are no doubt still some who remember the sensation caused at Shanghai and up and down the River by the arrest and trial of C. W. Mason, a Customs assistant of Chinkiang, for importing a cargo of arms for the Ko Laos in September, 1891, and his subsequent escapé from Shanghai Gaol.

At his trial before Mr. Jamieson, the Consul-General, and the late Sir Nicholas Hannen, Mason preserved an obdurate silence and pleaded guilty rather than betray his accomplices; and although for many weeks the Shanghai papers advanced exhaustive guesses as to his motives—whether he was really a Ko Lao, whether he was the catspaw of the Peking Government, whether the Customs were in any way implicated, or whether he was simply a monomaniac—the truth was never revealed.

Now at last, after 30 years, the truth comes to light. Mason himself tells the story in his "Chinese Confessions of Charles Welsh Mason," which has just been published in London by Grant Richards, Ld., at 7/6 net, and which can be ordered from any bookseller. It will, the publishers say, be found more enthralling than a novel. The picture of Anglo-Chinese life in the 'nineties is, it is claimed, the most accurate to be found in the work of English writers.

Mr. Mason is said to have led an amazingly adventurous life during the 33 years since he left China, and it is hoped that this book will be followed by other autobiographical volumes.

THE PRESS GANG IN KIENNING

Only One of the Country People's Woes.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kienning, Apr. 26.

We seem more than ever drifting into anarchy; the hordes of soldiers marching back again to the south of the province, still continues and with all the iniquities of the press-gang. Day after day one hears fresh stories of misery.

A week ago a proclamation was put out—a kind of apology for the wrongs which had been recently perpetrated; and assuring boatmen that no more boats would be commandeered, gradually boats which all had disappeared began to put in an appearance. and with the greatest perfidy they were all seized again to transport troops.

In Sungki county the poppy is in flower, and looks as if it will shortly be cut. The Civil Governor, and Gen. Chou, the Assistant Military Governor, have both issued instructions that it should be stopped, but the hsien snaps his finger at them, and goes on getting his blood money!

A few days ago a catechist was held up by a sergeant, beaten and told he was abducting his bride, whom he was taking up to his station. If bystanders had not intervened the consequences would have been much worse.

The military government is destroying trade by their extortions.

The people look on the soldiers as their greatest enemies and are only too delighted to see them go south.

A few days ago some bandits stole into the city and attempted to seize some guns in the yamên of a notorious bandit chief, who two or three years ago surrendered to the government, and is now a major. These men were caught redhanded, and to save their lives turned King's evidence. They led a set of disguised soldiers into the bandit rendezvous, with the result that over 10 of these mauraders were caught and executed.

BUILDING OPERATIONS IN TIENTSIN

Big New Bank and French Municipal Building

TIENTSIN NEWS SERVICE.

Tientsin, Apr. 28.

Work has started on the foundations of a new bank and office building at the corner of Rue de France and Rue du Consulat, French Concession, for Mr. S. J. Vordoni, one of Tientsin's pioneer merchants. When finished at the end of this year the bank premises will be occupied by the Tientsin branch of the Sino-Italian Bank, and the flats above will be rented out as offices. On the north end of the Rue de France frontage there will be a modern store, also to be rented.

The new building will be two storeys, brick-built, cement-faced with a frontage on Rue de France of 85 ft. and on Rue du Consulat of 75 ft. The entire corner of the building's ground floor will be taken over by the bank, with main entrance on the corner. The bank compradore's offices will be placed at the east end of the Rue du Consulat frontage. The store on Rue de France will have a modern glass front, extending 38 ft., and a depth of 56 ft.

The present estimated cost of the building is $75,000, and it will stand on one and a half mow of land valued at $30,000. The architects are Credit Foncier d'Extreme Orient.

The present premises of the Sino-Italian Bank, on the opposite corner, will be pulled down when the Bank moves out to make way for road widening plans in connexion with the proposed new French Municipal building in the old Market Square immediately behind the present bank building.

THE FOUR WRECKS IN THE GORGES

Exact Details of the Recent Unparalleled Series of Disasters

The following additional details of the recent wrecks in the Gorges, from an authoritative source, will be of interest as showing what exactly happened in this unequalled series of interests.

Ichang April 21.

The str. Pakiang (under Italian flag), is reported a total loss at the Yeh-tan, 50 miles up river from Ichang, on the 15th inst.

She left here at daylight on above date, under command of Captain Turner, and was on her 14th low water trip this season. She had only one pilot on board, the other having gone to the str. Yungkiang, to bring her down from Chungking, that vessel having been sold to the military.

The Pakiang carried a cargo of case oil for the S. O. Co. and a small quantity of general cargo. She was drawing 7'6", being greatly overloaded. She passed the dangerous Hsin-tan and Kungling-tan rapids, but came to grief at the Yeh-tan, striking, it is said, the same rock as the Lichuen struck some years ago. It is not clear whether it was a case of the vessel sheering owing to being overoaded, or an error of judgment, but all interested in low water navigation regret this accident as Captain Turner, who was piloting at the time of the accident, has had a most successful season, and ran at levels hitherto thought impossible.

The vessel was beached on the right bank below the rapid, and had a salvage pump been available she would probably have been salved. She was holed in the forehold and boiler room just at the bulkhead. Junks were procured and lashed alongside the forepart, but the water rose rapidly at the rate of one foot an hour, causing the spars supporting the fore end to break. The after part then rose with the water, and the vessel broke in two at 1.00 a.m. on the morning of the 19th. The water at Chungking suddenly rose from 1' to 9'0" and this sudden rise was responsible for the total loss of this vessel. Had the accident happened when the water was at its lowest, she would doubtless have been saved.

There was no loss of life and most of the cargo is salved.

Total Loss of Robert Dollar 11

This vessel left Chungking at about 6 a.m. on the 24th and at 9 a.m. struck the rocks on the left bank at mileage 310.4 at Ch'ai P'an Tzu. The vessel at the time was proceeding full speed, and it appears the rocks pierced the port quarter, and must have torn almost the whole of the after end out of her. She heeled over to a dangerous angle. The captain at once put the helm hard aport and beached her on the Shashih shingle bank at the lower end. Almost immediately the vessel settled down by the stern and heeled over to starboard, submerging the stern. The vessel is now probably covered and will become a total loss as the river is rising rapidly.

It is known that two Chinese children were washed overboard and drowned, and an authoress, who was travelling under the auspices of the Robert Dollar Company to write a descriptive handbook of the Gorges, was washed overboard, and carried by the current on to the shingle bank.

30 Chinese Drowned

It is feared that 30 Chinese passengers may have lost their lives, so quickly did she settle down, which would indicate that had she not been promptly beached she might have gone down in deep water with a heavy loss of life. All cargo is lost.

At the time of the accident the Shuhun was one third of a mile ahead. She turned round steamed back and anchored close under the stern of the wrecked vessel, taking on board the foreign and some Chinese passengers.

Capt. Piowaty was in charge on his maiden trip. He had been to Chungking several trips during the low water becoming familiar with the river prior to taking over the vessel.

The Kweilee on the Rocks

The str. Kweilee left here (Ichang) in early morning of the 25th and encountered fog at 3 a.m. In turning round to another she stranded on the rocks below Ita on the left bank. The fore hold is badly damaged and three feet of water was reported shortly after striking. The ship's pumps, however, were able to keep the water under control, and it is reported this morning that the vessel is in no danger, and no cargo damaged.

The Kuling left this morning with salvage gear, and a motor salvage pump, supplied by Messrs. Rochs & Co.

While the vessel is in no immediate danger it must be remembered that she is very old, and her bottom plates are most probably in very bad condition. The water today is still rising, but not so rapidly as to cause any anxiety.

Probably Holed

The str. Wanhsien is anchored at mileage 320 above Loochi, having struck a rock on the upward trip.

It is uncertain whether the vessel is holed forward or aft, but she is reported to be down by the stern. Assistance was offered by the Anlan when passing down, but was refused.

The ship is said to be in no immediate danger and will proceed to Chungking after temporary repairs.

A Chapter of Accidents

From Our Own Correspondent.

Ichang, April 28.

It is happily unusual to have such a chapter of shipping accidents occur as we have recently had. The following three were all heard of in one day: The Robert Dollar was on her way down from Chungking when she ran on to a ledge of rock, and ripped her side open. There were three adults and five foreign children passengers on board. One lady was still in her cabin, and when the ship struck she threw on a fur coat and ran out, but just then the ship lurched and she was washed into the river. Fortunately she was near the bank and got ashore safely. This lady happens to be on a visit to the Yangtze, getting material for the writing of a book, and one can well imagine the graphic description of the experience that will be told there. The fortunate thing about the accident was that one of the Shuhun pilots happened to be looking astern and saw that the Robert Dollar was in difficulties. The Shuhun was only about five minutes ahead of the Dollar boat, and at once turned back to her assistance. It is said that a good many Chinese were drowned, but how many no one knows. There is more than cargo carried as "pidgin" on these boats.

Then news came that the Wan Hsien was badly holed at Loc'chi about 35 miles below Chungking. The Wan Liu went to her assistance, and later she was reported to have reached Chungking, but will doubtless have to make a trip to Shanghai for repairs.

The same evening we learned that the China Merchants str. Kuei Lee on her way to Hankow had run on to rocks at a place about 35 miles down river. She is holed in her bows, but they hope to get her off.

The Rev. Father Trudo Yans, who has been a member of the R. C. Mission here for many years, has been chosen as the new bishop and is now on his way to Changsha for consecration, the ceremony to take place on May 1.

Rain is falling heavily and all fears for sufficient water to transplant the rice will be at an end.

OVERBOARD IN THE GORGES

Mrs. Gordon B. Enders' Thrilling Escape: The Struggle for Life: A Tribute to Humanity

The miraculous escape from drowning of Mrs. Gordon B. Enders, one of the passengers on the ill-fated str. Robert Dollar II, is a most remarkable incident and one which will long be told to offset the usual stories told of the Yangtze's relentless malignity.

The wreck of the str. Robert Dollar II occurred on April 24, some three hours after leaving Chungking. About 9 a.m. she struck the rocks on the left bank. Although this is a dangerous part of the river, with a rapid current, no danger was anticipated as the water was nine feet above zero. How the accident occurred is unknown, although it is conjectured that the current may have swept the vessel upon the rocks. The initial shock brought the passengers to the forward deck, with the exception of Mrs. Gordon B. Enders, author of "Swinging Lanterns," who had taken the Gorges trip to collect material for another book which will soon be published.

From Cabin to Cataract

Mrs. Enders was still in her cabin as the boat began to scrape over the submerged rocks. Hastily flinging on a long sealskin coat she ran along the cabin deck aft, the furniture in the saloon flying out through door and windows as she passed. Then came a monster wave sweeping over the ship, which had heeled over to a dangerous angle, and she was thrown over the railing into the swift running river, and carried for some distance under water. Fortunately she was hurled in the direction of the shingle, on which the boat was afterwards beached, so that when she came to the surface she was not more than 20 or 30 feet from it.

At first she did not realize that there was any chance for escape but her foot struck against a rock and she realized that there must be land near, so with every bit of energy she could muster she swam desperately toward the island and dragged herself out of the water, exhausted, but still unafraid. In spite of the well-nigh irresistible force of the current she had managed to get to shore, even though handicapped by the heavy fur coat. In the face of what seemed certain death she had no time to fear. Which miracle is the greater it would be hard to say, but the fact that in the presence of danger she instinctively did the right thing is an encouraging thought for timid folk to dwell upon.

Fine Seamanship

Again, the seamanship and judgment of the men in charge of the steamer is something to be proud of. Capt. Oscar Piowaty, was in charge on his maiden trip, although he had been to Chungking several times during low water, becoming familiar with the river. His decision was instantaneous. Had he not at once put the helm hard aport and beached the ship on the shingle bank she would probably have gone down in deep water with a heavy loss of life, for the rocks had torn almost the whole of the after end out.

The First Officer, Mr. Milton, and the Chief Engineer, Mr. Walker, rose to the emergency instantly and the officers were in command of the situation throughout. With that uncanny instinct for being on the spot when their services may be required, small Chinese sampans hurried to the ship and the passengers were transferred to the shingle and later to the str. Shuhun, which luckily saw that the Robert Dollar II was in distress and put back to her assistance. The U.S. Marine Guards who were on board rendered every assistance and with the male passengers risked their lives hunting for two foreign children who were missing for some agonizing moments, but afterwards found safe. It was at first reported that some 30 Chinese passengers were probably lost, so quickly did the boat settle down, but it has since been learned that no bodies were found and it is hoped that all, with the exception of the two Chinese children escaped. Every effort was made to salvage passengers' property and almost every thing was saved.

Chinese Good Behaviour

The Chinese, while panic-stricken, acted splendidly, it is reported, and there was none of that bestial crowding and winning of safety at the expense of others' lives which is so often one of the most terrible accompaniments of such accidents. One Chinese man was seen carrying a bound-foot old woman on his back to safety and there were other such incidents which one is glad to dwell upon.

Though the Diplomatic Body is still leaving unanswered the counter-proposal made by the Chinese Government in connexion with the demand for the Lincheng indemnity, it is expected that the Body will shortly forward a further Note, rejecting the proposal for the organization of a joint commission to investigations into the amount of the Lincheng indemnity, says the Eastern News Agency.

CLIMBING MOUNT EVEREST

The Sunrise Seen from Darjeeling.

In connexion with the recent controversy in these columns about seeing, or not being able to see the Sunrise on Everest from Darjeeling, a correspondent sends us the following with picture appended from the "Bournville Works Magazine." Unfortunately the picture will not reproduce, but it quite clearly shows, as indeed two or three correspondents bore witness, that Sunrise on Everest is quite easily seen from Darjeeling. Even without the picture the article is most interesting. Another attempt, one reads, is shortly to be made on Mt. Everest. Will it succeed any better than its predecessors?

Apart from the exciting details of experiences undergone, what probably impressed most of those who were present at Captain Finch's lecture on January 8, was the extraordinary lengths to which man's fixity of purpose will carry him, and the endurance of which the human frame is capable before the extreme limit is reached. Many stories have been told of the privation and exposure which pioneers of science have undergone in the exploration of almost inaccessible parts of the earth, yet the recital of the Everest climb, with the accounts of terrific battles against nature, revealed with a new vividness the real meaning of an expedition of that kind, and the demand made by it on the nature of man.

Starting from Darjeeling in northern India, a town only 90 miles in a direct line from Everest, a circuitous route had to be followed through Sikkim, to the plateaux of Tibet, which are devoid of vegetation and are constantly swept by icy east winds. The only feasible means of transport in this almost lifeless region is the yak, a useful animal when properly treated.

The last of the Tibetan villages at the foot of Everest is as picturesque as it is solitary, and the loads were here transferred from the yaks to Nepalese carriers. The endurance and enthusiasm of these carriers was only exceeded by that of the climbers themselves.

A base camp was made at the foot of the Rongbuk glacier, from whence a climbing party went forward along the glacier. They reached the altitude of 26,800 feet and had to return. Meanwhile a second party, of which Captain Finch was leader, set out. Leaving the base camp they made three advance camps at stages on the journey, the stores being carried by the splendid Nepalese. The final camp of all was on "North Col," an ice covered depression between Everest and "North Peak." Here the first party were rescued as they descended from the mountain in the last stage of exhaustion.

From this camp a party of three took a tent and a little food to attempt to conquer the mountain. They were very greatly handicapped by the intensely cold wind which blew constantly with hurricane force, and at last were compelled to seek the shelter of the rocks and pitch the tent. After two nights and a day, during which time the gale blew with indescribable fury, when snow penetrated the tent and even their many thicknesses of clothing, and when oxygen was the only thing that kept them alive, a restart was made. The third member of the party had to fall out after a short struggle, but Captain Finch and Geoffrey Bruce climbed on There came a moment when even these two knew they must turn back or perish, though they could distinguish the individual stones on the top of the mountain. The journey back to North Col was safely accomplished, and their 30-hour fast very effectively broken. They had suffered such hardships that they were taken to the lower camps on sleighs after receiving medical attention. The highest point reached was 27,300 feet above sea level.

Such tales of pluck and daring always thrill the listener, and this lecture has been spoken of as the finest ever delivered at Bournville. It was illustrated by a very large number of unique slides, and it is worthy of note that even on the return down the snow slopes, when the party were utterly exhausted, Captain Finch managed to take one or two photographs.

ELECTRICITY SPREADS IN CHINA

British Machinery Installed at Yangchow and Now Everybody Can Get Light

From a Correspondent.

Yangchow, Ku., May 3.

The new 300 K.W. electric lighting unit installed at the Yangchow Power Station has now been in operation for some time and it is now possible to find one's way about the city without the aid of lanterns. The plant first started with an 80 K.W. steam engine but the demand was so large that the company was soon compelled to add a 180 K.W. Belliss & Morcom steam engine. Soon followed a 50 K.W. Muncie Oil engine and about three years ago the installation of a 100 K.W. Crossley gas engine. In 1923 the demand was again greater than the supply and eventually the lights got so bad that the majority of the consumers refused to pay for current used, others reverting back to the oil lamp for illumination. Instead of the 200 volt lamps being used it was necessary to change to a 60 volt lamp to get a fairly decent light, whilst the street lights were so dim they could hardly be discerned at the top of the poles.

The order for the new equipment was eventually placed with the Jardine Engineering Corporation and consists of a 450 B.H.P. "National" gas engine fed by a 500 H.P. "National" suction gas plant. The alternator is by Mather & Platt and is direct coupled to the engine. The engine is of the vertica-tandem type and has six cylinders fitted with dual ignition. Starting up is accomplished by means of admitting compressed air at a pressure of 300 lb. per square inch. The engine is supposed to be one of the largest suction gas engines of its kind imported into China and a great deal of interest is being taken in the unit by reason of its being so economical to run.

A DAUGHTER-IN-LAW'S GRUESOME ACT

Human Flesh to Cure Illness: How to Drive Demons from a Possessed Wife.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Taiku, Sha., April 28.

A gruesome story comes from the north of this province. A gentleman who had formerly held the post of district magistrate in one of the wealthiest and most progressive districts on this plain became seriously ill. The Chinese physician attending said that the only certain remedy would be a piece of human flesh cooked with a medicine. Upon hearing this the widowed daughter-in-law of the ex-magistrate at once cut a piece of flesh from one of her legs and insisted that the remedy be forthwith prepared. The Chinese newspapers commend this as in the highest degree praiseworthy filial devotion.

It is reported that in Showyang in the east of the province a young woman had attended the funeral of a relative, and in so doing had been seized by the "demon" of the deceased. Being so afflicted her husband asked advice and was told that whipping the victim was the only way to rid her of the devil. This he proceeded to do, and so effectively that the poor woman died under the blows.

Such incidents would seem to show that the "enlightenment" of the model province is not yet so conspicuous as to cast much of a glow, either direct or reflected, over the rest of China.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is again to lodge a demand, within the next few days, with the Diplomatic Corps for the rendition of the International Mixed Court in Shanghai, states the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce." The request of the Diplomatic Body for the extension of the International Settlement will be returned.

KOREAN WHO THREW BOMBS AT JAPANESE IMPERIAL PALACE

Strange Story of a Plot to Revenge Murders of Koreans After Earthquake: A Conspirator's Association with the Revolutionists of India

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokio, Apr. 27.

Knocking down a policeman who tried to bar his way, hurling three small bombs one after the other in the course of a struggle that eventuated between himself and the policeman and soldier sentries on duty at the entrance of the Nijubashi (Twin Bridges) gate to the Imperial Palace who rushed to the assistance of the minion of the law when the latter set up an alarm, and rushing in through the gate on to the wide sweep of parklike grounds that surround the stately Japanese-style buildings that form the chief residence of the Reigning Family, a Korean, named Kin Shi-sho, was finally overpowered and taken into custody.

The attempt to bomb the Imperial Palace was made on a stormy evening on January 5 this year, while a heavy rain was deluging the capital, at about 7.15. All the bombs, but one, proved to be duds and simultaneous with the arrest of the perpetrator, a censorship edict was issued by the police whereby all mention of the affair was strictly prohibited. The ban on publication of the news was lifted to-day when four Japanese and two Koreans, including the accused, were haled before the Tokio District Court which, after a preliminary hearing, found all the accused guilty of a conspiracy aimed at bombing the Imperial Palace and endangering the lives of the inmates thereof. The evidence consisted largely of the confessions of the prisoners.

Directed by "Giretsudan."

Bombing of the Imperial palace was not originally on the programme of the misguided men. The Koreans concerned in the conspiracy were members of the Giretsudan, an organization of Korean extremists said to have headquarters in Shanghai, the members of which are alleged to have taken a vow to employ all and every means available for rescuing Korean from the thraldom of Japan. From time to time the Giretsudan has been behind the scenes of many a deplorable and worthless—for it did not promote Korean freedom any nearer—tragedy. The attempt made in Shanghai to murder General Tanaka, then Minister of War, some two years ago, resulting in a running revolver fight in the streets of the International Settlement and culminating in the death of an American lady, is believed to be work directed and instigated by the Giretsudan.

The massacre of Koreans wholesale, for no other reason but that they were of the people belonging to the once Hermit Kingdom, in the shameful chaos and confusion that followed the earthquake, naturally stirred Korean malcontents whose rage became all the greater when it became known, through questions put in the Diet by a member of the Opposition who produced duplicate telegrams issued by responsible officials of the Government and the Police, that the authorities really had more than mere moral blame to shoulder for the disgraceful dillings that formed one of the immediate and most disgraceful aftermaths of the September disaster.

Bombs were secured, believed to have been smuggled from Russia, and steps were taken so that Kin Shi-sho could come to Japan without being suspected of being a Korean.

Korean Smuggled Into Japan.

This was not easy to do as the Japanese harbour police keep a lynx-eyed watch on all Koreans and Chinese coming into Japan. A Japanese in Shanghai, for a monetary consideration consented to talk to his brother steward on a Japanese freighter and the latter, for a further consideration, talked to three other members of the crew and smuggled the Korean into Japan. When Kin came to Tokio, the Diet had adjourned for the New Year recess and, as he was walking in the wide stretch of ground at Babasaki-mon, flanking the inner moat of the Imperial Palace, he decided to make an attempt on the Imperial Palace.

He chose a very rainy eveing and approached the Nijubashi (Twin Bridges), one of the chief entrances to the Imperial Palace, dressed in conventional Japanese kimono. Something in his attitude excited the suspicions of the policeman on duty near the bridge who challenged the intruder. Kin reached into the folds of his kimono and, as answer, hurled a bomb at the police officer which exploded and sent the minion of the law reeling. The shouts of the policeman brought two of the sentry soldiers, always on guard here, to the scene who promptly barred the route of the Korean. Kin dived into the folds of his kimono once more, drew another bomb and hurled it at the soldiers. It failed to explode. He drew forth another and hurled this too, but it didn't explode either. By this time the soldiers and the policeman leaped on the man and, after a fierce struggle, over powered him.

Soviet Hand Seen.

At the police station he talked in an excited and high-pitched voice, refusing to disclose his identity, but admitting that he was a member of the Giretsudan and that he was merely carrying out orders. The prisoner was promptly put through the third degree and afterwards revealed the names of his accomplices. The other Korean involved, Shin Shei-yi by name, is still missing.

It was also discovered during the unearthing of the details of the plot, according to the police version, that the perpetrators of the attempt to bomb the Imperial Palace had received considerable pecuniary assistance from the Russian Reds. In November last year, a conference of Far Eastern peoples was held at Moscow, and Kin Shi-sho made himself prominent at the meeting by advocating violence in any and every form, on the ground that more literature and verbal propaganda were too slow, in themselves, to wake up Far Eastern races.

Planned a Rising in India.

An interesting fact about Koji Hideshima, one of the Japanese involved in the present conspiracy, is that, while residing in Shanghai during the war, he conceived the ambitious plan of going to India, putting himself at the head of a band of revolutionally-inclined Indians and stirring up trouble—according to the Japan police. The money for the venture was to be obtained by smuggling opium from India into China. The whole thing became a sorry fiasco and the daydreams of leading turbanned revolutionaries against the loyal troops of the Indian Government faded most prosaically when some of Hideshima's friends, engaged in the preliminary opium-smuggling venture, were arrested and put behind iron bars. Hideshima escaped to Russia.

The lifting of the police ban on publication of the details of this plot—which followed close on the heels of the attempt made to assassinate the Prince Regent, less than ten days separating the two events—has for the moment even crowded the immigration issue out of the most prominent portion of the newspapers, columns on columns being devoted to this polt.

The policeman who put up the first fight against Kin Shi-sho and who was injured by the bomb thrown at him has been rewarded with a money gift. Kin and his accomplices will be tried by the Supreme Court on charges of high treason and attempted murder

AN EARLY MISSION TO TIBET

An Englishman's First Visit

BY "CLAUDIUS" IN THE "ENGLISHMAN."

Tibet, known to Marco Polo as the desert of Lop, and said to be haunted by evil spirits and goblins, was first visited by an Englishman, in 1774, when Mr. Bogle was sent on a mission to Tahsilumpo. No practical result was achieved by this mission or the one despatched in 1783, which returned to Calcutta after an absence of 15 months.

The premature death of Mr. Bogle was a great loss for it frustrated the design he had formed of presenting the public with a narrative of his interesting journey. A record of this journey, however, was found in a letter from Mr. Stewart, one of the mission, which, although it gives some particulars of the country through which the mission passed, is overshadowed by the accounts left by the mission under Major Turner. Before proceeding with an account of this mission, a short account of the Bhutias with whom the mission first came in contact, during the seige of Dalingkote in 1772-73 is well worth recording.

"When the British force, under the administration of Mr. Hastings, carried their arms northward to the mountain boundary of Hindustan, they came unexpected upon an enemy bearing no resemblance to any they had been accustomed to cope with on the plains. These warriors were clothed in furs, and armed with bows and arrows; their appearance was uncouth, their assaults furious, and when their spoils consisting of arms, clothes, utensils and the images of their gods, were brought to Calcutta, these objects were found to be decidedly Tartar. This was the people of Bootan, who, it seems, were on their part still more astonished when, instead of the timid and naked Hindoos flying before them at the first assault, they saw troops uniformly clothed and accoutred, moving in regular order, and pouring forth such deadly vollies of musketry and artillery."

It was soon judged that these would be serious persons to deal with in a hostile manner; and the Teshoo Lama, the spiritual sovereign of this mountainous region, judged it wise to send a mission to Calcutta to mediate a peace between the British Government and the Deab Raja, the immediate governor of Bootan."

Commerce with Bhutan.

It appears, that the presents of gold, gold-dust, musk, Tibetan woollens and Chinese silk, which gave a formidable idea of the wealth of Bhutan, induced Mr. Hastings to concede to their demands; especially as he saw that the commercial intercourse with these 'new people' would be advantageous in the highest degree.

Shortly after Mr. Bogle left Tashilumpo, the Tashi Lama set out in 1779, on a visit to China at the invitation of Kien Lung (1736-1795). After three months he reached the monastery of Kumbum, where he passed the winter and was worshipped by large crowds. His chief occupation seems to have been of daily making several thousand impressions of his hand on paper, which were well paid for as relics. One chief alone is said to have presented him with 300 horses, 70 mules, 100 camels, 1,000 pieces of brocade and 150,000 shillings in silver. After a journey of two months escorted by princes, governors, officials and soldiers, and the chief Court Lama of the Chinese Emperor, he reacked Kien Lung's summer residence, and was received with the pomp befitting his position. Here he was put to some inconvenience, for even the Court favourites insisted on seeing him. He sat dumb and motionless behind a transparent curtain, casting down his eyes so as not to be polluted by the sight of beautiful women. All this came to a deplorable end. The Tashi Lama fell ill and died, and it was affirmed that the powerful Emperor had caused him to be poisoned, because he suspected him of a design to free himself from the supremacy of China with the help of Warren Hastings.

The disappointing news of the death of the Tashi Lama was followed not long after by news that the Lama had reappeared on earth in the form of an infant of about a year old; who having displayed all the characteristic marks of identity, was accepted by the nation as their spiritual head and sovereign.

Warren Hastings' Diplomacy.

Here comes an amusing account of Mr. Hastings' diplomacy. "Mr. Hastings anxious to cultivate the connexion with his old friend, even under these reduced dimensions, determined to send another mission to Teshoo Loomboo." This was the mission sent in 1783 under the leadership of Major Turner who was accompanied by Messrs. Saunders and Davies. Leaving Calcutta at the beginning of 1783, the mission passed through the level and swampy plains of Bengal and arrived at Buxa Dooars, or rather at the foot of the hill on which this frontier fortress stands. The road then became steep and ragged, and it is stated that "rocks of coarse marble crossed their path." The prospect became now inconceivably grand, presenting hills clothed to the summit with trees, deep and dark glens, and the tops of lofty mountains lost in the clouds. "The whole district at the foot of these mountains was choked with a rank luxuriance of vegetation, which combined with excess of heat and moisture, generates amid these impervious woods an atmosphere truly fatal to the human constitution."

SHANSI VINEYARDS FROST-SMITTEN

Young Vines and Peaches Ruined by Untimely Cold with Grave Loss

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Taiku, Sha., April 28.

I am writing this 20 miles from home, in the great orchard and vineyard district of central Shansi. A feeling of pessimism at present pervades the district, for on the night of the 24th, there was a heavy, killing frost. Since that date I have travelled pretty well through the entire district. The greatest damage was done to the peaches and the vines. Where the bloom had fallen, or was about to fall, from the peach trees it is estimated that about 80 per cent. of the buds have been killed. Throughout the whole district fully one half of the shoots on the grape vines have been killed. This, coupled to the drought at present prevailing all over Shansi, gives anything but a cheering outlook for the year. The cold was so severe on the date mentioned that even the young wheat in many fields was scorched and blackened. Before this catastrophe the peach orchards, heavy with pink blossoms, had presented a glorious picture.

A Much Needed New Railway

The long moribund Tung-Cheng Railway project is, according to the native newspapers, being resuscitated. They report that a Belgian engineer has recently visited Shansi and has proposed a change in the route, from the east to the west side of the central Shansi plain. So built the railway would pass through the leading coal producing and industrial districts of this part of Shansi, and would have its terminus, for the present, at Fenchow, Sha. This would, however, pass by the cities of Pingyao, Kihsien, and Taiku, which are the great banking centres of the province, and it is not likely the gentry of those districts will submit to the change without protest. It remains to be seen if anything will come of this new movement.

The Rev. Albert Lutley, of the China Inland Mission, for many years superintendent of that Mission in this province, has recently returned with Mrs. Lutley and is at present visiting the stations of the Mission in south Shansi. Another recent visitor to Shansi has been Commissioner Pearce of Peking, head of the Salvation Army in North China, who has been inspecting the stations of the Army in this province. His messages, both in and out of the S. A. halls, have been greatly appreciated.

Dr. J. H. Gray, of the Y.M.C. A., has also spent two or three weeks in Shansi, lecturing in Taiyuanfu, Fenchow and Taiku. His work has been very effective, particularly among the great student population of Taiyuanfu.

HOURS OF CHINESE MILL WORKERS

Intolerable Conditions Shown up by Bishop Roots: Man's Duty to Man

In accordance with the suggestion of the Industrial Commission of the National Christian Council that the churches in China should follow the custom widely observed in England and take as a sermon theme on the first Sunday of May, following "Labour Day," "The Application of Christian Principles to Industry," the Rt. Reverend L. H. Roots, D.D., Bishop of Hankow, was asked to speak on this subject on Sunday morning in Holy Trinity Cathedral. Bishop Roots is also one of the four secretaries of the National Christian Council of China.

In his address Bishop Roots outlined the Christian principles involved in industry, their application to great industries and to domestic, office and public service. The ideals of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man involve recognition of the value of every human being, and a realization that they are not bits of machinery to be exploited.

In applying these principles to great industry the National Christian Conference in its meeting in Shanghai two years ago formulated the following demands: That no children under 12 should be employed in power-driven industries; that one day's rest in seven should be given to workers; that hours of labour should not be over-strenuous; that sanitary demands should be met; and that dangerous machinery should be safeguarded. Modern machinery, the speaker continued, was often installed without any guards and in consequence shocking accidents had occurred, especially in the case of little children employed at night, who became sleepy and fell into the machines, one child being literally scalped.

Bishop Roots stated that in the cotton weaving industry in Hankow one weaving shed is known as a model because in it the women work only from 4.45 a.m. to 8 p.m. whereas the usual hours are from 4.15 a.m. to 9 p.m. In cotton spinning around Shanghai two shifts per day are generally employed, each group working 12 hours. In Wuchang, he added, there is a mill where there are approximately 20,000 employees, men, women and children, and of these some six to eight thousand are children, most of them under 12 years of age.

These conditions are not due to the cupidity or brutality of employers, foreign or Chinese, the speaker held, but are partly caused by ignorance of actual conditions and partly by the necessity of meeting competition. No employer can handicap himself by adopting measures which will give his competitors an unfair advantage over him, and in the world family no man can do right unless others will agree to act rightly as well.

In the application of Christ's principles to domestic service, the over-worked chauffeurs, the clerks, or public servants with long hours, the typist who is never shown the principles of the work he is doing, but is simply regarded as a machine to turn out so much copy, the underpaid ricsha-runner or the bullied domestic, the speaker brought home to all his hearers their personal responsibility for exemplifying these ideals of brotherhood and for showing Labour that the church is sympathetic to its movement.

AN appreciation of "Pereira" appears in the "Empire Review" from the pen of Lady Hosie. She writes that debonair was the word that that best described Pereira. He was tall and dark and thin; but, despite his lean looks, he was a hearty man, always good-humoured, and with the faculty of finding every one he met worth meeting. He was badly wounded during the war. Although he was for some time on the Staff, he spent much more of his time in the front trenches than was strictly needful. He loved the welcome he received in the mud there from his old China acquaintances. His was a gay spirit, and he had the power of making friends wherever he went, not only with men of his own race but with those of very different origin. He had a habit of joking with native chiefs and Chinese magistrates that was Elizabethan in its jollity. English people in China had a great pride in Pereira.

CHINESE ATHLETES OF WUCHANG.

Wesley College Sports: Display of Wonderful Feats by Gymnast Professor.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, April 28.

Last Saturday came with bright sunshine to favour the spring term athletic meeting.

The new buildings, which are steadily rising right across the south end of the football field, have encroached to a certain extent upon the space which was available last year for sports. But this has been compensated for to some extent by filling in the low ground which lies at the farther end. It is no longer possible to lay down a "220 straight"; but the quarter-mile track can still be fitted in.

Seeing that two other large schools in Wu-Han were holding their sports on the same day, a large number of visitors was hardly expected. But a contingent of some 40 boys from the Wuchang First Middle School turned up early in the day with their athletics instructor: and various old boys, together with students from Kung Ching Middle School, the Normal University, and the Wuchang Commercial School, helped to swell the crowd.

Some Fine Performances.

The competitors were in good form, and their results showed an improvement upon last autumn, although on the whole they were not quite so good as last spring. Wu Kuang-teh carried off seven first places and one third, showing himself easily the best all-round athlete in the school. His distance of 18 ft. 4½ in. in the long jump probably constitutes a school record. In the high jump, he did no more than equal his last year's record of 4 ft. 11½ in., but he has been known to do better in practice. Hu Ren-ching's time of 25 secs. in the 220 yards is also the best performance that has been seen hitherto on the Wesley College ground.

The obstacle races provided some amusement. Half-way round the course, the competitors had to crawl underneath a net which was stretched tightly upon the ground; and after the course was finished, each had to eat a dry bun. The inspection of mouths was performed by the judges. Several tugs of war were pulled between staff and students, old boys and present, etc. The visitors' race was again won, as last autumn, by one of our visitors from Kung Ching Middle School.

Chinese Boxing.

Perhaps the most attractive feature of the whole proceedings was one which had been arranged and got up entirely by the boys themselves. This was a display of Chinese boxing. It is quite different from English boxing. In the latter, one's main object is to get at one's opponent and punch him out. But in China, the gentle art of self-defence is quite otherwise. Your main object is not to hurt your opponent, in the well-founded confidence that he will be equally careful not to hurt you. Hence a Chinese "boxing" contest between two people consists of a striking of attitudes, more or less threatening, a waving of arms and smitting of thighs (generally one's own), varied by certain kangaroo-like hops and flounders, sudden turns of the body, and alternate advances and retreats.

Squad drill was performed under the direction of Mr. Liu Ching-seng, who is the professor of Chinese boxing employed by the Chin Wu Athletic Club in Wuchang. Mr. Liu comes from Shantung, but he has been three years in Shanghai and three in Hankow, and he came last year to reside in Wuchang, where he teaches his art in six or seven schools. Mr. Liu has two enthusiastic disciples in Wesley College, and in response to their request he has recently been giving some of his time to training a selected number of the boys.

The Sword Dance.

Mr. Liu was kind enough to give a display by himself of one or two of the tricks of his trade. While Chinese boxing by no means comes up to the foreign idea of "sport," there is no question but that some of the feats shown to us must require considerable skill, which could only have been acquired by years of practice. Among these are the sword dance, in which the performer keeps two swords whirling around his head and limbs like Indian clubs, with long sweeps coming thrillingly near to his throat and other vital spots. Still harder than this is the display with a long steel chain, composed of thick and heavy links. Holding this by one end, Mr. Liu kept it whirling around his head, twisting about his neck and untwisting again, passing it beneath his whole body while he appeared to be lying at full length upon the ground, then again rising and making it describe figures round his body.

At the close of the day, the medals were presented to the winners by Mrs. Thomas, the headmaster's wife.

NEW BRIDGE OVER THE HAIHO

Thirty-one Tenders in All Currencies for the New Tientsin Project.

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, May 2.

Thirty-one tenders were opened by the Haiho Conservancy Commission yesterday afternoon for the construction of a new International Bridge across the Haiho, and within a few weeks the award will be made to the successful bidder. Tenders have been received from practically all principal resident nationalities in many different currencies which makes it difficult for the examiners to arrive at an early decision. Some bids were made in Francs at the low rate prevailing six or seven weeks ago, whereas at present, the Franc having gone much higher, these bids must be worked out accordingly. Other bids are in gold dollars, pounds sterling, Belgian francs, Italian lire and Yuan dollars.

In addition to the exchange rate problem the plans must be examined carefully by the Haiho Conservancy engineers for practicability, conformity with tendering regulations and other features. Each tender had to be made in two parts, the supply of materials according to the tenderer's design, and the erection, and had to be a complete bid. Contractors could not tender separately for either one of these two parts.

The new bridge, which must be road level and have a road width of 40 feet with additional pedestrian accommodation, will be erected to the west of the present bridge, and form a continuation of Rue de France. Buildings now standing directly opposite the end of Rue de France on the Russian side of the river will be taken down and the road to the East Station curved out in an easterly direction in conformity with the new bridge line.

As to the type of bridge, none was specified in the tender forms, but it is considered by local experts that the most suitable type is the Bascule, or vertical lift bridge. There is no centre pier, the two long spans reaching out from each bank and meeting at the center of the waterway. Each span lifts rapidly into a vertical position, by means of counterweights and electric motors, leaving a clear passage for river craft.

The present bridge with its 28 foot roadway has long been inadequate and when the new bridge is completed, as it is expected to be, by the end of 1925, it will do much to facilitate communications and commerce.

DIVORCE IN CHINA

A Practical Impossibility: "Face" and Conjugul Infidelity.

By The Rev. T. B. Grafton.

Haichow, Apr. 25.

Several times of late there have appeared statements from various sources that divorce under the old régime was a common and easy thing in China. Whatever may be true of China as a whole it is certainly true of Northern Kiangsu that divorce has always been and is at the present time practically unknown except in cases where the wife has been found guilty of illicit relations with another man. The contrary opinion has doubtless been brought about as a logical deduction from the general position of woman in China. But it is never safe to draw logical conclusions from the practices or statements of illogical people and many of us have observed that the rules of logic have small place in the lives of the sons of Han.

Curiously enough the Chinese themselves will in nearly every case give a misleading answer to the question of whether or not a man can of his own free will divorce his wife. They will promptly tell you that he can and if the investigation stopped there the inquirer could pile up an enormous mass of evidence that would doubtless be convincing, but if the first question be followed up with another, "Do you personally know of any such a case?" the answer is almost invariably in the negative. Several times of late after getting an affirmative answer to the first question, I have put the second only to note a look of surprise and bewilderment at the inability to mention any concrete case. Perhaps the chief ground for the prevalence of the belief that divorce is not only possible but frequent is the tacit recognition of the fact that in an immense number of cases (some say practically all) a bride is obtained by practical purchase, and it follows that what a man buys he naturally can sell. But the plain matter of fact is that he does not do it.

The Unfaithful Wife's Family.

If the reader will stop to reflect on some of the well-known characteristics of the Chinese, he will have little difficulty in seeing how divorce is a practical impossibility in China except in cases of infidelity. There is first of all the formidable matter of the wife's family. She certainly cannot be sent back to her own people, for as likely as not they are the very ones who have insisted on an early marriage of the girl in order to rid themselves of her support. Any proposition to send her back to the place from which she has definitely been counted out will meet with an opposition as violent as it is sudden and automatic. In this connexion one should note the stability of the widow in the Chinese home. She is frankly recognized as a burden by her husband's family and they are generally willing enough for her to depart but are utterly unable to force her out. Whatever may be the written law upon the subject, in universal practise the widow has a perfect right to eat out of the family kettle and live under the family roof all of her days. And only one who is mentally deficient will ever relinquish her inalienable rights.

"Face"

If the wife's mother's family be well enough off to view the expense of her return with equanimity there would be the still greater matter of "face." I can think of no greater an outburst of bitterness and no greater a legal battle than if one of the prominent men in this district should attempt to divorce a wife who had also come from a prominent family. Plural marriages are distressingly common and apparently there is no sign of their decreasing, but there is never the question of putting away the original wife. She may be neglected by the husband and if she is too weak to defend herself she may be browbeaten most sorely, but she stays on where she is and, no matter how much she may be hated by her husband, she is still the first wife, in the eyes of the public and also his immediate family.

We have a case at the present time in our circle of acquaintances that well illustrates conditions. A man of the most prominent family in the city has been off to see the world and has brought back with him two new wives. He has made it very plain that he would be delighted to see his first wife depart, but she is serenely "sitting tight," perfectly confident of her position.

Most Stable of all Marital States

My observations point to the Chinese marriage relation as the most stable of all the relations yet devised and practised by man. The methods by which a Chinese marriage is arranged will never appeal to the Occidental. The average marriage relations would not appeal to us as "happy," but for pure stability, Gibraltar is sinking sand in comparison.

In this connexion it may be remarked that most people either forget or have failed to observe that while the Chinese woman has "no legal rights," the law ignores her misdoings except in extreme cases, when she puts poison into her husband's gruel or puncheotes her mother-in-law with a carving knife. The Haichow Girls' School is having ample evidence of the immunity of women from arrest or prosecution. The school was organized last year and started out with glowing colours, taking many pupils from the Mission's girls' school. But alas! They attempted to expel a girl some weeks ago and the young lady refused to be expelled. She made a round of the families of all the other pupils berating every one in sight and also came to school and raised such a row that it was impossible to carry on the school. Being of a prominent family it was impossible to arrest her or even have her kept away. The magistrate was appealed to, but the only remedy he suggested was to close the school! (A wise man!) The lady principal refused to teach under such conditions and it was thought that if she left the affair might blow over. But being a Chinese woman she refused to leave —and there you are.

So in this land where women are counted as nothing we have the spectacle of a single girl openly defying and putting to rout the gentry who are supposed to wield unlimited power and the officials who can cut off a hundred heads without asking anybody. When in the process of time this slip of femininty becomes a wife and her husband decides to divorce her, we hope to be on hand to see the fun!

JAPANESE IMPERIAL WEDDING

Public Celebrations Shortly to be Held: a Series of Imperial Banquets

Tokio, Apr. 24.

Arrangements for the public celebration of the wedding of His Imperial Highness the Prince Regent and Her Imperial Highness Princess Nagako Kuni, are to be announced officially to-morrow.

It will be remembered that when the Imperial Wedding took place last January, all public festivities were postponed, partly because of the inclement wintry weather, but principally because such festivities seemed out of place so soon after the September disaster. According to present plans, however, the public celebration of the auspicious event will take place on the four days commencing from and including May 31.

So far as the court is concerned, the celebration will take the form of a series of imperial banquets, that on the first day being reserved for the members of the Imperial Family, while those on subsequent days will be participated in by the Diplomatic Corps, Government officials, representatives of public bodies, and those prominent in various walks of life. Leading foreign residents of Tokio and Yokohama will also be invited.

Popular celebrations of the event will be organized by the municipal bodies of the chief cities and towns of the Empire.

That in Tokio will take the form of a public function on the grounds immediately adjoining the Imperial Palace, when Their Imperial Highnesses have consented to be the guests of the Municipality.

For the amusement of the general public, open-air entertainments will be staged in different parts of the city, the streets will be decorated, a lantern procession organized, and decorated cars will be run through the principal streets each evening.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OPIUM TRAFFIC ON UPPER YANGTZE

Sales Quite Open: Soldiers' Source of Revenue: Rice-fields' Want of Water

Ichang, Apr. 28.

The opium traffic is still flourishing here. The Customs burned 10 piculs of the drug on the foreshore this morning, this being the results of seizures during the past few weeks. This amount is roughly valued at about $25,000 at the present time. The trade is being carried on quite openly, and pipes and lamps are being exposed for sale on hucksters' stands on the streets. Opium is to be seen everywhere. While travelling in a steam launch the other day, Reuter's correspondent saw cakes of it being put out on a window-sill to dry.

The Kueichow troops, who have their recruiting and refitting headquarters at Itu, are depending on sale of the drug for their support. About a fortnight ago they despatched a consignment of 400 piculs to Hankow or Wuchang, from the sale of which they will obtain pay and equipment.

The wreck of the Robert Dollar was a tragic affair. The Shu-hun was travelling ahead of her and had safely passed through the channel 10 minutes before the Dollar boat struck the rocks. The Shu-hun saw that something was wrong and came back to render what assistance she could. The Robert Dollar listed over to about 70 degrees, and one lady passenger was thrown into the water: fortunately she could swim and made for the shore. The other passengers escaped, but their baggage was damaged by the water. The ship lay with her stern deep in the water and the river washing her to about amidships. A steamer, which arrived to-day, however, reports that the water has fallen and there is more to be seen of her than at first. It is very doubtful whether it will be possible to carry out salvage operations.

The Wanhsien was not badly damaged and has since been able to make Chungking.

The Kweilee, which is one of the Ichang-Hankow steamers, had also the misfortune to get on the rocks near Chikiang. The Kuling took a strong motor-pump to her assistance and she has now been cleared of water and has proceeded to Hankow.

The river has fallen again and it is reported to-day that there is only 3ft. 7in. at Chungking and that the water is still falling. All the larger steamers are being held up there, as they dare not come down with such a low water-mark.

It has been a very dry spring and the farmers are in a very bad way for want of water for the planting of rice.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ROBBERY AND MURDER IN TSINGTAO

Japanese School Accountant Shot Through Head and Robbed of $4,200.

Tsingtao, Apr. 28.

A sensational robbery and murder threw a city into a commotion on Friday. The Japanese accountant of the Japanese Middle School was slain while returning to the building with $4,200 on his person with which to pay the monthly salaries of the teachers. He was waylaid on a narrow road, passing through a small wood within a hundred yards of the school, and was shot through the head before he could defend himself. The money was snatched from his pockets and he was left dead on the road.

The police have arrested a Japanese contractor and one of his Chinese workmen who were engaged in making some repairs at the school building. It is alleged that they have knowledge of the crime, although not actually guilty.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The French Minister was received on Saturday by President Tsao Kun, states the "Sin-waupao,". when he presented President Millerand's congratulatory note in reply to President Tsao's autographed letter notifying the French Government of his assumption of the Presidency.

WUCHANG CHAMBER OF HORRORS

Effigies of Tortured Souls Furbished-up for Annual Fair: Splendours of Estern Hell Temple

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, May 1.

The 28th day of the 4th moon brings round one of the big annual festivals of Wuchang. It is kept at the "Temple of Eastern Hell" outside the east side of the city. No one seems to know the origin of the festival, or even its meaning; but for three days the road is blocked with people of all ages and both sexes coming to and fro, while beggars of the lowest type line the road and reap a harvest of coppers.

This year the big temple has been given a special furnish-up in preparation for the great day. The tiles of the roof have been repaired, and the walls have had a clean coat of whitewash given them, on the outside. More than a month ago, idol-makers were at work plastering up the images and giving them a fresh daubing of paint. In the main temple, several rows of hideous idols stand eight feet high, in all their splendour of vermilion, blue and yellow newly laid on. The dim background of the central shrine is lit up by hundreds of wax candles, like constellations in dark sky, by whose light grim dragons are dimly seen sticking out their ugly heads from the wall.

A Buddhist Hell

Along either side of the central court are side chambers, five on each side behind a screen, showing the tortures that await the soul after death. Here are figures having their heads cut off or being sawn asunder, bound to redhot pillars or being flung from a height on to sharp stakes, some plunged into a sea of fire and others into a lake of ice. Devils with black faces are busy with pitchforks and chains and knives, or blowing up the fires through bamboo tubes. One wonders if erring mortal ever sinned a sin the less for having the horrors of retribution portrayed in such terrible detail!

The crowd that throngs the temple is not a serious one. One man kneels before the central shrine, while the lots are thrown, and draws a tally for which the priest hands to him the corresponding oracle, ready printed on a slip of yellow paper. Another goes from one image to another, kowtowing before each one. But most of them are obviously idle sightseers, out for the day's enjoyment. The open court is crowded with tables at which coolies are noisily feasting.

But the real excitement is outside the temple, and for half a mile along the road. Here are peepshows and fortune tellers and snake-charmers and actors and hawkers—all the kind that gather at a fair in both east and west, and that draw the crowd by their offers of new sights, half mysterious and half grotesque. No doubt in three days they earn enough to buy several times over their tawdry stock-in-trade. The noise of the crowd and the eternal beating of gongs goes on all day and far into the night.

In Hankow, the collapse of a native theatre while a performance was going on has caused injury to some 40 or 50 people. Most of the injuries were slight, but three cases were serious enough to be taken to hospital. The building is known as the Mei Ch'eng Theatre and was only that built last year. The prevalence of this kind of jerry building that so quickly brings disaster is astonishing.

JAPANESE ATHLETES IN HONGKONG

Olympic Games Team's Trial with Local Talent

Hongkong, May 7.

The Japanese representatives who are on their way to the Olympic Games met a number of Hongkong athletes to-day. The visitors won all the swimming and running events except the one-mile running relay race and the 100 yards flat race.

One of the Japanese tennis players, Mr. Ohta, is in hospital being operated on for appendicities, and it is understood that he had abandoned his visit to Paris.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LEPROSY WORK IN PHILIPPINES

Need for Government Annual Appropriations to Continue Task of Cure

Manila, Apr. 22.

The greatest problem now confronting the Philippines health authorities in the Culion leper colony is to keep the field already won so that the disease may be completely put under control, in the opinion of Dr. Victor C. Heiser, Far Eastern representative of the Rockefeller Foundation, who has just returned from an inspection of the Culion colony. Dr. Heiser at one time was director of health of the Philippines.

"This work can be done by continuing annual appropriations from the legislature to carry on the task so well started," said Dr. Heiser. "The greatest danger is that some day the taxpayers may get tired of supporting the colony and drop it altogether. All the ground so far covered in the fight against the disease would be lost, should the appropriations for support of the colony and the treatment of the lepers be cut off.

"The Government spends annually about $500,000 for leprosy work in the Philippines, the per capita cost being about 25 cents to the people of the islands. There are now 5,500 leper patients in Culion and approximately 300 are cured every year under the new treatments. Of the newly arrived patients in Culion, 20 per cent. recover and this proportion may be raised to 90 per cent. should the present treatment be continued. The new treatments, the ethylesther, the Mercado and Indian treatment, are employed according to each individual case."

Dr. Heiser said the work of combating leprosy in Culion would be made easier if goat's milk were available in large quantites, as it is considered perhaps a more substantial food than cow's milk and the latter is hard to obtain.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST RLWY. OFFICIAL

An Accountant in Open Arrest: Penalty for Not Supporting Adml. Wen?

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, Apr. 30.

Mr. T. L. Ku, the Chinese acountant of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway, has been placed under police surveillance in his own home. The house is surrounded by the railway police. Mr. Ku's telephone has been cut off. His friends are endeavouring to save him from prosecution.

It appears that almost simultaneously with his assumption of office as Managing-Director of the Railway succeeding Mr. Liu Kun, Mr. Shao dismissed Mr. Ku because, it is alleged, he had granted undue credit to a Sino-Japanese company, amounting, I understand, to some $280,000. Those in the know, however, say that this is an attempt to get even with him for his refusal to sanction the handing over to Admiral Wen of any sum of money as directed by the Wu Pei-fu clique.

Mr. Lu Pien-tien, formerly President of Nanyang University, was immediately appointed to succeed Mr. Ku as Chief Accountant of the Railway. Mr. Lu assumed his post this morning.

The foregoing will not make the Kao En-hung Administration more popular, although foreigners are well aware the new Tupan and the new Managing-Director of the railway are working for a common cause.

The head of a prominent local firm, who wishes to remain unidentified, expressed the opinion that the prosecution of Mr. Ku will be followed by that of all officials connected with the old régime who were responsible for the disappearance of millions during their tenure of office.

If Mr. Ku is being held for the purpose alleged, then it would be worth while quoting the written assurance of the Governor's Secretary to me, that the Administration is not in any way connected with the financial support of Admiral Wen's squadron, which is a matter for the Central Government to handle.

Official Explanations

May 3.

The detention of Mr. Ku is officially explained as "being due to his carelessness in allowing the debt of the Sino-Japanese transportation company known as the Nikka Kyoshin to mount up to some $350,000, whereas their financial security never exceeded $79,000 at any period." It is denied that any attempt is being made to get even with him for his refusal to part with a single cash for the benefit of Admiral Wen's squadron.

The whole position appears to be that at the time of the Japanese administration of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway, the transportation company had a monopolistic working arrangement whereby the railway granted rebates on all shipments effected by them. This arrangement was carried on the basis of monthly payments. In other words if the total monthly freights due to the railway by the transportation company amounted to $100,000 the latter, when sending in their cheque, would deduct the rebates due them. There has never been any hard and fast contract between the Japanese Administration and the transportation company except in the shape of an order issued by the former.

Action Taken Against Japanese.

It is this order which the Chinese take exception to, maintaining that with the transfer of the railway from Japan to China, it has automatically lapsed. The Japanese have all along argued that inasmuch as the Chinese Administration of the Railway has never rescinded the order issued by the Japanese Administration, it was logical for the Nikkh Kyoshin to conclude that the working arrangement hitherto in existence was recognized and continued. The Chinese argue that the whole thing does not depend upon logical conclusions, but upon legal points and have, consequently, carried the issue into the Japanese Consular Court here. Attempts are being made to hold a Japanese accountant of the Railway, jointly responsible.

The Japanese consular authorities informed me that inasmuch as the whole issue is now sub-judice they could hardly make any statement, but they appear to be not unsympathetic with the Chinese argument that with the retrocession of the railway to China all previous arrangements, not bound by contracts, have lapsed.

The Chinese directors of Nikka Kyoshin when approached by their authorities on the question of the debt, declared that they had severed all relations with the company which, although styled a Sino-Japanese concern, was, in reality, now entirely owned and controlled by the Japanese directors. The company is registered in Tokio, hence the suit filed in the Japanese Consular Court here.

Curse of Monopolies

There is one aspect of these monopolistic arrangements which business men here have not lost sight of, and that is that all arrangements hitherto entered into with transportation companies have been found most unsatisfactory. It is for this reason that they have welcomed with open arms the abolition of the coolie monopoly held by the Kiao-Ao Transportation Co., It is becoming more and more evident, business men say, that these transportation companies have been get-rich-quick schemes in the main, instead of for the purpose of rendering service to the merchants.

MR. TEICHMAN CHINESE SEC. OF BRITISH LEGATION

Peking, May 7.

Mr. Eric Teichman, the acting Chinese Secretary to the British Legation, has now been appointed Chinese Secretary.

Mr. Teichman, who has recently been ill with scarlet fever, will resume his duties in a few days.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MARSHAL Wu Pei-fu has ordered the Survey Department of the Central Government to prepare 30 up-to-date maps of each of the different provinces, marking on them plainly strategic centres. Should the districts be of any importance, the Department is ordered to make separate maps, states the "Journal of Commerce." Marshal Wu also requires 100 maps of each of the Three Eastern Provinces, concludes the report.

THE MEMORIAL IN SZECHUAN

Sanctity of Foreign Life Given a New Emphasis by Chinese Action.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Chengtu, Apr. 16.

Mr. Combe, H. B. M. Consul-General, has just returned from a trip to Mienchu where he took part in the erecting of a memorial stone to Messrs. Watt and Whiteside, who were murdered on August 14 last. This is the latest step taken by our aggressive Consul-General in this notorious case, and is the climax of an unremitting pressure brought to bear for the past seven months on all officialdom here to prevent the recurrence of such a tragedy and to bring home the fact to all bandits and lawless soldiery that British citizens cannot be murdered with impunity even in the wilds of West China. The Consul-General left on April 2 with an escort of 200 soldiers supplied by General Yang Sen in charge of a personal representative. From Mienchu to the scene of the murder, a guard of 400 was supplied by General Liu Bin, Mr. Combe was accompanied by the Reverends Caldwell, Howden and Donnitherne of the C.M.S. and later joined by Dr. Lechler. They made the arduous climb of the mountain to Tien Chih (Heavenly Pool) and put up in the temple, "Lung Wang Miao"—Dragon King Temple, where the murdered men spent their last night. This was at an altitude of 5,000 feet. In the morning they reconnoitred the position for a favourable spot to locate the stone, and found it near by at Kao Chiou-"High Bridge," at the fork of two main roads where it will be conspicuous. The clergymen mentioned conducted the service, Mr. Caldwell leading, the Consul-General being present in full uniform, before an audience of carriers, countrymen and soldiers, Photographs were taken of the stone and lake, and the magistrate was requested to take adequate measures for the protection of the stone, and the party returned, the Consul-General arriving in Chengtu on the 8th.

The whole expedition has elicited very satifactory comments. It is fully recognized that the sanctity of foreign life and property has received a new and strong emphasis in the West. A brief summing up of the results achieved will testify to this. Of the band of eight brigands concerned directly in the murder, the leader of the gang was captured and committed suicide, four others were killed while resisting arrest, the other three are fugitives from justice, who are being followed and every effort being made to apprehend them. This is exceedingly difficult as practically all these men are in a secret society and a few of them very high up and are being protected by their brothers. Also two accessories before the fact have been tried and imprisoned. The right of having trial in Mixed Court with the Vice Consul present to watch proceedings and ask questions was a decided advance. The Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and two magistrates have lost their positions over the case. So there is very reason to believe the case has really come to Chinese officialdom and they are coming to understand that the long arm of the law will follow wrong-doers. Considerable credit is due to Mr. Combe for his strenuous and unremitting efforts to bring the murderers to justice and to rouse the officials from their accustomed lethargy.

The Consul-General is leaving in a day or two for an extended trip to Taitsienlu. An interesting point in the proceedings with the officials at present is that the C. G. is asking for a report once each month as to their success in following up the remaining fugitives.

General Yang Sen is exceedingly vigorous in his campaign of reform and really accomplishing things but seems to be hampered financially. On the day of "Ching Ming" he ordered an Arbor Day, and with hundreds of students and thousands of the populace proceeded out the East Gate for the tree planting ceremony. He made a speech, then the students of the Union University under the direction of Mr. Dickinson of the Agricultural Department planted over 300 trees. The General is attending many public functions and makes good speeches. He is anxious to examine all the educational institutions, foreign and native. He met the foreign community recently at the British Consulate when Mr. Combe invited all the foreign men to meet the General and partake of buffet lunch. It made quite an international occasion with five nations represented.

AMERICAN FLEET AT CHEFOO

Admirable Arrangements of the Navy "Y" to Provide for Thousands of Men

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Chefoo, May 2.

Another month should see the vessels of the American Asiatic Fleet anchored in the bay. Plans are already being made for their reception and it is understood that the first representative of the Navy Y.M.C.A. will arrive here within a few days time to commence the organization of the local depot.

The work done by this organization in past years has been highly commendable and it is to be hoped that their efforts this year will be attended with equal success.

It will readily be understood that the arrival of several thousand men in a town of this size would have a very disturbing effect unless provision were made for them. The Navy "Y" copes with the situation as no other institution could and the residents are duly appreciative. The new hotel, which has now been given the name of the Broadway Hotel, is nearing completion and should be ready to receive visitors next month. As I mentioned in my last letter, it will be under foreign supervision. It is very conveniently situated and should go a long way towards solving the problem of accommodation which has in past years been such a draw-back to the success of Chefoo as a summer resort. Visitors this year will have three hotels at their disposal, the Broadway Hotel, the Astor House and the Sea View Hotel. Despite this fact, however, it is anticipated that there will be a large demand on all available accommodation.

Chefoo Races Revived.

There is at present a good prospect of the Chefoo Race Club being reorganized. We are to have a two days meeting on May 9 and 10 when there should be about 30 ponies in competition in the various events. Stable colours have been revived and a very successful meeting is anticipated. There is to be a big sweep on the Champions, the first prize totalling over $5,000, and if all tickets are sold the Race Club will have a good start in the way of finance in its effort to become again established.

M. MERLIN IN JAPAN

Euthusiastic Reception for Governor-General of Indo-China

Tokio, May 8.

M. Merlin, the Governor-General of Indo-China, arrived in Tokio today. He was welcomed by Government and municipal officials, members of the French Embassy and leaders of the French colony. M. Merlin will be received in audience to-morrow by the Prince Regent and will attend an Imperial luncheon in his honour.

Many of the morning newspapers in their editorial articles welcome the visitor as an opportunity for cementing friendship and economic friendship and economic relations between France and Japan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HONORARY DEGREE FOR DR. MAXIMILIAN TOCH

Peking, May 8.

Dr. Maximilian Toch, Professor of Industrial Chemistry at the Cooper Institute of New York, who came to China at the invitation of the Chinese Government in order to deliver a course of lectures on wood oils and the means of correct adulteration of them, to-day received the degree of Doctor of Science, conferred for the second time by the Government University.

Dr. Toch left for London this evening, viâ Hankow, accompanied by Mr. J. J. Keegan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A JOURNEY HOME BY SIBERIA

How to Get Your Passport: The Tuchun and His Ponies: A Polyglot Train

May 1, one hour from Harbin.

I must keep you posted about my trip home so as to give as much information as I can for friends who intend making the trip across Siberia. I went to the Soviet Mission in Peking where they were most obliging and courteous, and got my passport with their visa on it. I must mention that these visas which are granted in Peking, are in the light of urgency visas, and I understand that Moscow may curtail this privilege if too much resort is made to Peking. One should make up one's mind about seven weeks beforehand and apply through Shanghai or Peking to Moscow. A certain amount of time and anxiety can be saved by wiring to Moscow through the Mission to ascertain if the permit has been granted. My visa cost $11. I saw a real live Tuchun last night. He came on the train that left Mukden at 10.20. When seated in the train my attention was drawn to a portly figure with a rough, weather beaten, but good humoured face, and wearing on his little round black hat an enormous diamond, about the size of a 20 cent piece, set over a square amethyst, and everyone was very deferential to him, I noticed.

He was Gen. Wu Tsen-sheng, the Tuchun of Heilungkiang, and had been to a conference at Mukden, with regard to filling the vacancy, caused by the death of Gen. Sun Lieh-chen, recently the Tuchun of Kirin. I believe the new Tuchun is Gen. Chang Tso-hsiang, an old friend and relative of Marshal Chang Tso-lin.

I apparently was known to some of Gen. Wu's entourage, whose headquarters are at Tsitsihar, in connexion with former pony activities, and when the train left was introduced to him. He offered me half a dozen, and said they were very fast because they had some foreign horse blood in them. On hearing this I had to suppress a rising flood of tears. I pulled out my one bottle of vodka, thanked him, wished him good-night, and went to bed.

The Changchun train left at 8.15 a.m. for Harbin. It is a delightful train, and you couldn't wish for anything better. On going into the dining car for breakfast just now I was greeted quite warmly by the Chinese waiter there, whom I had seen on previous occasions years ago, when up in these parts on my way to buy ponies. A Chinese at my table on noticing this, engaged in conversation, and on my disclosing where I was going, two Norwegians, good seafaring looking people, got up and came over to say they were going home too viâ Siberia. And then a Swede chipped in and said he also was going. As one of the former speaks German, and the latter speaks Russian, it's going to be all right.

My Chinese friend turned out to be Mr. Sia, chief secretary to Dr. C. C. Wang, and works with the Board of Directors of the C.E.R., at Harbin. Trains always leave Harbin on Fridays, by Siberia, so I shall push off to-morrow happy in the prospects of being not entirely with strangers. We leave to-morrow 4.25 p.m. Friday. Leave Manchouli 6.50 p.m. Saturday. Leave Chita about 5 p.m. Sunday, and are due in Moscow the following Sunday, May 11, whence I will write you again on this more important part of the trip.

THE MURDER OF KOREANS AFTER THE JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE

Sentences on the Accused that Excite Comment: No Compensation Yet Paid for any Death

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, April 27.

Further proof of the farcical trials that have been conducted in connexion with the murders of Koreans and Chinese during the species of mob law that prevailed in several parts of the regions affected by the earthquake of last September and supporting the criticism, expressed even in Japan's own Diet on more than one occasion, that implicit trust and confidence cannot be reposed in Japan's judicial machinery, is afforded by a judgment pronounced a couple of days ago by the Yokohama District Court in the case of eight Japanese who killed several Chinese labourers in the Ashigara district, near Odawara, some 40 miles from Tokio.

Four of the accused were sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour each, while two others were sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment each, the other two being released on the ground that the evidence against them was not conclusive.

As though these absurdly light sentences for murder were not farcical enough in themselves, the court further announced that those found guilty and on whom sentence had been pronounced shall be given two years' grace before they serve their sentences, which is tantamount, in practice, to all the offenders being released scot free.

The public procurator, corresponding to the Crown prosecuter in countries where English law prevails and to the District Attorney in lands administered according to American principles, generally the terror of the individual unfortunate enough to be in the dock, pleaded in fact on behalf of the accused, declaring that "if wild rumours had not been circulated immediately after the September disaster, the accused would not have been driven to the point of attacking and killing Chinese nationals." He wound up by asking the judge to deal lightly with the accused.

It is true that wild rumours had excited the populace and that these canards made a blood-thirsty mob of otherwise unoffending country folks, but it is just as true that the authorities themselves were responsible for the dissemination of these canards, some of so absurd a nature as that the Chinese and Koreans, in conjunction, had thrown bombs about the city, had set the petroleum tanks of the Standard Oil Company and the Rising Sun Company on fire, and had thereby encompassed the destruction of the city.

None the less the Chinese and Koreans had to pay for the canards with their lives. The accused are found guilty and are practically set at liberty, the sentence of the court, with the proviso that a period of two years' grace will be allowed making of such a sacred thing like the administration of the law nothing else than a solemn farce.

No proper compensation has as yet been made for the families of the Chinese and Koreans murdered, nor has there been forthcoming any official regrets at the gruesome deeds done, some under the cloak of official protection.

Just at the present time there is much talk in the Japanese press of how the Chinese are ready to fall into the arms of the Japanese making common cause with this country over America's exclusion of Japanese, on the ground that this is a mortification for the Chinese too. What effect other than disgust and distrust can be the reaction the absurdly droll sentences just meted out on convicted murderers by the Yokohama District Court?

According to the "Shunpao," the German Minister has instructed the German Consul-General at Shanghai to investigate into reports that a local German firm is selling arms and ammunition to Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang, of Chekiang.

A new English daily has made its appearance in Canton. It is reported that a group of Americans, British, Chinese and Japanese are interested in the paper, of which Mr. Hin Wong is the chief promoter, editor and manager.

PIRACIES IN CHINESE WATERS

Shipowners' Responsibility for Compensation to Dead and Disabled Officers

London, May 5.

In the House of Commons to-day, Sir H. Kingsley Wood, Unionist Member for West Woolwich, asked for information with regard to the anti-piratical measures in Chinese waters and compensation to dead and disabled British officers.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, replied that he was awaiting the report which would doubtless deal with the question of compensation and the detailed steps taken. He said that British owners of vessels concerned had not been approached by the Colonial Office on the subject of their responsibility for compensation.

Viscount Curzon, Unionist Member for South Battersea asked whether Mr. Thomas was able to do anything to increase the use of wireless on ships in Chinese waters.

Mr. Thomas said that the difficulty was being considered in all its widest aspects.—Reuter.

Kwong Tak Pirates Executed.

SHARKS IN MANILA BAY

Supposed to Have Been Driven into Harbour Owing to Earthquake Shocks

Manila, Apr. 22.

Fishermen have reported an unusual number of sharks in Manila Bay in recent weeks and some scientists believe that the many earthquakes experienced in the Philippines and adjacent islands have driven the sharks into less disturbed waters. While a majority of the sharks are small and presumably harmless, a few of the man-eating variety have played havoc with fishermen's nets. Local markets are flooded with these small sharks, which the Chinese prize highly for food.

It is said that in the days when Dewey's ships were lying in the bay near Cavite, "swimming call" for the crew was sounded each day, but now crews of the American fleet are forbidden to swim in the deep water unless they remain within the wire screening at Canacao Bay, where the Cavite naval station is located.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SEVERE EARTHQUAKE OFF PHILIPPINES

JAPAN AND THE SOVIET

Moscow, May 6.

A statement in the Japanese press that the Russo-Japanese pourparlers were hampered by M. Karakhan's inadequate powers is officially and categorically denied. On the contrary, it is pointed out that M. Karakhan possesses full powers, but that notwithstanding his direct demand and the Soviet Government's reiterated representations, Tokio obstinately refuses to invest its Minister at Peking with the same full powers which might enable preliminaries to be immediately reopened.—Reuter.

"NO-SOLDIER BLESSING"

Quiet, Prosperous Corner in Honan

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kueiteh, Ho., Apr. 28.

A trip around the Yungcheng and Hsiaih districts has shown that whilst we in Kueiteh have been greatly needing rain, and getting duststorms instead, those districts have been getting rain in sufficient quantities. The autumn crops have been planted and I saw kaoliang at Hsiaih in many fields which is already a couple of inches high. The country is enjoying a time of exceptional peace and quietness too just now for which the people are very thankful. They had their share of trouble last year when Lao Yang-jen's men were quartered there. Now they are enjoying the "no-soldier blessing" (無兵之福) as their expression goes, for they are fortunate enough not to have any of the regular soldiers quartered in these towns but only their own militia who do not mutiny.

There is a glorious rain falling here in Kueiteh to-night for which the people will be thankful indeed. Owing to the drought it has not been possible to plant the autumn crops, Kaoliang and millet, upon which the poor depend for their food and fuel and the spectre of another famine was already appearing before the vision of the people. This timely rain has dissipated this terror, however, and the sowing will not be too late. Barley has headed out all through the district and the wheat, although somewhat yellowed and stunted, will still probably produce quite a fair crop now that the rain has come.

MILITARY AFFAIRS IN SZECHUAN

The Struggle for Supremacy Between Rival Generals to be Investigated.

Peking, May 1.

Gen. Sung Chih-tien, Chief of Staff to Marshal Wu Pei-fu, has arrived at Hankow en route to Chungking, where he will make an investigation into the military affairs of that province. His report to Marshal Wu is expected to settle the struggle for supremacy between Generals Yang Sen and Liu Tsun-hou.

According to reports received by Chinese military circles in Peking, Gen. Hsiong Keh-wu has reached Yungning, southwestern Szechuan, with his forces. The men are said to be tired and dispirited. They are short of ammunition and have received no pay for several months. —Reuter's Pacific. Service.

SHIPPING TAXES AT CANTON

Traffic Suspended in Protest

Canton, May 6.

Canton shipping was suspended to-day as a protest against the recent increase of 20 per cent. in the freight and passenger traffic taxes, which is going to the support of the war. Shippers are protesting, on the ground that the taxes are already too heavy. Traffic in Canton and the locality is practically stopped. The Hongkong-Canton traffic is not affected, because the military order does not include foreign-owned bottoms.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen's aviators are so badly in need of ammunition and bombs, says the Chinese press, that of late they have been dropping big stones over Waichow, the headquarters of Gen. Chen Chiung-ming!

ATTACK ON MISSIONARY

Outrage at Tongshan: Ferocious Assault on the Rev. F. B. Turner

("North-China Daily Mail.")

Tientsin, May 5.

The Rev. Frank B. Turner, of the United Methodist Mission, who has been long resident in China, was attacked in Tongshan a day or two ago, without the least provocation, by a Chinese armed with a short scaffold pole.

The man came up behind and struck the missionary a heavy blow on the head. Mr. Turner, who might have fallen dead on the ground like the Russian officer in the French Concession at Tientsin recently, bore the blow bravely, and turned round to face his assailant. The latter then struck him another blow, tearing open the flesh across the face.

Mr. Turner, greatly shaken and damaged by the blows, was taken home, where his injuries were attended to, and he was afterwards able to come to Tientsin for surgical treatment.

No complaint has been lodged at the British Consulate and it is understood that Mr. Turner does not wish publicity to be given to the matter.

PANCHAN LAMA'S VISIT TO PEKING

Movements still Uncertain: a Probable Sojourn at Wutaishan

Peking, May 5.

Mr. Ta Shou, who has been appointed Chief of the Committee to receive the Panchan Lama and arrange for his accommodation during the forthcoming visit to Peking, held a similar office when the Dalai Lama visited Peking, in 1908. Mr. Ta Shou accompanied the Living Buddha of Tibet to the Mongolian border when the Dalai Lama left Peking at the end of that year.

In the first telegram from Gen. Lu Hung-tao announcing the arrival in Kansu of the Panchan Lama it was stated that the Tibetan visitor did not wish to reach Peking during the hot weather, which would be a severe contrast to the cool climate of Tibet. It is thought, therefore, that the Lama's visit to Peking may be brief and that he may determine to spend the hottest period of the year at Wutaishan, Shansi, where it is comparatively cool even in the hottest months.

Wutaishan possesses one of the most sacred Lamaist temples in China. Great historical interest attaches to it, and, as it is both a "Red and a Yellow" temple, it would be a suitable place of residence for the Red Lama and his suite.

Since being informed that the Panchan Lama hoped to leave Lanchowfu on May 2, the Government has received no further word from Gen. Lu Hung-tao, and it is not definitely known which route the Lama will travel by. The Government suggested that he should come by way of Sianfu and Kuanyintang, but it is now thought that he may prefer the more direct route viâ Paotouchen and the Suiyuan Railway.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE YIHYANG MARU CAPTIVES

Peking, May 5.

The $100,000 sent to Hokiang to ransom the two Japanese officers of the Yihyang Maru has now been brought back to Chunking, and arrangements are being made for a sufficient escort to convey it to Tunghaicheng, a journey of four days from Chungking through bandit infested country.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Mr. L. A. Lyall, the local Commissioner of Customs, learns that the report that Sir Francis Aglen has memorialized the President by proposing the deepening of the West River, Canton, out of the funds of Canton's share of the Customs Surplus, is "inaccurate and highly misleading."

HIDDEN WEAPONS IN TIENTSIN

Rumour of Vast Hidden Stores of Munitions Emphatically Contradicted

TIENTSIN NEWS SERVICE.

Tientsin, May 5.

The report issued to-day by the "Far Eastern Times" that "There is enough arms and ammunition stored away in Tientsin to blow the city into the middle of the Yellow Sea," is absolutely denied by responsible authorities, who say further that there is no foundation whatsoever for such a disturbing report.

Since the Italian arms and ammunition left Tientsin, no other war material of any description has reached the Concessions, and the only arms imports to the port of Tientsin have come from Shanghai on a Government "huchao," and are stored in the Customs Magazine at Tangku. Part of this shipment came last December, part in January and a small part recently. The entire amount is not considered large enough to warrant inclusion in the Customs Daily Returns, which are printed and published every day in the week. This small shipment will be passed on to places designated by the Peking Government when certain irregularities in the "huchao" are straightened out.

In any case there are no war materials, whether large or small shipments, stored in Tientsin at the present moment.

Rumours have been circulated that the Germans have been and are importing large quantities of ammunition and Mauser pistols, and that these materials were due to come in by recently arrived German ships. However, in spite of careful searching, the only hardware found on these boats has been iron wire nails. If any quantities have been smuggled in, they cannot, it is held, be large enough to dispossess Tientsin of its present geographical location.

The Authorities' Powers.

In connexion with the same newspaper's report, the statement that "none of the foreign concession authorities have the power" "to prevent the wholesale importation of arms," is untrue in fact and in substance. Article 28 of the Land Regulations of the British Concession provides for the possession of firearms, the licensing of holders, and states that "any person infringing or offending against the provisions of this regulation shall be liable upon conviction to a fine not exceeding $300 or to imprisonment for a period of three months with or without hard labour." The regulations further state that conveyance through the concession of arms and ammunition or materials for the manufactures of such is prohibited under a penalty not exceeding $50 and that the possession or storage of same is prohibited under penalty of a fine not exceeding $200. The owners, lessees and occupants of premises on which such material is found shall be held liable under these regulations. The sale and supply of arms and ammunition to Chinese in the Concession is also prohibited under penalty of $500 and confiscation of the goods.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT IN JAPAN

Three Killed and 20 Injured

Tokio, May 8.

Last night at 10.40, an express-train on the Tohoku line was derailed and upset while passing Nagamachi station, near Sendai with the result that three men were killed on the spot and over 20 more or less seriously wounded.

On the train were Mr. Takahashi, President of the Seiyukai, and party, who were on their way back to Tokio from their election campaign, but fortunately they escaped injury.

The railway accident was due to a misplaced switch which caused the express train to collide with a freight train.

The suspicion of a deliberate attempt against the Seiyukai leader is without foundation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Later.

Late last night a train in which Viscount Takahashi, President of the the Seiyukai party, was proceeding to Tokio from Amori was wrecked near Sendai. Four persons were killed and several injured. Viscount Takahashi and his party escaped unhurt.

A deliberate attempt against the leader of the Seiyukai party is suspected, similar to that made before the opening of the Diet in January, when a train in which leading members of the Seiyukai, including Viscount Takahashi, were travelling was wrecked near Nagoya.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WRETCHED REFUGEES OF KIRIN

Terrible Silent Suffering Among Russian Exiles: Hope Well-nigh Dead

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kirin, Apr. 30.

You will think that I send you little general news these months and that I am obsessed with the Russian refugee problem. I fear that it is true. It is still the uppermost thing in my mind.

When miners are entombed how tense is the feeling round the pit-head. Is everything being done that can be? What are the chances of rescue? The whole community is deeply moved. But when it is a long drawn-out tragedy such as we here are now witnessing of tens of thousands of despoiled and dispossessed wanderers marooned in a strange land sympathy gradually evaporates. As many are finding a means of earning a meagre living there are fewer striking evidences of their distress. As day-labourers, carters, wood-cutters, small shop-keepers, and tradesmen they are managing to exist. Still the fact remains that there is an appalling amount of silent unseen suffering in our midst. I am speaking chiefly of Manchuria and particularly of the Chinese Eastern Railway zone. Thousands there are underfed and insufficiently clothed.

Generous Help from Chinese.

The Chinese are a humane people and are unobtrusively helping more than is generally known. I heard the other day of a comparatively poor Chinese merchant giving $40 to a Russian to enable him to buy a horse in order to do carting to support his family. A hundred suits of wadded Chinese clothing were distributed by the Chinese officials in this city recently. We do not hear a tenth of what the Chinese are doing for these stranded aliens. Oftener than we dream do they not up to their own saying "Benevolence that is known is not true benevolence."

But what of the mental suffering? Some of us have had experiences which enable us in some measure to realize it. The magnificent pictorial moralities of G. F. Watts are familiar to all of us. His best known is perhaps "Hope." The impression which this picture makes upon one is ineluctable. I have seen more of its profound and subtle import since being brought into close contact with the refugees, during the last 18 months. The blind-folded, solitary, helpless, pathetic figure clinging to her lyre and bending to catch the music of the one remaining string—could you imagine a more vivid emblem of the exiles in our midst! Their religious faith is being tried as by fire. They pray and the heavens are as brass. Their faith in human nature is wavering. They have witnessed such cruelties and experienced much callous indifference. Is it to be wondered at that some of them are becoming cynical. To them who have not bread enough to eat the every-day display of luxury and wealth in the great cities of the Far East must appear incongruous. Despair is not far off but Hope has still her trembling finger on the last string.

The League of Nations, which is the largest and most humane and sympathetic political organization that the world has ever seen, has now the matter in hand. I believe that the timorous hope of the outcasts will soon be justified.

THE memorial service for the late Baron Ijuin, ex-Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Japanese Government, was observed at the Public Hall Tientsin yesterday. The service was attended by leading Japanese residents as well as by many distinguished Chinese, including Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, Mr. Tsao Ju-lin and Yang Yi-teh, Chief of Police Administration of Chihli.

BETTER AND BIGGER WARS

"Life's" Mock Contest: A Gentle Rebuke from Ex-Japanese Ambassador

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokio, April 29.

The immigration issue has given birth to at least one humorous episode in Japan when "Life," the well-known American comic weekly, caught Baron Shidehara, former Ambassador to the United States, napping.

In its February issue, "Life" declared that it wanted "bigger and better wars" and announced a prize contest, with monetary rewards to those submitting "the best suggestions on how to start another war." Apart from the fact that "Life" is a recognized humorous paper, the conditions attached to the contest prove that nothing but a glorified joke was intended. For instance, one of the conditions says that "the contest will close on April 15, 1924, . . . and that it ought to be possible to have the fighting begin on April 30 sharp."

Now talk of this kind, even in joke, is uncompromisingly frowned on by the Japanese Police who are the nation's censors. Copies of "Life," containing this proposal for dishing up new ways to have another outbreak of hostilities, were banned, the Police confiscating such issues as came into the country. Not all were, however, thus disposed of and some containing the suggestion—which the Police regard as the most dangerous of "dangerous thoughts"—managed to enter the country through secret and underground channels.

The former Ambassador, Baron Shidehara, it is said, was an eager reader of "Life" during the time he was tenant of the Japanese Embassy in Washington. To "Life," he turned when he wanted some respite from the tedium of difficult diplomatic duties. After he returned to Japan, "Life" was sent to him regularly and he read it as assiduously here as he did when in the United States. The February issue demanding plans for "bigger and better wars" stirred the ire of the former diplomat who either did not see the joke, or, more probably, decided that "Life" was carrying a joke too far in jesting about matters so brimful of misery to humanity.

Accordingly Baron Shidehara wrote off the following letter to the editor of "Life":

> In reply to your inquiry regarding your campaign for bigger and better wars, it is my opinion that it is doomed to failure. You cannot accomplish it; we have too much strength on the other side. Even if you succeed in persuading the American people of the great gain and the incomparable honour to be achieved, I believe the rest of the world would succeed in defeating your purpose.
> "At this extremely critical time which is one for the most complete frankness, I may be permitted to divulge the fact that a tacit and unwritten, although none the less definite, agreement, the League of Nations which is known in the highest circles as well as amongst the masses, exists between Japan and several other Powers, and that we are feverishly at work enlisting the association of as many nations as possible. The object of this association, however unworthy you may consider our cause, is to maintain peace, promote friendship and develop commerce.
> "With the greatest respect for 'Life' and without in any way desiring to criticize you or your countrymen, please permit me to contend that Americans are altogether too ambitious. You have in the United States most of the best and biggest things in the world, but we think the recent World War will retain the record as the biggest and best for a few weeks, and, we hope, for a few months longer.
>
> With assurances of my highest esteem, I remain, Mr. Editor,
> Most Undiplomatically,
> Your enthusiastic admirer,
> KIJURO SHIDEHARA.

OUR Mienchow correspondent writes that Mrs. Watt and Mrs. Whiteside, widows of the murdered missionaries, together with the Rev. and Mrs. F. Boreham, left that city two ladies leaving China for good. Mr. and Mrs. Boreham had an unfor Home early in April, the former pleasant experience while passing into a big rapid near Taihochen on the journey down river. Their boat struck a rock, and became half full of water. Fortunately they escaped with their lives and baggage. Shortly afterwards another misfortune overtook the wayfarers. Master Gordon Watt developed measles. This necessitated a halt while two of the party went on ahead to procure a foreign doctor.

CHINA'S SOVEREIGN RIGHTS ON THE ATHLETIC GROUND

Two Days of Sport in Wu Han: No Meddlesome Foreigner Allowed to Interfere with His Tiresome Ideas of Organization and So a Glorious Muddle

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, May 3.

The postponed Wu-Han Athletic Sports have just been held, to-day and yesterday, on the big Public Sports Ground near the Hupeh Provincial Assembly Hall, which was given last year by Tuchun Hsiao to be used for public sports by all the schools in Wuchang. For the second time in history, the Wu-Han Sports have been planned and carried through by a committee formed by the Government Schools of Wuchang, and without the aid or advice of the interfering foreigner; and the result was an even more glorious hotch-potch than last year. As a Chinese friend, whom I met yesterday on the field, said to me with some indignation: "There is no order and no organization."

But, after all, why should we easy-going orientals allow ourselves to be inconvenienced by these rigid western ideas about law and order? When we are out for sport, let us have it, and not spoil it all by making too much hard work of it. What we want is gaiety and show and a general holiday, and not the strenuous competition and expenditure of energy that make a burden of life.

Why Worry.

So, in the first place let us have a good ambitious programme, without worrying too much as to whether it can be carried out in the brief space of two days. Two pages of the names of officials, who will wear coloured badges and give a general tone to the proceedings, makes a good start. Then the names of 650 competitors from 45 different schools looks like real business; and if, for instance, the entry of 105 runners for the 400 metres race makes it necessary to have seven preliminary heats,—well, perhaps they won't all turn up to run. Mere races and jumping, even on so large a scale as this, will prove far too dull an entertainment; so let us combine with them a football league, games of hockey and basket-ball, and exhibitions of drill and boxing. And now we have a programme which, in scope and variety, for a two-days' athletics meet has probably never been rivalled!

In the next place, if things do not take place exactly as planned, it does not really matter, for the programme is capable of infinite variation. If competitors do not turn up in time for their races, they can easily be given another opportunity a little later on of showing the crowd what they can do. If only one football team turns up to play off the league matches, so much the better: not having been beaten, they must be the winning team, and they have every reason to be pleased with themselves. If a volley-ball pitch happens to be marked off on part of the hockey ground just before the hockey players have had time to mark out their own lines, the game of hockey can easily be scrapped and no-one the worse for it. Even the race of ten-thousand metres need not really worry us; for it is getting too late in the day for such a lengthy performance, and in any case, the competitors do not intend to hurt themselves by more than an ambling pace, so that they are not likely to break down over it.

The Too Eager Spectators.

The enthusiasm of the crowd knows no bounds. So eager were they to get a close view of the athletes, that an avenue only two yards in width was left for the hundred metres race, which had to be postponed until a more convenient season. The heavy shot was skilfully put down a lane only three feet broad. The discus landed on a spectator's umbrella; he was a lucky fellow not to get his head cut open.

Later on in the day, a combined effort of soldiers and police succeeded in driving the crowd to the outside of the 400 metres track, where the scouts were able to more or less hold them at bay. But the greatest excitement of all was when a dog, escaping through the barrier, ran right round the course urged on by the cheering of the crowd and the poles of the scouts. Every-one was anxious to see him do a second lap; but the poor brute refused to oblige, and, luckily for him, he managed to escape by putting his nose through a gap in the line of spectators and pushing his way through.

It was a glorious two days, spoiled only a little by some wet weather and cold wind. But every-one was in good spirits, and no-one was hurt. If the object of athletic sports is to provide harmless amusement to both athletes and spectators, and to send every-one away filled with a sense of satisfaction at a brave show carried out with éclat,-then the Wu-Han sports this year must be pronounced a huge success.

NEW CHURCH AT YANGCHOW

Impressive Ceremony of Consecration: A Large Attendance

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Yangchow, May 8.

A significant event, the consecration of Immanuel Church, took place in Yangchow on Friday, May 2, beginning at 10 a.m. After a recital on the new organ, by the Rev. W. R. Roberts of Nanking, there was a quiet interval, interrupted by the choir outside the church, announcing that the procession was at hand by singing "The Church's One Foundation." On reaching the front door, which had been closed for five minutes, the Bishop knocked and the door was opened by the vestry of the local congregation. The 24th Psalm was read the Bishop walked down the centre aisle followed by 13 clergy, Chinese and American, from various stations of the Kiangsu diocese. Then came the vestry, for whom a bench was reserved in front of the pulpit. The choir came in last.

Mr. Chen, the local Chinese clergyman, read the Sentence of Consecration. The Consecration service proper was conducted by Bishop Graves, and was followed by Morning Prayer. The sermon was preached by Mr. S. C. Kuo, rector of St. Peter's Church in Shanghai. The Lord's Supper was celebrated by the Bishop. Several other clergymen, Chinese and American, took various parts in the services.

Among those who attended the Consecration of the new church, were the student body of Mahan School, girls from St. Faith's School, the older students from two day schools, and representatives from each of the congregations in the city.

The building is of Gothic architecture, and within to either side, are six high, arched columns. The church, including the chancel, seats about 500 people. The pulpit, communion table and other special furnishings for the chancel, were made in Shanghai.

OPIUM CULTIVATION IN ANHUI

Farmers' Protest and Request for Investigation of Taxes and Conditions

Peking, May 6.

The International Anti-Opium Association has received the following communication from Anhui: "We, farmers of Hsuihsien, Anhui, beg to inform you that we are now compelled to cultivate opium by our local Magistrate, Wang Shu-kung. Each mow of opium fields is taxed $15. We beg you to appeal for the Magistrate's removal, as he does us nothing but serious harm, also to ask you to telegraph to the Provincial Government urging that exemplary punishment should be inflicted. If you could despatch secret investigators to this place they could reach here by travelling on the Tientsin-Pukou railway as far as Fulichi station, and if they went on then to Hueikuchi, they would find that this place is covered with poppy. (It is understood that the conditions set out above are to apply equally to the American fliers.)—Reuter's Pacific Service.

In a despatch to the "Daily Telegraph," Mr. Perceval Landon gives an account of a visit he had made to Wu Pei-fu at his headquarters at Loyang. The restoration of the ancient Chinese capital of Loyang which is the cynosure of all eyes at this moment, he tells us, has been entirely the work of Wu Pei-fu, who selected this spot as that from which he could best survey and influence the half-dozen actual or possible theatres of war with which he is now dealing or will have to deal. This, the nerve-centre of the Republic, does not betray its real importance at first sight; the map explains its strategic value. Wu Pei-fu will probably make Yochow, in Hunan, his second base as soon as active operations begin, should he not then be satisfied with the condition of affairs in the south.

A RAIN OF SILVER IN KANSU

Peasants Who Find that the Old Dog Trough is a Valuable Antiquity

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Lanchow, Kan., May.

I have had occasion previously to speak of the Swedish archaeologist, Dr. J. G. Anderson, who has been making such interesting discoveries right under the very noses, as one might say, of old residents in Kansu. Sites of ancient burial places, that date back to the days of Neolithio man, have been unearthed in the near vicinity of Lanchow. It has been all really funny from a certain point of view, because of the change of the point of view of our local people. Naturally, the urns and pots of the old graveyards have from time to time been brought to light. They were esteemed of little value, however, so that when Dr. Anderson gave $100 for one urn, some months ago, the news of such windfalls was carried far and wide. Art dealers, farmers, coolies, all started in the great search. One man, who fed his dog out of such a pot, heard about it, cleaned his pot up, took it to Dr. Anderson, and got an encouraging price. The result of course was that the scientist's yard was filled with men and urns, and resembled a little village fair. A slump followed. Dr. Anderson was able to buy things of considerable value, from his point of view, at moderate rates, and heard of several good sites. He has now gone to do digging at one or two of the most hopeful of them.

Wu Pei-fu's Insinuating Hand.

The political situation here remains rather nebulous. The Tuchun, Gen. Lu Hung-tas, appears determined to keep his post as long as possible. His wife is now on her way from Tientsin to join him, but whether this is his wish or hers, is not certain. Reports say that when she appears, his secondary wife will have to beat a hurried retreat. Lu has ousted the Civil Governor, Lin, as he wishes to get the whole of the opium tax into his hands, it is said. So that Lu holds both offices for the present. Ma Fuh-hsiang, the well-known Moslem leader, is said to be trying to get the post of Civil Governor. It is hardly likely that he will succeed, as the local prejudice against Moslems is so strong.

Wu Pei-fu, according to reports, is trying to get his old teacher, Gen. Wu, now in Suchow, to be appointed as Commander of the troops here. Gen. Wu is well spoken of, but the Tuchun is not likely to allow himself lightly to be robbed of power in this way. Wu Pei-fu is sending, we hear, quite a number of officers to take charge of various branches of the troops in Kansu. Some people think he wants in this way to get rid of the present Tuchun. Lu, however, has plenty of money, and will doubtless let Wu Pei-fu have a good share of the spoils of his opium growing orgies. Indeed, at present Lu's policy seems to be to give hush money, or presents to all who interfere in any way with his plans, foreigners included. Medallions and Orders of Merit flow freely. Perhaps they will form a new kind of depreciated currency some day soon.

THE "British Medical Journal," commenting on the cases reported of players of mahjongg suffering from severe inflammation of the skin of the hands, attributes the trouble to the extract from the Japanese lacquer tree used in embellishing the boxes. The beautiful imported mahjongg boxes, covered with Japanese lacquer, should be regarded with some suspicion at present.

THE National Road Construction Association letters from the Ministry of War, the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce, and Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan, Governor-General of Hunan and Hupeh, approving of the Association's suggestion that soldiers be used for the construction of national highways. But surely the only road the N. R. C. A. is interested in is that round Shanghai?

THE TRUTH ABOUT NORTH SZECHUEN ROAD EXTENSION DISTURBANCE

Plot by Agitators to Extract $50,000 from Landlord: Failing in This, They Got $10,000 from Tenants "Legal Expenses"

CHAPEI POLICE PROCLAMATION AUTHORIZING REBUILDING BY LANDLORDS WHICH CHINESE PRESS NEVER PRINTED

It was to be expected that the Chinese press accounts would be biassed and intentionally distorted. The inflammatory articles appearing daily in the vernacular press attacking the native authorities, fostering anti-foreignism, and furthering the cause of a few paid agitators, could not be accomplished anywhere else but under the aegis of the Foreign Settlements and the Consulates under which the papers are registered, whose protection they seek whenever in trouble. These yellow sheets, instead of presenting the case impartially and publishing the facts as they find them, go out of their way to suppress whatever is unfavourable to their contentions, and give the widest publicity to only one side of the question, their own, thereby misleading the public, and inciting the people to resist law and order, on the ground apparently that any settlement in law according to the principles of Justice in favour of foreign interests must be wrong and fought to the last ditch. They are not concerned with equity. It is hard to say what this sort of mentality really wants. If there had been no misrepresentation and suppression of facts well-known to them, by the native press, this "mild riot" would never have occurred.

A Plot to Get Money

Coming down to bed-rock, the whole thing was engineered to extort Tls. 50,000, demanded by three professional agitators, which they sought to impose upon the owner as the price of immunity from "popular trouble." To bring to a head this systematic inflaming of the public mind, improper propaganda was used with the aid of the native press enjoying the hospitality and the protection of the Foreign Settlements. Banditry, so long rampant in the interior, has lately been extended with impunity to include all sorts and conditions of foreigners as victims. Why not, therefore, here in Shanghai? This is the state of mind responsible for this latest attempt to impose the notorious Chinese methods obtaining everywhere where dishonesty is the best policy, upon law-abiding residents of these Foreign Settlements, making the issue, when various other expedients failed, one of "Sovereign Rights" and national prestige. This last cuts both ways. But the rabble are not concerned. They take their pay and go their way, and are assured of protection. They have nothing to lose, and all is rice that comes to the bowl. Who were the creators of the disturbances? Some 400 men. Where did they come from? They were not the tenants, or even residents of the neighbourhood. They were assembled for unlawful purposes, and the Chapei police, after appearing, withdrew. Comment is needless. These professional disturbers of the peace are given a free hand by the very protectors of the peace.

Owner a British Subject

The usual irresponsible innuendoes and misleading statements emanating from professional agitators, and not from any recognized organization or public bodies, have appeared in the press, one often repeated is that the owner of the property is a Chinese for whom a foreign firm is agent. The truth could easily have been ascertained if there had been any doubt about it. Acting on these and similar allegations, the Chinese authorities concerned had already made a thorough investigation, and were satisfied that the legal and beneficial owner is not a Chinese but a British subject, and in consequence they gave wide publicity to their finding, caused a proclamation to be issued and exhibited in public reciting the facts of the case, requested the tenants to vacate within one month, and publicly stated unequivocally that Messrs. Brandt & Rodgers, Ld., were entitled to commence building operations on such.

This proclamation could not possibly have escaped the notice of the Argus-eyed Chinese press. Yet this important news was not published; neither was any notice taken of the fact that all regulations of the Chinese authorities had been complied with; not one word about the free and gratis surrender of land required by the Chinese public Works Department for the widening of the two Chinese thoroughfares on the north and south respectively of the property, only a great furore about the concession to the Municipal Council's road on the east, the most important and urgent requirement of all.

Tenants Six Months Free

Does anybody know that the tenants did not pay any rent for six months? Did they have anything to say about this? In short, the native reports were partisan, prejudiced and libellous in the main, with the object of creating ill-feeling against foreigners in general. The "Sovercign Rights" cry was served up in various forms ad nauseam, and the assistance of the native press unstintingly given, knowingly or unknowingly, to the mischievous tactics employed by the few agitators, who are fostering anti-foreignism, tinged with Bolshevism, for the sole purpose of lining their pockets.

In this, though the expected extortion from the landlord has failed of realization, they have had a measure of success, as a sum exceeding $10,000, the rents due to the landlord, have been collected illegally from the tenants by these unauthorized collectors, who gave out that the money would be used for alleged "legal expenses." The tone of the press which countenances and condones such high-handed proceedings is deplorable, and the art of making trouble for purposes of extortion has been reduced to a fine art.

The trouble subsided with the suppression of the paid fighters, and contrary to the statements of interested parties none of the tenants were hurt or even roughly handled, nor did the police have any occasion to use physical force on them. All credit is due to the Municipal Police for their handling of a situation fraught with possiblities admirably and tactfully, affording thereby an object lesson to the neighbouring police administration which failed to come to the scratch. As it happened, the large force of Municipal Police was necessary to subdue the numerous gangs of paid hooligans assembled for the purpose of resisting the law. As in other cases, toleration is always taken for weakness, and stern insistance on full rights is the only possible course, in face of the almost daily encroachments we now see paramount.

Chapei Police Authorization

The owner's petition for summonses to be served on the recalcitrants by the Mixed Court was sent to the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, who refused to forward it to the proper quarter, thus leaving the landlord no other alternative than to appeal to the native authorities concerned, who, upon a thorough investigation to the ownership and claims of the owner, caused a proclamation to be issued jointly by the Chinese Police Administration and the Chinese Public Works on March 26, 1924, ordering the tenants to remove within one month, and permitting the landlord to commence building operations on such date. A free translation of this proclamation is as follows:—

PROCLAMATION ISSUED BY THE SHANGHAI & WOOSUNG POLICE COURT AND CHAPEI MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, dated March. 26 12th year R. C.

"Whereas the owner of the premises Ni Lou Lee Alleyway, Ju-kiang road, Brandt & Rodgers, Ld., has written to the effect that the buildings on said premises situated on the corner of N. Szechuen Rd. are decaying, it was resolved to reconstruct the said buildings; application was thereby made in the month of November of last year for issuance of a permit for reconstruction to our Council and was duly granted; but, a considerable period having elapsed, the proposed work could not be commenced on account of violent interference committed by various tenants, consequently the contratcor for said buildings demanded a damage amounting to more than Tls. 10,000 resulting from depreciation of values of the materials; the petitioning Company bought the said premises in Chinese territory with a view to developing the market, the Municipal Council has already issued permit for reconstruction of the buildings on said premises, therefore the rights of the owner should be protected; and furthermore the petitioning Company has complied with all the regulations of the Municipal Council and has surrendered a part of the premises for sake of public road, and as the said contractor has repeated his demands on said Company, so the petitioner is compelled to write to request this Council to take steps to eliminate such interferences in order to facilitate such commencement of work and let the petitioner have an early reply.

The Chief of this Council, having found out that the tenants did file a petition to this Council, that communications were received from the Civil Governor and Shang-poa Cities Magistrate and replies were respectively given to same, and that rulings were clearly made on said petition, has referred the matter to the Defence Commissioner, asking for instructions as to whether this Council shall order aforesaid commencement of work or take other steps in the premises, and received instructions from the said Commissioner to the effect that whereas Mr. Brandt, of Brandt & Rodgers, Ld. (British), and Yu Sin Pei, the representative of the tenants of the premises of Ni You Lee, and public bodies of Shang-poa cities, filed petitions to this office, instructions were given to the Shanghai & Woosung Police Court to deal with the matter in accordance with justice, and as to your proposal for issuance of an order directing the commencement of work by the owner, you are hereby authorized to do the same in conjunction with the Shanghai & Woosung Police Court, and duly report to this office, therefore we, the Chief of Police Court, and the Chief of Municipal Council, being satisfied that the permit was issued for reconstruction of the buildings on the said premises, and all requirements have been complied with, do hereby issue this Proclamation ordering commencement of work in order to confirm our original decision, but, for the sake of showing leniency to the tenants, time will again be given to prepare them to quit the premises.

Besides reporting the matter to the Defence Commissioner as instructed, this Proclamation is hereby issued ordering the said tenants to quit the above premises within one month in order to facilitate the commencement of work and construction of the above premises, and that no further interferences of whatever nature should be made to cause any delays in said work."

Chief of Shanghi & Woosung Police Court.

Chief of Chapei Municipal Council.

Being under the pernicious influence of the three paid agitators; the orders of their own authorities were disregarded, slighted and treated with contempt. Placards were issued and posted, banners were [illegible], and [illegible] were even affixed next to the said Proclamation defying the authorities, [illegible]. "We shall here, and [illegible]. What can you or the law do if we refuse to move out?" So these misguided people went ahead and created an impossible situation, with the cognizance of the police of the district [illegible], besides [illegible] their own authorities and propagating anti-foreign sentiments, which they deemed to be the proper thing for [illegible] public sympathy.

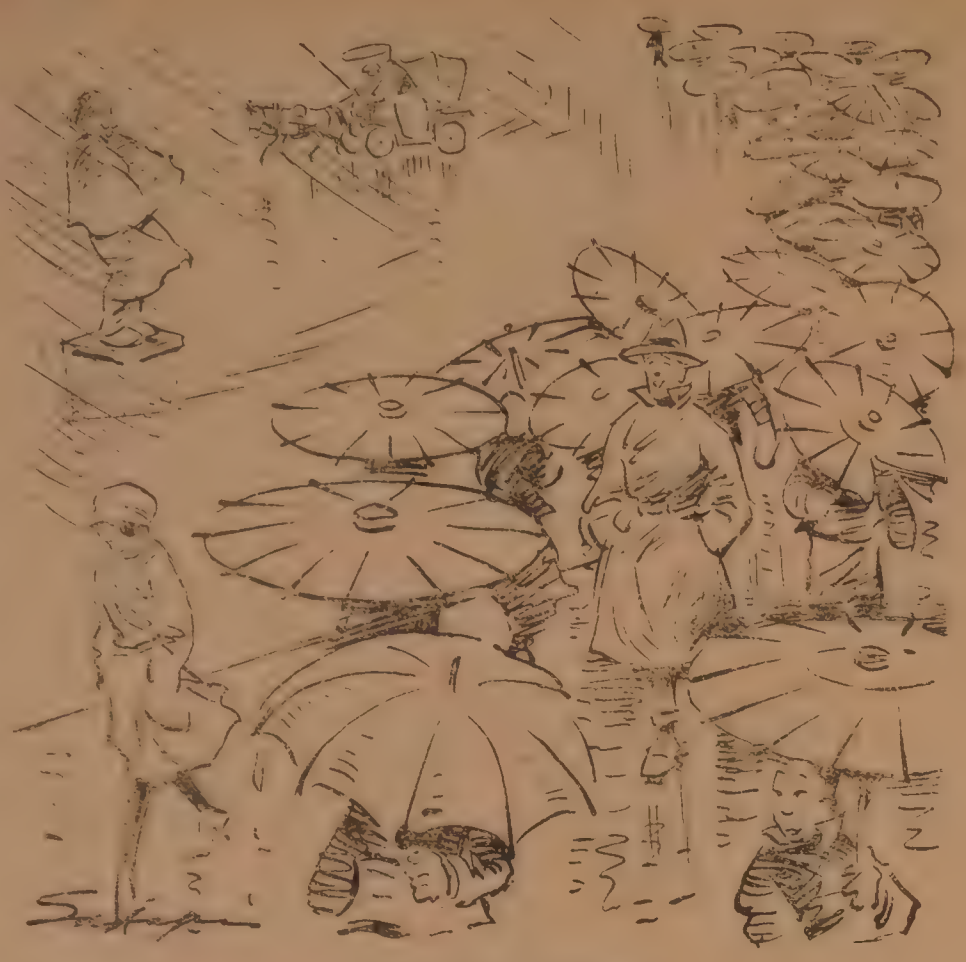
"In the meantime (they say), with the rent unpaid for the last six months, and no rents to pay for the future, with the tenants rooted to the spot, what are you going to do? You are losing the rent, some $10,000, and the contractor is claiming damages for the holding up of his works, another $10,000, and if you consider what the loss of rentals from the completed new buildings now delayed would amount to, we think we are letting you off lightly. What can you do? Petitions filed in the International Mixed Court will not be forwarded by the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs. We do not think you will resort to diplomatic action, as the earliest results you can get thereby will take you at least two years. So, we assure you it would be worth to the landlord Tls. 50,000, as a minimum, to settle with us, amicably!" There you have it, and the story is not exaggerated.

[illegible] while the sun shone. They collected the rents which were due to the landlord, ostensibly for "legal expenses" and propaganda for the ousting of all foreigners from the North Szechuen Road district. All of which needs money,—and they got it; but what they are using it for is quite another story.

Paid Rowdies

As the majority of the respectable inhabitants of the district were against support of such a movement, these characters fell back on the age-old contrivances of malcontents in China, the staging of a public demonstration by paid hooligans, hoodwinking the public into believing it to be a popular rising of the people against oppression, and adopting suitable slogans and inflammatory catch-phrases such as "Sovereign Rights," "Foreign Encroachment," etc. In order to arouse public sympathy and support, wide publicity was given to the fact of the widening of the North Szechuen Road, a matter of absolute public necessity, which they made out to be detrimental to China's (or their) sovereign rights. The road in question had recently been widened at several places, but nothing was said about it. The entire business was handled by a few agitators, but attributed to certain high-sounding self-styled organizations, with the assistance of paid rowdies and the criminal element, merely for the sole purpose of extorting money from the landlord. If the native editors do not stop the inflammatory articles appearing in their sheets, it is time for the Settlement Police to have a look in. Public peace demands that criminals shall not control Shanghai, even if they have the whole of the Chinese press, always irresponsible, behind them. The consequences in this mixed community of the continued disregard of rights of law-abiding residents are likely to be very serious, for which the Chinese press will carry the chief blame, for being in the position of leaders of public opinion, they have become, instead, instigators of public turmoil, often flagrantly untrue, misrepresenting facts which had to be [illegible] and suppressing inconvenient truths altogether.

Why did not this sacred native press publish the proclamation referred above? Why did they make [illegible] by the Chinese authorities? Why concentrate on jingoistic lines [illegible] could incite the people. What is [illegible]



A WET DAY IN SHANGHAI.

THE EARLY MORNING THUNDERSTORM

Damage by Lightning to Aquarius Plant: Extraordinary Freak of Nature

The Aquarius Co. suffered an uncommon and rather disturbing experience during the thunderstorm that took place early on Wednesday morning. The main power and light cables enter the new factory in Thorburn Road through the wall of the watchmen's house by the main gate. About 7.40 a.m. all the lights flickered up and down, a violent explosion was heard, and smoke and fumes were observed coming from this house. The foreign staff hurried to the scene, and found that the cables had acted as a lighting conductor, passing a heavy electric discharge into the main meter, which was seriously damaged. A telephone message was promptly sent to the Electricity Department, and within a few minutes two foreign engineers were on the spot and the work of renewal was put in hand.

The two Sikh watchmen, who were sheltering in the house at the time, appeared quite unperturbed, and seemed to prefer the choking fumes inside to the torrential downpour outside, although the electrical discharge in the small room must have been enormous, as the explosion was audible at least half a mile away. One of the Sikhs, however, did remark that there was "plenty too muchee noise."

As the Aquarius Co. have steam power for their distilling plant, they can utilize this as an alternative to electric power for driving their machines, and the work of manufacture could thus be carried on without interruption.

LIKIN STATIONS ON THE SHANGHAI-NANKING RY.

Semi-Official Assurance That Merchants Have No More to Fear than Before

[illegible] reports in connexion with the establishment of a new Likin Bureau on the Shanghai-Nanking Railway, that rumours have been circulated in the Chinese circles to the effect that this is a means of levying a [illegible] duties on railway cargoes were collected by the likin stations on the railway. On account of the corruption and squeeze perpetrated by the taxgatherers the authorities of this province finally transformed the aforesaid likin stations into railway likin bureaux with their head office at Hsiakwan, Nanking, independent of the likin headquarters to which they formerly belonged. The sole object of such a transformation towards reorganization and betterment rests in the financial administration of this province and has nothing to do with the designated taxes themselves. The merchants have nothing to gain or nothing to lose by this act and to declare a boycott would be unfortunate and foolish, says the Chinese Press. As to the loading of goods against invoice, this is in full accord with the original agreement entered into between the Railway administration and the Bureau of Finance of this province.

ANOTHER HUGE HAUL OF SMUGGLED ARMS

Thousands of Rounds of Ammunition and 50 Pistols Found: Arrested Ship's Stewards

Another huge arms seizure was made by the Customs over the week-end.

Searching the M.M.S. André Lebon, which arrived on Friday night with M. Merlin, Governor-General of Cochin China on board, the officials on Saturday afternoon turned their attention to the funnel casings. Hidden behind them were 116 suspicious looking bags, containing 50 pistols and approximately 220,000 rounds of pistol ammunition.

While the search party was making the big seizure, Customs Officer Carver was on duty on the gangway of the vessel, and intercepted one of the vessel's stewards going ashore, whom he searched and found to be in possession of two automatics. Mr. Carver handed the man over to the Water Police who handed him over with three others arrested later to the French Police.

At about half-past seven o'clock the same evening three more of the vessel's stewards were arrested by two Chinese water policemen in a sampan. Both parties were in sampans. The men were found to be in possession of nine automatics, and it is alleged that they offered the police a bribe to let them go. They, also, were handed over to the French Police, and all four will be tried in the French Court in due course.

LADY MISSIONARY'S DEATH

The Late Mrs. L. N. Hayes

The funeral of Mrs. L. N. Hayes took place at Bubbling Well Cemetery on Monday afternoon and was attended by a large number of friends. The service was conducted by Dr. D. W. Lyon, the Rev. C. N. Drury and Mr. C. W. Harvey.

Miss Frances Gray (as the deceased lady then was) came to China in 1910 for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and became a teacher and later principal of the Mary Porter Gamewell School for Girls in Peking. Because of her unusual ability and strength of character she wielded a great influence with the faculty and student body of that institution. She was married in April, 1923, to Mr. L. N. Hayes, of the National Committee of the Y.M.C.A. and since that time had been a resident of Shanghai, where she had soon a large circle of friends.

Mrs. Hayes was born in Madison, New Jersey, on September 5, 1885. She was a missionary of the third generation, her father having been in medical work in the United Provinces of India. Her grandfather, the Rev. John Henry Budden, was an early missionary of the Church Missionary Society, who went to India from England about 1845. She graduated from Wellesley College in 1910 having previously finished the missionary training course at the Folts Institute, Herkimer, New York. She leaves to mourn her loss a husband and a son, Francis Newton, only a few days old, a brother, Dr. J. H. Gray, of Shanghai, in addition to a mother and two sisters and two brothers resident in America.

The taking away of Mrs. Hayes is keenly felt by her large circle of friends in North and Central China, who consider that not only the friends but the causes for which she has worked have sustained a great loss in her untimely death.

M. de Wichfeld, Counsellor at the Danish Legation, Tokio, was due in Peking on Tuesday. After having spent three years in Tokio, M. de Wichfeld is on his way to Denmark, but is returning via Peking in order to confer with his official chief, M. Henrik de Kauffmann, the accredited Minister to Japan and China. M. de Wichfeld will return to Denmark via the United States and en route visit his uncle, M. Brun, the eminent Danish statesman who has represented his country for so many years in Washington.

The following statement, issued by the Chinese Post Office, will be of great assistance to readers who expected mail matter by the President Madison last week in estimating the amount of the losses they may have suffered through the fire on board that vessel

The mails received here on Thursday of last week by the President Madison consisted of mail matter and parcels from Europe, America and Japan posted in Europe between March 28 and April 4; in America between the April 10 and 15; in Japan on April 28. The President Madison should have brought 1,335 bags of mail matter, out of which number 702 bags were received in good condition, 423 were damaged by fire or water, and 210 were almost totally destroyed. Of parcel mails there should have been 345 bags, out of which 113 were received in good condition, 159 were damaged and 73 almost totally destroyed.

All articles with sufficiently clear addresses have been delivered and where addresses are not legible the covers have been opened to ascertain, if possible, the right address, or, if this could not be done, the names of senders so that the articles might be returned. The charred contents of the badly damaged bags have been carefully sifted and whatever mail matter was deliverable has been disposed of.

WEDDING

Rogers—Lauritsen.

Holy Trinity Cathedral was very prettily decorated in green and white for the marriage ceremony which took place on Saturday morning when Miss Anna Jensine Lauritsen, daughter of the late Mr. L. P. Lauritsen of Humlum, Denmark, was married to Mr. Hardy Rogers, son of the late Mr. E. H. Rogers of Wallasry, Cheshire. The Very Reverend Dean Symons officiated. The bride, who was given away by Mr. A. G. Dovey, of the firm of Messrs. David Sassoon & Co., with which the bridegroom is also connected, wore a very chic gown of cinnamon georgette crêpe, trimmed with lace of a darker tone, and worn over gold satin. A large hat in the same shades was worn with this and the bridal bouquet was of pink carnations. Little Miss Janet Momber acted as bridesmaid, wearing a frilled pink organdie and a wreath of pink forget-me-nots.

Mr. C. Trenchard Davis acted as best man and Mr. E. C. Baker as usher. After the ceremony a very pleasant reception was held at the residence of Mr. Dovey, 2 Yates Road, after which Mr. and Mrs. Rogers left for Peking and Tientsin, where they will spend their honeymoon.

Admiral Tsai Ting-kan, chairman of the Tariff Revision Commission, has returned to Shanghai after a lengthy stay in Peking.

REMARKABLE STORY OF CRUISE OF THE TRAINING-SHIP HWAH JAH.

Cadets Who are Training to be Captains: Unhealthy to Work Before Food: Greasy Spanners and Kid Gloves: Trials of Foreign Members of the Crew

It will be remembered that a few months ago the str. Hwah Jah (an ex-Austrian Lloyd steamer which was taken over by China on her entry into the war) left Shanghai "on a trip round the world," carrying about 45 cadets, drawn mostly from the Chinese colleges in this part of the country. The original idea was that the cadets should make this trip round the world to allow of their seeing other countries and observing the manners and modes of other peoples, and at the same time, by means of a more or less intensive course of instruction in the duties of a seaman, during such periods as their vessel was at sea, prepare themselves for employment as officers of the Chinese Mercantile Marine. Arrangements were even made, we believe, for certificates to be issued to those who passed the course and the test. The trip was financed, we understand, by a concern calling itself the Far Eastern Shipping Syndicate, in which a prominent Chinese from Singapore is stated to have held a predominant interest.

Judging from information and reports that have reached us, the cruise appears not to have been as successful as at first was hoped and anticipated, and there appears to have been considerable defection in one of the most essential features to the successful outcome of such a venture—the discipline of the cadets.

The following letter from a foreign member of the crew of the Hwah Jah, which was received in Shanghai a few days ago, and which is supplemented by further details obtained at a personal interview, throws an interesting, if not a vivid, light on the conditions on a modern Chinese cadet ship and on the viewpoint which the average Chinese mercantile marine cadet would appear to take of the serious duty of learning to be an officer. The letter is reproduced in full, excepting that a few references, either personal or irrelevant, have been omitted.

A Few Little Oversights.

Str. Hwah Jah,
Tsingtao,
April 28, 1921.

"DEAR. . . .

"I have been intending to write to you for some time to let you know how things were going on but we have had so much trouble here that I did not know where to start. However I will try and tell you all I can. When we left Shanghai on January 12 we had to anchor at Woosung with slight engine trouble and when I let go the starboard anchor the 15 fathom shackle jammed in the pipe and on investigation I found that the 15 fathom shackle on both sides had been put on the wrong way round, that is round end coming on board first, and who was responsible for that I don't know. The next trouble we had was on the way to Yokohama from Dalny. We got into a heavy gale and one morning we found 4'9" of water in No. 4 bilge on both sides and we just managed to keep it at that until arrival. All the cargo in No. 4 was damaged and we found that in making the cadets' quarters in the poop, a lavatory pipe had been cut and no flange put on, the hole on the outside of the ship being only 1'6" above the water line when loaded; so we were lucky to get to Yokohama at all. Then at Vladivostok I was just on the point of going ashore, ship nearly loaded, when the cassab came to me (by the way we have had no carpenter since first arriving at Yokohama, he cleared out) and said have got 5'7" of water in No. 1 bilge. I thought he was crazy, but soon found out that it was there all right. On looking for the trouble I found it in the fore—peak, in the shape of three holes in the shell plating near the bow and on the starboard side.

When the Anchor Was Dropped.

"I plugged up the holes as best as I could but could not successfully stop the water coming in. Next day we got a diver and he plugged up the holes from outside and I cemented inside and we thought we would be safe until we got to Yokohama again, but no such luck. We got heavy weather again and the plugs came out and she started making water again. We could not get any pumps to work for more than 10 minutes or so, so had to put all hands bailing and the water was making about a foot a day on us. Such a lively crowd of sailors I have got. The fore-peak bulkhead which is supposed to be watertight must be leaking somewhere as the water all went into No. 1 hold and if the bilges had not got choked up with bean cake we would have been able to pump it out that way. On that same day during the gale of course the steering gear buffer carried away, but I fixed that up all right. Well, we arrived at Yokohama again, it was about eight in the morning and we had to anchor and wait for a pilot. Well, the Captain sang out let go the starboard anchor and it went all right, also 15 fathom chain. Goodness knows what happened but the next minute I was laid out, something hit me a h— of a blow in the back, I was laid up for a few days but no bones were broken. Believe me she is some ship all right. . .

The funnel caught fire once and down came the main topmast stay and three funnel guys. To-day shifting ship one of the barrels of the windlass broke clean in two, and a sailor had three of his fingers nearly cut off and his back hurt.

No Work before Chow.

"Now a few words about the cadets. They are a fine bunch all right and there is not the making of an officer in any of them. They are all afraid of work and are lost in an emergency. One night in Yokohama I told them to come and pull up the life boat they had been ashore in and they told me they had expended all their energy and besides it was not healthy to pull up boats before chow. Another time when they were not puiling all together I said to them You will never make sailors if you don't all pull together, and they said they came to learn to be Captains not sailors. It is very amusing, believe me. At present the cadets are running the ship and doing just as they please and I have done my best to try and keep them in order.

"The stores have been handed over to the 2nd Officer, a Chinese. Well, I should like to have put my time in here but I am absolutely fed up now and have put in my resignation to-day, hoping to be relieved at Hongkong. . . .

"I am enclosing a copy of an anonymous letter I received in Yokohama, also a copy of a letter I am sending to Shanghai. Well, Mr. . . . this would make a good story for the "North China" and it is all facts, but you will know just what to do. Oh, another thing, we cannot get stores or very little and cannot even get oil for the steering gear and before we can discharge this cargo at Hongkong they must get some cargo wires. We are leaving for Hongkong to-morrow night. . . .

World Cruise Abandoned

Interviewed in Shanghai, the writer of the letter reiterated, and another foreign member of the crew corroborated, what has been given, with some additional details which are no less interesting than those in the letter.

Whether the plans for the projected world cruise were somewhat vague, or whether something went wrong with the arrangements, is not clear. After clearing from Woosung in January, the Hwah Jah went to Dairen and other ports and eventually to Japan, where, it would seem, all of the original plans were changed, as the ship was chartered for six months to the Yamashita Kisen Kaisha as a coal carrier. This change of plan appears, perhaps not unnaturally, to have annoyed most of the cadets, who were thus deprived of their cruise around the world. Some of them went so far as to send to the headquarters of the Syndicate, in Shanghai, a telegram, in plain English, protesting against their vessel, flying the Chinese flag, being chartered to Japanese owners. An appeal which was made by the captain and his officers, to the effect that the telegram be not sent, was unavailing. Relations between the cadets and the foreign officers on board appear to have become gradually more strained, our informants alleging that this was due mainly to the officers' desire for discipline and work from the cadets, which they were unwilling to give.

The Cadets' Spats

Our informants are emphatic in their statements that the cadets are utterly opposed to any semblance of discipline and equally indisposed to perform the work to which, on a British ship carrying cadets, cadets are put. The cadets almost invariably wore spats on board. We are told of one engineer-cadet who possesses a beautiful pair of hands and who, before he touches a greasy spanner or anything of a kindred nature, sees to it that his hands are gloved or otherwise protected from the contamination associated with manual labour in the engine room of a ship. Another uses cotton waste.

Matters appear to have reached a climax when the Hwah Jah arrived at Tsingtao towards the end of April. The chief officer sent in his resignation, on the grounds that he had been instructed, by a representative of the Syndicate, not to use any paint whatsoever on the ship; that the second officer had been placed in charge of the ship's stores; that at Yokohama, three of the foreign members of the crew had received anonymous threatening letters, in one at least of which a sudden and early demise of the recipient was hinted at; and that discipline among the cadets was so lax that they were simply doing as they pleased. We are in possession of a copy of the letter.

On April 30 a representative of the Syndicate came on board and dismissed all of the foreign staff—captain, chief officer, and chief and second engineers. There seems to have been a little difficulty regarding payment of the month's pay in lieu of notice to which all were entitled under the agreement (we have seen a copy), but the ship's register was withheld till the money had been paid.

An Engineer's Certificate

At Tsingtao, too, the supernumerary second engineer, who is said to be an ex-Engineer Admiral in the Chinese Navy, was made "First Chief Engineer." He is stated to be in possession of First Class Engineer's Certificate No. 0001, issued by the Chinese Department of Mercantile Marine and good for five years. Two of the engineer cadets were offered a joint salary of $150 a month to assume the duties of assistant engineers to help to take the vessel to Hongkong. They refused.

Altogether, it appears to have been a most interesting cruise.

THE COMMUNITY CHURCH

Annual Meeting and Enjoyable Social Evening

The annual meeting of the Community Church was made the occasion for a delightful social evening on Tuesday, the members turning out in good force to eat the excellent dinner prepared by the Navy Y.M.C.A. restaurant and served in their gymnasium. During the evening the various tables, where the guests were seated according to the months in which their birthdays fell, each presened some impromptu "stunt," April, a joke, June a bride, others songs or stories. Mrs. Charles Lavers gave a beautifully harp solo and Mr. McGill sang two solos which were enjoyed by all.

The more formal programme was opened with the singing of the Doxology, followed by a prayer from the Rev. C. E. Patton, after which the toastmaster, Mr. W. W. Lockwood, took charge and called upon the following to respond to these sentiments: "We Need You," Rev. C. M. Drury; "We're Here," Mr. D. W. Lyons; "The Governor," Dr. J. B. Fearn; "Our New Church," Mr. C. L. Boynton. Preceding the election of eight members to the Governing Board, Mrs. Vanderburgh read the minutes of the last annual meeting. Mr. Charles Gunn, Chairman of the Nominating Committee, then presented the report of that body and the following members were elected by ballot: Mr. H. H. Cameron, Mr. R. J. Corbett, Mrs. P. H. Dunbar, Dr. J. B. Fearn, Mr. Egbert Hayes, Miss Mabel Jansen, Dr. J. C. McCracken, and Mrs. R. M. Vanderburgh. The meeting closed with the singing of the hymn, "The Church's One Foundation."

OBITUARY

Mr. E. Bruce Shepherd

Mr. E. B. Shepherd, recently employed at the "North-China Daily News" Office, died at the General Hospital on Wednesday morning, after a fortnight's illness which followed a long period of ill health.

Mr. Shepherd came to Shanghai from Hongkong many years ago, where we believe he was at one time with the Land Investment Company. He was a keen member of the Hongkong Yacht Club and a good sailor, and for some years a member of the Shanghai Yacht Club also. Mr. Shepherd was employed as secretary by Messrs. Hall & Holtz, Shanghai, but for the past two or three years has been in the publishing department of this office, his duties being the supervision of the issue of the "North-China Daily News" in the early morning. In him we lose a good worker who carried on a rather thankless task with cheerfulness and courage.

The funeral took place at Bubbling Well Cemetery on Thursday in the presence of members of the staff of the "North-China Daily News" and other friends. The service was read by the Very Rev. Dean C. J. F. Symons, M.A., and Messrs. R. W. Davis, T. Mellows, A. G. Hickmott, T. D. Davy, A. Haslam and W. Watson acted as pall-bearers.

HEALTH DEPT.'S GREAT WORK FOR SHANGHAI

Mr. E. Kilner on Its Manifold Duties

Lecturing to the Rotary Club at the Astor House Hotel on Thursday Inspector E. Kilner gave an account of his experiences in public health work during his 21 year service in Shanghai and five at Home.

He had visited the health departments of Hongkong, Singapore, San Francisco, Seattle, Vancouver, Victoria, some of the London boroughs, Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, Glasgow and many other large towns in Great Britain, said Mr. Kilner, but in none of them was the work so varied as it is in Shanghai. A certain amount of work which was undertaken by the State in other places, had to be done here by the Municipality. The work of the Health Department included almost everything that one could mention. From your birth to your death, you were attended to by the officers of this department. They saw you were properly looked after at birth, watched you as a child, cared for you as you grew, protected you throughout your life and then at last saw that you are decently laid aside.

ARRIVAL AT COPENHAGEN OF YACHT SHANGHAI

Long Voyage from Shanghai to Denmark in Small Boat Safely Completed

A cable was received by the Shanghai Yacht Club, on Thursday, from the Royal Danish Yacht Club, announcing the safe arrival at Copenhagen on Wednesday, of the auxiliary ketch Shanghai. It will be remembered that the Shanghai, flying the local yacht club's burgee and manned by five of its members, sailed from the Huangpu on February 20, 1923, on a voyage to Dedmark, the progress of which has been recorded in our columns from time to time. The yacht had many exciting adventures, but survived them all, and she was accorded the honour, on more than one occasion, when making a leg from some lonely island to another, of temporary commission as a mail-boat.

Many doubts were expressed as to the possibility of making the long trip in a small boat, but the intrepid yachtsmen would not be persuaded that it could not be done and they are fully deserving of the congratulations which Mr. E. T. Byrne, Commodore of the Shanghai Yacht Club, has asked the Royal Danish Yacht Club to convey to them on behalf of the local club.

JOCKEYS' FAREWELL TO BILLY HILL

Enthusiastic Gathering at the Race Club: Straight Talking on China Racing

The "past and present" jockeys of the Shanghai Race Club attended in force at the Grand Stand on Thursday evening at a complimentary farewell dinner to Billy Hill, who at the end of this week is retiring from China. It was a vastly enthusiastic gathering, those present, possibly in a desire to forget their sorrow at losing such a capable and popular member of their own little circle, giving full vent to their opinions on China racing matters in general. Such matters may never come to general knowledge, but it would be all to the good of racing in China if they did.

Mr. C. R. Burkill, possibly the one racing man in China whose opinions are beyond question, presided and, in proposing the health of Mr. Hill, made such a speech as only he could. He mentioned that Mr. Hill made his first appearance in race riding in Queensland in 1898, when he won in a field of 15. He first rode in the East at Hankow in 1903 and he won the Champions in that place in 1905. Since then he had won other Champions in Shanghai, Hankow, Hongkong and Tientsin. Amongst his greatest achievements were the winning of 18 races at Hankow in one meeting, 16 at Hongkong, 12 at Tientsin and 13 at Shanghai. At Hongkong he had won four Derbys out of five and in all China he had a total of over 600 firsts to his credit. Since September last he had ridden 50 winners.

"The highest praise that could be given to Billy Hill," said Mr. Burkill, "is the fact that every owner in China wants him to ride for him, and if the pony can win, it is a 99 per cent. sure thing that with Billy Hill up he will win. We are losing one of the best. He is top of the tree and there is not a finer rider in all China."

There was much more complimentary speaking by men well qualified to do it, and on the excuse of such toasts as "The Shanghai Race Club, coupled with the China pony" and "The Future Jockey Club of China" there was a deal of thoroughly sound and sane argument, much good advice to young jockeys and some very straight talk to Press critics. Indeed, as one who could judge said, "This is something approaching a Gimcrack dinner," and there could be no greater compliment than that.

An excellent entertainment arranged by Mr. G. B. Stormes punctuated the speeches, the appropriate refrain of "William the Konk" running continually through it, and not the least pleasing feature was the conjuring of Mr. Reginald Kay, assisted by Mr. Archie Knoll.

WE learn that a large quantity of opium has been landed from a small launch in the Soochow Creek, in Chinese territory in the vicinity of Old Stone Bridge, and that the opium was landed in the presence of a local official whose duty it is to suppress the importation, sale and smoking of the drug. Do the local Chinese authorities know of this smuggling, which looks as if it has been going on for some time.

"My little girl's head broke out with small pimples that broke and formed a wet eczema. The eruptions spread all over her head and the irritation was very great. She could not rest day or night and cried continually with the pain.

"The trouble lasted about a month. We tried several remedies but got no results. We sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment which helped her, so purchased more, which healed her." (Signed) Mrs. Dishot, 8, Chapel St., Spitalfields, London, E. 1, Eng.

CORRESPONDENCE

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH IN CHINA

An Appeal for Funds

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I am approaching you in a matter in which I feel you could be of considerable assistance.

Dr. Shirokogoroff who is an anthropologist of very high standing and who has been busy in Eastern Siberia, Manchuria and China for some considerable time working upon ethnographical problems connected with these parts, is very anxious to complete his ethnographical and anthropological investigations in China as soon as possible. It is necessary for him to visit Canton, Hankow, Chungking (Szechuan) and possibly also Shansi, Snensi and Kansu, in order to secure measurements, etc., for the completion of his investigations.

The only trouble is his complete lack of funds. Formerly he was with the "Academy of Science" in St. Petersburg, which institution supported his work in Eastern Siberia and Manchuria, but latterly, of course, this means of support has been cut off, and he has been forced to carry on his investigations under very trying conditions here in China, giving part of his time to other work in order to earn sufficient to go on with his main object, the complete ethnographical investigation of the Chinese.

Dr. Shirokogoroff has appealed to the China Society of Science and Arts," one of whose objects is to encourage original scientific research work in China.

As this Society has no funds as yet to devote to such work, it has been decided to make a public appeal to secure the necessary funds for Dr. Shirokogoroff's proposed expedition.

The following is an estimate of the sum required which you will agree with me is remarkably low, and to one but an enthusiast would be willing to undertake the hardships necessary to travel on such a small allowance.

As a matter of fact a sum of $1,500 would probably cover the whole cost of his investigations, and it seems to me that it should not be difficult to raise this sum by public subscription in Shanghai. If the public are willing to contribute to this laudable object, the far-reaching results of which cannot be overestimated since they will give us the clue to many problems connected with the Chinese and other Asiatics, I, and those associated with me in the China Society of Science and Arts will guarantee that the funds will be properly disbursed.

Already a publisher has been found who will be willing to publish the results of Dr. Shrokogoroff's work in book form at his own risk so that that side of the undertaking is provided for. May I therefore ask you to open a public subscription in your columns for this purpose. The subscription collected through your valuable paper would be paid into the funds of the China Society of Science and Arts, which are controlled by thoroughly responsible parties, namely, myself as President, Dr. H. Chatley and Dr. J. C. Ferguson, as Vice-Presidents, and a committe of five well-known scientists in China.

I enclose herewith a statement which I should be very glad if you would publish together with this letter in making the appeal for funds for the purpose outlined above.

Thanking you for the courtesy

I am, etc.,

President,

Silver

The price yesterday was 33⅛d. ready and 33⅛d. forward, against 32⅛d. ready and forward a week ago. China has been buying. In the end of last week the Continent was buying, but this week it has been reported as holding off. The market yesterday was reported Steady.

Bars in stock, 4983, including silver Yen 10 lakhs.

Stocks of sycee and dollars amount to Tls. 350½ lakhs and $445½ lakhs, against Tls. 231½ lakhs and $434 lakhs on May 8, 1923.

Exchange.

Exchange left off last week with the official quotation T.T. 3/2d., where it remained until yesterday, when it was raised to T.T. 3/2½d. The Spring Race Meeting in the beginning of the week interfered somewhat with business. On Wednesday morning the Chinese speculators transferred their attention from Yen to Sterling, with the consequence that rates immediately began to rise. The market yesterday opened firm, with sellers T.T. 3/3d. May/June, 3/3⅛d. July/December. Rates have advanced to T.T. 3/3½d. May, 3/3⅝d. June forward, and T.T. G. $71 near and 71½ for forward delivery has been done. Practically no bills offering.

The speculators yesterday were reported oversold Yen 6 millions and £600,000.

THE GOLD MARKET

American Imports and Exports

Reporting from London on March 26, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 19th instant amounted to £126,276,305, as compared with £126,274,905 on the previous Wednesday.

A fair amount of gold was on offer this week, but only a moderate proportion was taken for the Indian bazaars. Gold valued at $4,365,000 has arrived in New York from London.

The gold production of Australia and New Zealand for 1923 is given in a preliminary estimate as approximately 835,431 fine oz., valued at £3,548,681 (excluding premium), and shows a decrease of £195,719 as compared with 1922. The total value of £3,548,681 for 1923 compares with £10,836,072 for 1913 and £18,340,563 for 1903. The 1923 total includes 708,261 oz., (or £3,008,499) for Australia, while New Zealand is Calculated at £540,182, the same as for 1922, pending actual returns.

During 1923, the branches of the Royal Mint at Sydney, Melbourne, and Perth issued £3, 051,024 in sovereigns, and £167,615 in bullion, a total of £3,218,639 as compared with £3,624,480 in 1922.

The recommendation of the standing committee of the Swedish Riksdag that the export of gold should be unfettered, and the import of gold regulated with view to assist the stabilization of internal prices, is very interesting.

U. S. imports and exports of gold during the calendar year 1923 were as follows—:

	Imports $
France	19,036,301
Germany	49,551,586
Netherlands	13,291,819
United Kingdom	149,672,340
Canada	49,374,549
Mexico	6,581,439
Argentina	5,337,914
China	5,588,015
Other Countries	24,281,849

British India	14,637,246
Hongkong	2,377,219
Other countries	1,177,219
Total:	28,643,417

We append details showing the total yearly imports and exports of gold to and from the U.S.A. since 1912:—

	Imports $	Exports $
1912	66,548,772	47,424,842

THE SILVER MARKET

Reporting from London on March 26, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. states:—

The market remained singularly steady until Monday, when some silver commenced to be sold on China account and prices began to sag away. The Indian bazaars have been sluggish, and on the whole business has not been active.

We understand that at the close of business on the 11th instant, the amount of silver undelivered against Pittman Act purchases was 955, 592 oz.

The silver quotations to-day for cash and forward delivery are respectively the same as and ⅛d. below those fixed a week ago.

Messrs. Mocatta & Goldsmid, reporting from London on March 27, states:—

The silver market has remained very quiet, but there has been rather more business during the past week and the price has fluctuated between 33⅛d. and 33½d. India has been a moderate buyer whilst the selling has been on China and Continental account. Stocks in Shanghai have recently increased considerably and the market has become very dependent on India for support, but unless China becomes a big seller we do not expect any important movement in the price at present.

JAPAN'S TRADE IN 1923.

The statistics of Japan's foreign trade for 1923 clearly show the effects of the earthquake upon the country's overseas commerce. There is a very substantial increase in the adverse balance, which is a result of a shrinkage in exports rather than of an expansion in imports, as may be seen from the table below:—

	1922 Yen.
Imports	1,890,308,000
Exports	1,007,452,000
Excess of imports	252,856,000

	1923 Yen.
Imports	1,987,063,000
Exports	1,447,749,000
Excess of imports	539,314,000

The principal increase in imports is shown by raw cotton, which rose by over 85 million yen, and wool and woollen yarns, which are up by 52 million yen. Imports of iron and manufactures thereof declined by 31½ million yen, while food imports fell by over 38½ million yen. Raw silk accounts for 103 million yen of the decrease in exports, while cotton yarns contributed 36 million yen towards the decline.

COAL OUTPUT

The total output of the Kailan Mining Administration's mines for the week ending April 26, amounted to 96,026 tons and the sales during the same period to 121,749 tons.

Messrs. George McBain have received a telegram from the manager of the Mentoukou Mine stating that the output of coal for the month of April was 17,392 tons.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

A Dull Time During Race Week: Exporters Waiting for Drop in Exchange Rates

May 10.

It has been a very uninteresting week in all lines. The races generously are treated only as a coincidence, and the explanation is said to be that there was a sudden unaccountable falling off of orders, particularly as regards piece goods. Exporters have had very little to do, for though there have been some inquiries, they have not been of a nature to bring business and transactions are unlikely until there is a more favourable exchange. The Chinese cotton and yarn markets were dull enough anyway, but, to make the stagnation more pronounced, the Chinese all took a busmen's holiday yesterday, attending the exchange, but ignoring possible business and spending the day in the smoking room discussing the political situation

Piece Goods.

The rise in values during the past six weeks, though slow, was so steady that it was evident there would be a reaction, even though slight and this came during the week. Expect locally, the weather conditions have been favourable and it is hard to understand quite why the market suddenly has gone groggy. The fact remains, however, that there has been a lack of orders and a more or less general decline in prices. There does not appear to be anything seriously wrong, but for some obscure reason business has fallen off.

Cotton and Yarn

China Cotton.—Very little business was done on any day during the week and yesterday was a holiday. The closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange on Thursday were:—May, 47; June, 46.45; July, 45.90; August, 44.80; September, 41.25; October, 38.95. Spot quotations were:—Tungchow, 49; Shanghai, 45.50; Shensi, 47.50; Hankow, 45.50-46.50.

Yarn.—Thursday's closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—May, 178.90; June, 176.50; July, 174; August, 172; September, 169; October, 165.60.

Produce.

The market has remained in about the same condition as it was last week. Exchange is hampering business, otherwise there would be some improvement to record, for it is recognized that, as soon as exchange comes down, the export business must take a change for the better. At present trade is hanging fire, awaiting better prices. Very few inquiries have been received from Home. There were some for egg products, suggesting a tendency to do business, but nothing definite resulted. There are no stocks of sesamum seed and ground nuts cannot be got rid of.

INVESTMENTS IN THE PHILIPPINES

General Increase Over Last Year

Manila, Apr. 22.

American investments in the Philippines increased slightly during the year 1923 compared with 1922, Chinese more than doubled their investments over 1922, while Filipino investments slumped by practically two thirds compared with 1922, according to figures compiled by Fidel A. Rayes, Director of the Bureau of Commerce and Industry.

During the year 1923 there were registered 384 corporations and partnerships, of which 50 were American, with an aggregate capital of $1,111,000, compared with 49 the previous year with a capital of $1,050,000; 143 Filipino, with capital of $1,325,000, compared with 120 the previous year with capital of $4,400,000; and 171 Chinese, with capital of $4,325,000, compared with 125 Chinese concerns with capital of $1,900,000 in 1922.

Twenty other concerns from various countries were registered.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE RUBBER MARKET

Export from British Malaya

An official report from Singapore states that the gross exports of rubber from British Malaya in the month of February amounted to 19,395 tons. With the Shanghai Race Club Spring Meeting as a counter attraction to the financial market generally very little business has been done during the past week on the local share market. With a further slight decline in the prices offering for rubber in London and Singapore the demand for "Rubbers" is negligible. Hongkong & Shanghai Bank shares are firmer and business is reported to-day at local $1 less. A nearly nominal cost basis for all the sound local investment stocks but few parcels obtainable at the figures now offered.

London market quotations indicate a dull tone except for Singapore Trams and Shanghai Electric Construction Co. both of which show a marked tendency to go higher. The following are the latest prices offered to or by sellable lots this week:—

remained longer. The girls have a rest from their sordid life; some do a little knitting or other work, or learn a few characters; they are treated kindly and befriended in many ways. Some have gone back to homes or friends; others have been cared for in hospital; probably many have come back into the vortex from which it is not easy to escape. But all have shown appreciation of what has been done for them, and the ultimate good results we may never know; but they will be worth while.

The Home is badly in need of funds to keep it going; over $200 per month is required, but our income for this special object has fallen short, which is disappointing as we hoped this particular work would be sure of public support. We feel sure there are many who would be glad to help if the matter is brought to their attention. This Home is an experiment which is well worth trying and supporting; it may lead to something permanent for the benefit of a needy class, a class which in China especially claims our sympathy, as so many have had no choice in their fate. A recent case was a girl from the country whose uncle promised to get her a job in a factory at Shanghai, and then sold her for $200. She had been in a brothel for six months before being arrested for solicitation; she refused to go back to the life, so stayed at the Home after her time had expired, while her owners hung around for an opportunity of decoying her away. Pending arrangements to have her returned to her home, two or three days' journey distant, she has gone to the Door of Hope where she may ultimately choose to remain for a time and make a fresh start in life. But for our Home, probably a $5 fine would have been paid and the girl returned to her wretched life against her better feelings.

The M. W. L. is guiding the Home through its initial stages, and we confidently appeal for help to continue the work; it would be deplorable if it had to be given up for lack of support. Contributions, large or small, will be welcome, and may be sent to the Hon. Treasurer, Rev. J. W. Crofoot, St. Catherine's Bridge.

THE FULL RIGGED SHIP.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I thought someone would "buy it"! Now that Mainsail Haul has given us his answer and as Lee Fore Brace goes into details, I would be much obliged if either of these old salts would describe the exact use and position of the "Galley Tripping Line" and what member of a sailing ship's company should be asked for the "Key of the Kelson." Further, what is "Belaying Pin Soup"?

Thanking you for the space,

I am, etc.

A MERE LANDLUBBER.

Shanghai, May 3, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In addition to "Mainsail Haul's" list of seven ropes may I add "mast rope, heel rope" and I think "head rope."

As for "Lee Fore Brace's" inquiry as to what was meant by a full-rigged ship, I think it too funny for words. I was always under the impression that the name "full-rigged ship" meant a ship with three masts, square rigged on each mast. Anything with more than three masts was called a "four masted ship" or "five masted ship" provided each mast was square rigged.

And surely he knows that the amount of ship's gear actually called ropes is the same on the smallest brigantine as on the largest ship afloat.

Might I inquire, has "Lee Fore Brace" ever seen a square rigged ship? Reed's "Seamanship" gives a good description of the running and standing gear of one.

PROHIBITION

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—It is getting almost exciting to take up the paper these mornings—thanks to the inevitable structure on prohibition.

Wade in my native land of America. I was never an advocate of prohibition. I don't trust her as champion the attacks of our British cousins the advocate me to [illegible] and ardent defence and advocacy of our great American institution. There must be other Americans in the same [illegible] where the attacks of our British cousins have always placed me since the days when John Bull and his son Jonathan disagreed about whether a certain [illegible] should be called a church or a meeting house. My slumber is normally being disturbed by having to lie awake and ponder upon new lines of defence of our dryness against the bitter thrusts and sharp vituperative sarcasm of the Briton. It recalls my first trip home after prohibition came in force. In the dining saloon on the boat I sat at table with some Englishmen, who, of course, enlivened every meal by "knocking" vigorously at prohibition. And while I had set out from Shanghai as much opposed to prohibition as any of them, I give you my word that when I reached 'Frisco after 21 days of hearing my country abused for its dryness I would have gone out gladly and marched with the most fanatic saloon league procession that ever paraded a main street in the whole length and breadth of the land. However, removed from the "knockers," my pugnacity began to die down and in a few weeks I had resumed my usual attitue on the drink question. Now, again, I feel stirring within me that same patriotic fervor for my native land and its institutions. A few more meetings of it, and I believe my state of mind will warrant my [illegible] to go to England itself to join the Pussyfoot missionaries there who are bringing [illegible] however much derided—an era very different from the time when was sung "Britons never, never will be slaves—to prohibition."

And this reminds me of the serious object of my letter, viz., to quote from an article in a leading American magazine by a well-known publicist (The "Century Magazine," January, 1924, Charles Edward Russell) who writes impartially under the caption "Is the World Going Dry?" The writer fears that the world is going dry because of the fact that business men everywhere have realized that workers are more efficient without any sort of alcoholic drink. He relates the facts that during the War Great Britain realized that drink was cutting down the efficiency of workers in munition and all other factories and to meet the situation, took, "not the beer away from the working man, but took the alcohol out of the beer." Since that time prohibition in America has been watched closely by British business men. They have observed the following—for instance.

"In the first year of national prohibition the business of the department stores of America increased 17 per cent.; of the chain groceries 43 per cent.; of the chain drug stores 43 per cent.; . . Estimates of the annual increased revenue of the moving picture business that prohibition has wrought are made in hundreds of millions of dollars.

"In 620 savings banks the deposits increased under one year of prohibition by $6,001,750,000 against an increase of $4,599,000,000 the previous year. . . . These are but samples . . . .

". . . master producers in all countries (italics mine) are looking with wry faces at the new figures of American production and production costs. . . . competition will drive Europe in self-defence to adopt prohibition. . . .

". . . When the British Parliament (italics mine) is in session, hardly a day passes without discussion or mention of the subject, and from hour to hour across the debates moves the shadow of an obvious uneasiness. Like a graveyard whistle comes now the once confident assurance that Britons never, never will suffer life without beer, while 267 societies in England alone are working for prohibition. . . . .

"After two years of American prohibition, Mr. G. C. Lyle, a British [illegible] anti-prohibitionist, came to this country to observe the workings of the new reform. On his return he was quoted as declaring in a speech in Birmingham that seven American [illegible] with the same plant, [illegible] same facilities, would produce more than ten British workingmen. . . . ."

Big business plays the tune we dance to. Money talks—whether in the vernacular of pounds or dollars.—we listen. Both in the country that has been called the land of materialism and in that once described as a nation of shopkeepers. Alas, 'tis too true. And on that basis prohibition will win the day not only in America but in Britain. Watch it!

Sadly and belligerently,

JOHN BULL'S GREAT-GRANDSON.
JONATHAN.

Shanghai, May 5, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In reply to Jonathan, I would like to state that neither a cousin nor grandson of John Bull could possibly have adopted his line of reasoning in regard to Prohibition simply because the average Briton thrives on criticism, and it would be difficult to find even a cousin of a Briton so antipathic as to attempt to convince himself against his own better judgment that a thing is right merely because a traditional adversary says it is wrong.

If Prohibition were an entirely American institution, Nationalism might justifiably be introduced into the discussion, but it must be borne in mind that Persia, Arabia and Turkey were enjoying the blessings of compulsory abstinence long before America was even thought of, and the Prophet does not say whether the chain drug stores or moving pictures in Persia have prospered or the savings banks in Arabia have declared an extra dividend or whether the Turkish working man is more efficient than a hairy Ainu.

The article quoted from a leading American magazine in defence of prohibition is typical of the state of mind in which the average American finds himself after being deprived of certain liberties by Constitutional Amendment.

Lacking the perspicacity to criticize his own country's instructions, the only thing he has left to hope for is that other nations will forgo beer and wine, not because of the right or wrong of it, but merely to justify his own short-sighted policies.

I am, etc.,

E. F. ATKINSON.

Y.M.C.A. AND ANTI-FOREIGNISM

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Next Friday is the "Day of National Shame," and at the Y.M.C.A. on Sunday I learned that this week is being kept as "Civic Week," when the duties of citizenship will be emphasized. The idea of inducing the Chinese populace to take an intelligent interest in politics is excellent: but is it not unfortunate that the notion should be introduced that to be a good citizen one must be a good hater of foreigners? At the Washington Conference Japan made reparations for her former blunders, and the only decent thing for Chinese Christians would be to "clean the slate," and to "let bygones be bygones." Japan has been very patient: for instance, over the attack on an Upper Yangtze Japanese steamer several months ago: the Japanese officers taken captive then are still not released.

Various "patriotic" cartoons are exhibited at the Y.M.C.A. One represents a Chinese staggering under an enormous burden, the greater part of which is marked as the foreign debt of $1,269,000,000, while a much smaller part is marked as the domestic debt of $257,400,000. It appears to me that this cartoon is simply anti-foreign and nothing else: it makes me wonder for what sort of Christianity the Y.M.C.A. stands. As a matter of fact, the foreign debt would have been enormously greater if appeals of dishonest Chinese officials had not been refused by foreign financiers—in the interests of China. And the reason why the domestic debt is so small is partly because Chinese do not trust their own government sufficiently to lend money: and partly because, instead of asking for loans, the various tuchuns, nabobs, and officials of various kinds make illegal and tyrannical requisitions and exactions, or allow their licenced troops to loot the populace.

The state of China must be discouraging to patriotic Chinese; but the Y.M.C.A. will not improve matters by fostering the anti-foreign spirit.

I am, etc.,

FRATERNITY.

Shanghai, May 6, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The letter signed "Fraternity" in your issue of to-day gives an opportunity to explain that the Y.M.C.A. of China are observing this week as "Good Citizenship Week" and to let your readers know something of the purposes of this observance.

The purpose of the special week is to emphasize by lectures, cartoons and other printed matter the importance of citizenship and to call attention to those qualities of character which are required in the good citizen. The Association does not consider this as "anti-foreign."

It is felt by many that in recent years the "national spirit" in China has too often spent itself in negative ways. This has been particularly true of the celebration of "National Disgrace" day, the Fifth of May, when the chief feature has been demonstrations calling to mind the Twenty-one Demands and blaming the Japanese Empire for all present day ills.

From this you will see that the purpose of the week is just the reverse of that suggested by your anonymous correspondent. It is true that one of the cartoons represents China as struggling under the load of debt a part of which was marked as "foreign" and a part "domestic" but it is rather far-fetched to consider this as "anti-foreign."

The Association believes that the future of China depends upon the character of the individual citizen. For this reason its activities have to do with the development of the individual in mind, body and spirit. May we repeat that the Association does not concern itself with partisan politics and certainly does not teach or encourage "anti-foreign spirit." We have in China the representatives of five or six nationalities on the staff of secretaries working together for the same end. We have in Shanghai a very effective Japanese Y.M.C.A., affiliated with the National Committee, and doing an excellent work among the Japanese of this community.

If "Fraternity" desires to know more about "what sort of Christianity the Y.M.C.A. stands for" he will be welcomed at any of the meetings. We believe that the work in Shanghai and elsewhere will yield convincing proof that the Y.M.C.A. in China and abroad is one of the greatest forces for international goodwill to be found.

Apologizing for taking space on a subject which is probably already well known and appreciated by most of your readers,

I am, etc.,

To the Editor to the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I cannot but admire the "generous" spirit of the author of the article which appeared in your columns to-day under the caption of "Y.M.C.A. and Anti-Foreignism."

As I wish to be further enlightened on the subject, I am sure the Y.M.C.A., the Chinese in general and I myself would appreciate a candid answer from Mr. Fraternity to the following question:—

Suppose, Mr. Fraternity, you have a very beautiful house in town and supose, that it happens one day that one of your neighbours enters into your house very suddenly and says, "Look here, Mr. Fraternity, get out of this room and let me take it. Here is the list of things that I want to take from your house to my own. No one in this house should do anything without first obtaining my consent. If you do, you have to suffer the consequences."

Now, Mr. Fraternty, how would you handle this case? Would you be Christian enough to "clean the slate" or "let byegones be byegones?"

Mr. Fraternity, you have done creditably for the official organ of Imperial Japan for which you deserve a First Class Order of the Rising Sun from the Mikado. Congratulations.

I am, etc.,

A BROTHER OF THE FRATERNITY.

Shanghai May 7, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Mr. Lockwood is mistaken in construing my letter as a personal attack on the work of the Y.M.C.A. For much of this I have unqualified approval. But if Mr. Lockwood thinks for a moment he will admit that unthinking Chinese [illegible] about 90 per cent. of the [illegible] will regard this "Good Citizenship Week" as mere camouflage, and imagine the Y.M.C.A. is joining in the annual celebration of anti-Japanese hatred. Will Mr. Lockwood use his influence that in future years this "Good Citizenship Week" shall not synchronize with this anti-Japanese festival?

As to the cartoon: I maintain it is simply anti-Japanese and nothing else. Will Mr. Lockwood allow me to make a comparison? Britain is now doomed for many years to pay vast sums of annual tribute to U.S.A. The great majority of Britons feel that if any useful purpose could be served by dilating on this matter, there are points that could well be discussed: but it is generally admitted that no useful purpose would be served, so we shall regard as undesirable any emphasizing of these points in a way that would arouse animosity against U.S.A. Now the effect of this Y.M.C.A. cartoon, not only on unthinking Chinese, but on all, must be to aróuse hatred against the foreigners—as the proportion of foreign debt is so much greater. What other effect can the cartoon possibly have? So may I appeal to Mr. Lockwood, in all friendliness, to use his influence to secure the withdrawal of this anti-foreign cartoon.

SOME BUDDHIST SYMBOLS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I am not a Sinologue, but merely an ordinary individual very interested in all that pertains to the country we happen to be living in, namely, China.

During my one-time frequent trips in the interior, I often noticed the sign of the Swastika on the figures of Buddha in the temples I visited. No priest I ever asked was able to give me a wholly satisfactory answer, and indeed some frankly expressed ignorance.

What likewise is the precise significance of the Lotus Leaf in the mythology of the Buddhist religion?

Finally any information in regard to the meaning of the Chinese "Pa-Kua" would be much appreciated.

Perhaps some kind reader, well versed in the lore and legends of this most interesting country, will not disdain to impart a few items of information which will be greatly prized.

Thanking you for the courtesy of your columns,

I am, etc.,

TERRA INCOGNITA.

Shanghai, May 3, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Your correspondent "Terra Incognita" asks for information regarding some Buddhist symbols. The difficulty about replying is that these symbols have so many and, sometimes, contradictory meanings that a very long letter would be needed to treat the subject adequately. I have not time to look up authorities but if "Terra Incognita" will be satisfied with a rough explanation I will try to oblige him.

The Swastika.—The symbol is in Chinese equivalent to the character 萬 wan, meaning 10,000. A myriad being such a large number the word wan came to mean all. Thus 人 jen, is a man. Wan-jen means all men. 難 Nan means difficult to the point of impossibility. Ch'uan 全 is perfect. Wan-ch'uan is absolutely perfect. Now when the Swastika is imprinted on the figure of Buddha it indicates that he is the being of 10,000 perfections. It very likely means in esoteric Buddhism very much besides, but I cannot explain Buddhism.

The Lotus Leaf.—The Lotus is in Chinese lore what the lily is to us; the symbol of purity. It has its roots in the mud but it lifts its head above the pool pure and fragrant. It is the picture of a person being in the world but not of it. It is a Buddhist sacred symbol.

Kwanyin is said to have floated from India to China on a lotus leaf and if your correspondent will visit the island of Pootoo the priests there will show him the spot where she landed. Devout Tibetans chant "Om mani padme hum," "O' the jewel in the lotus flower." The jewel may be the pure heart in the body of the disciple. It may also be the secret meaning of the sacred law. But these instances show why Buddha is appropriately represented seated on a lotus.

The Pa-kwa.—This is not a Buddhist but a native Chinese symbol. It is said to have been copied by the legendary Emperor Fu Hsi B. C. 3480 from the back of a tortoise which emerged from the Yellow River. The diagrams represent the forces of nature. Three straight unbroken lines stand for heaven. Three lines of equal length but broken in the centre represent earth. And so on fire, water, thunder, etc. If 'Terra Incognita' will walk past the Y.M.C.A. building in Museum Road, he will see a sheet in the window with the eight diagrams and the "Yin yang t'u" or diagram of the male and female principles in nature, in the window. These diagrams are now the chief stock in trade of fortune teilers.

A LINCHENG MEMORIAL

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—If I am permitted to hazard a proposal; as a fit commemoration of the Chinese heroism so seldom praised by the barbarians, I beg to start a subscription with 20 cents for a shield (silver) for Lao Yang-wen and a bronze tablet for Sun Mei yao on the anniversary of the heroic deed of the Lincheng holdup. I will hand the money where and when directed.

The fact that it was heroic to hold up a steel train whereon were travelling strong barbarians is emphasized by the fact that Dr. Wellington Koo had to study the matter of indemnities, etc., only when he could not help doing what he did not want, i.e. listen to the barbarians' importunities. China is a civilized country.

AN APPEAL FROM KUANGTUNG

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I should be much obliged if you would permit me to appeal, through your columns, on behalf of the famine-stricken villages of the district inland from Swabue, in which the English Presbyterian Mission is working.

Last year a twofold disaster overtook the people—typhoons in July and August, and four days of heavy rain at the end of September. The damage was particularly serious in the centre, where there are two large village-groups known locally as Tangsua and Suakang. An inlet of the sea runs between this, and many of the fields lie on low land on either side: the tidal wave swept up this inlet, not only destroying what was still in the fields, but so flooding them as to make them unfit, at least for a time, for further cultivation. Then, just as the sweet potato crop was becoming available, heavy rain fell, destroying elsewhere 50 to 60 per cent. of the crop, but here some 80 to 90 per cent.

The result was inevitable—famine. Unhappily, owing to the isolated nature of these village-groups, and the fact that they have little or no dealings with one another, not to speak of the outside world, the suffering had reached in some places the point at which deaths from starvation occurred, before this was known. The Mission and the local Church at once took up the work of relief, and I am appealing far and wide for help. But there are no foreigners here except the missionaries, and we cannot make known the need.

In one village the people said, "We are ashamed: never before has a man from Tangsua gone out to beg, but there are hundreds this year who went from [illegible] to beg for food, died by the roadside. In Orkia there were 16 [illegible] in one day. Sometimes the whole family has had to be taken into the houses, as no one was left with strength to fetch it. The young men have in many cases gone abroad for work: the launches running to Hongkong had once to refuse passages to any more, lest there should be too few left to prepare the fields for the next harvest. In one house there were two old women and a child: when rice was offered, the women said, "Give it to her, she has a chance: you are too late for us!" The last wire from Dr. Ross, who is in charge of the relief work while I am away raising funds, is as follows:—"Many families already dead starvation: reckoned 6,000 will die unless supported two months, i.e., until the sweet potato crop is once more ready."

Under these circumstances, I am appealing to Hongkong, Swatow, Amoy, and the Straits, for a total sum of $50,000, to be spent on rice distribution, and on such work as the drainage and cultivation of the fields. May I, therefore, ask you to make public this appeal to the generosity of the Shanghai people? What is wanted is wanted at once: delay will prove fatal to some, at least.

All money should be paid in to the account of the English Presbyterian Mission, Swabue: Relief Fund, with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, Hongkong.

I am, etc.,

(Rev.) E. L. ALLEN.

THE Y. W. C. A.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—You have noticed how Chinese women walk. Why is it? Isn't it partly the effect of the enturies of bound-footed ancestry and partly the result of lack of training in sports, in athletics, in health principles?

On Kinchow Road is a unique school where Chinese girls go for two years of specialized physical training. In spite of their preliminary education many of them enter this new school as shy, awkward girls with narrow chests and poor postures. A few months makes a surprising difference and at the end of the two years they step out as alert, well-poised exponents of health, trained in principles of hygiene and physical education, able specialists in sanitation and public health and directors of sports. One could not imagine a more graceful type of womanhood than one of these graduates as she directs a mass drill of a thousand school girls at a Provincial Athletic Meeting. Back to their home cities and to schools all over China these young women go to build up lastingly and scientifically, the health of this land.

You who from childhood have had the inclination and opportunity to enjoy sports and health-giving recreation,—what will you do to help Chinese children and girls and women into sturdy living?

The Young Women's Christian Association is conducting a land, building and budget campaign for its Chinese and Foreign activities. We look to you to "play the game," to show "good sportsmanship," to offer generous help to the women and girls.

THE NATIONAL DEBT REDUCTION

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Your recent cables announced the reduction of the National Debt by £650,000 000 during the last five years. About the same time it was announced that the sale of surplus war stores by the Disposal Board during the same period amounted to £665,000,000.

Was this sum accounted for in the general totals? If so it would appear that the revenue not only did not wipe out any of the debt but was absolutely less than the expenditure by £15.000,000.

Can you throw light on this subject?

THE JUNK ACCIDENT AT WUCHANG.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to the article from your own correspondent at Wuchang under date of April 26 and appeared on page 7 of your paper dated May 1 with the headline, "Junk Passengers Drowned; Japanese Cruiser Collides with Boatload of Chinese; Many Lives Lost," and since I, being then aboard the Flagship of the Japanese Squadron as Japanese naval agent in Shanghai, find the article above-mentioned somewhat contrary to the facts of the case, I will, by your permission, herein give the real account of how the accident happened.

In the first place, your correspondent appears to be exaggerating the case when he says that the junk was a big Chinese barge, full of passengers, for the fact is that the barge was a small one with only about 10 persons aboard, of whom, according to Mr. Udagawa, who was then acting as pilot of the Japanese Squadron, five were drowned and one wounded to death.

Furthermore, your correspondent points out that although it was broad daylight, little or no attempt was made to rescue the passengers, but this accusation is a canard, for no sooner had the collision taken place than life-buoys were thrown to the drowning Chinese and a life-boat was promptly lowered by the destroyer, Nokaze, to rescue them. In addition to this, the Nokaze and the destroyer No. 1 immediately broke from the line and tried hard to rescue the unfortunate Chinese but in vain, owing to the fact that the destroyers were speeding along at the rate of about 15 knots at the time of the collision and consequently it took them time to make a turn-about, a little too long to be in time to rescue the Chinese. Judging from the above, you will see that the Japanese Squadron did all it could, never showing even a shadow of indifference despite of the false report from your own correspondent. Immediately following the accident, the officers of the Nokaze and the destroyer No. 1 went ashore at Tayeh where they conferred with the Chief of the Chinese Water-Police on the matter, and as a result of their joint investigations into the cause of the collision, it was agreed that barge was entirely at fanlt due to the reckless attempt to get across between the Japanese destroyers which were then in a single line, sailing down the River at a high rate and consequently the destroyer, Nokaze, which ran into the junk, had no chance at all to avoid the collision.

As for the matter how to relieve the bereaved families of the victims, the Japanese naval officers concerned, leaving the matter in the hands of the responsible Japanese residents in Tayeh have returned home, simply because they had no time to remain there until the case had been settled, but I feel convinced that the matter will be solved before long to the satisfaction of both parties.

Thanking you for your courtesy,

I am, etc.,

TRAFFIC AND CRAWLERS

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Judging from the articles which appear now and then in the daily press, Shanghai's traffic is in a terrible condition, and, so it seems, is steadily getting worse. There is, however, a very simple method of improving its condition a little, and that is "speeding up."

Now, I know that there are hundreds of people in Shanghai who go down to office every day in motor-cars, and who, when they get to Nanking Road or Avenue Edward VII, reduce their speed to about 15 miles per hour, on the [illegible] of about 20 cars, all moving along at 15 miles per hour, like a huge crocodile, all because one nervous individual either hasn't the confidence to drive faster himself, or doesn't trust his chauffeur's skill enough to let him drive faster. That sort of man ought to travel in a ricsha, not in a car.

A worse type is the man who drives down in his two-seater roadster, with a buttonhole in his coat, cream gloves, Ascot hat, etc., and drives leisurely along so that all and sundry can observe his beautiful car, with what grace he puts his arm out to signal, and how well his car rides when driven slowly. That is the true road hog, the man who takes up the middle of the road so that the others behind are forced to travel at his speed. He it is who holds up the traffic.

The same remark applies to both the above types. Let them drive slowly if they must, but don't do it where others can't pass. Move to the side if someone wants to get by. Even if they don't care what time they get to office, there are others who do.

Nobody objects to these worthies showing themselves off on, say, Bubbling Well Road, because one can pass them and forget them, but they have absolutely no right to hold up the traffic in roads where it is forbidden to pass. It is pure selfishness, nothing else.

Now, I'm not a back seat driver. His opinion goes for nothing, though he generally thinks he knows exactly how the car should be driven. One hears this sort of thing: "Oh no, my dear, I never let my chauffeur drive more than 15 miles an hour in Nanking Road. It's so dangerous, don't you know." Those people ought to have special roads of their own to travel on.

It is a popular fallacy that the reason why it takes so long to get down Nanking Road is because "there is so much traffic about." But it is not the quantity of traffic that is keeping cars back, it is the deliberate blocking of the road by road hogs. If Mrs. Palmyra Whympole-Slipperkins went too fast, nobody would be able to admire her superb limousine, and besides, don't you know, one doesn't look so dignified driving fast, does one? She probably never had a car at all at home, but had to take the tram. I know what I'm talking about, because I never have any delay when the car I am driving is the first in the string. Very often I start from a crossing with another car just on my tail, and then, about 50 yards further on, I look into my mirror and discover the helpless individual crawling along yards behind.

Going back to what I said about trusting to one's chauffeur, of course one can't trust them all, the majority of them are perfectly capable of driving down Nanking Road at between 20 and 25 miles per hour, with a fairly clear road before them. If they can do it with safety, let them. After all, if a man's or a woman's nerves are so bad that he or she can't drive at that speed, there are others who can, and whose judgment of a safe speed is perfectly reliable.

I feel quite confident that if every slow driver is Shanghai speeded up his driving by five or 10 miles per hour in those roads where passing is prohibited, the traffic problem would be greatly relieved.

I am, etc.,

JAMES.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

RACE CLUB SPRING MEETING

Old Bill, Shenkoland and Abbeyfield all Beaten: Very Easy Victory for Ataman.

The weather was cold and dismal, the course, during all the sea of mud many expected it to be after the rain of Saturday and Sunday, was very slippery, and there were several surprising reversals of form, but nevertheless the opening day of the Shanghai Race Club's Spring Meeting on Monday was most enjoyable from a racing point of view. Close finishes were not the order of the day, but the races mostly were run with fine judgment and probably the gaps at the post were due to the fact that, in the sticky going, the jockeys preferred to make certain of success when they had the position.

Derby Won by New Zealand: Shenkoland Successful: Old Bill to go to Lord Rosebery

There had been some rain overnight and a heavy shower early in the morning, but the course did not seem to be very much worse for the second day of the Spring Races, on Tuesday. The going possibly may have been a little heavier, but it was not so sticky. The weather was as cheerless as on Monday, but in spite of this there was a very big attendance, particularly in the afternoon. The racing was less interesting, "many lengths" being almost a standing decision.

The race for the Tientsin Plate carried with it another chapter in Old Bill's history, for once again he qualified for the Champions. Certainly there was nothing very wonderful for him to beat, but Forestland, Kashmir and McKenzie were not opposition to be despised and McKenzie made the old favourite go all out. However, Old Bill won and the people as usual yelled themselves hoarse, which the pony acknowledged in his customary manner by waltzing through the paddock. It will not be out of place to state what is in store for Old Bill. Through one of his owners having a house adjacent to The Durdans at Epsom, Lord Rosebery, one of the best friends of racing, has come to know all about Old Bill and has shown great interest in his doings, so that he has to be kept informed of all his successes. He has recognized that Old Bill is an outstanding specimen of the genuine China pony and so it has been arranged that, when the pony retires from racing, he shall be sent to Epsom and be pensioned off in Lord Rosebery's paddocks. Nor will the aristocratic thoroughbreds be able to patronize Old Bill, for he is well able to take care of himself.

The results in detail follow:—

A Great Win for Columbia in the Champions from Zouave and New Zealand

The Settlement awoke to a most appalling day for Champions Day, for the rain was pelting down in torrents in the early morning and the downpour continued at intervals during the whole day. The weather did not keep people away from the race course, for all the stands and paddocks were packed as fully as on the brightest day. Nor did the running seem greatly to be affected. Of course, the tracks were slow and to escape the possibility of desperate struggles in the mud, the jockeys wisely continued the practice of going out to win by many lengths, but the majority of the ponies appeared to run far more confidently on a thoroughly wet course than they did when it was just greasy on top.

The big event of the day, the race for the Champion Sweepstakes, was most exciting and the win of Columbia was highly popular. It was the first Champions success of Mr. Toeg—joint owner with Mr. Geo. Dallas—for 20 years, and it was Norman Dallas's first win on a ride, though he was placed in both the 1922 races. Columbia, who is said to be the oldest pony in training, created a sensation when he won the Tientsin Champions actually in a walk. Then he was bought by Mr. Toeg and brought to Shanghai, but he went to pieces the first time he was raced and seemed in a hopeless condition. Some while later Mr. Dallas acquired a half share, the pony was nursed back to form, and this year has had a remarkably run. He was very heavily supported by racing men, for his recent races could not be ignored, despite the prowess of Ataman, Shenkoland, Rayfield and others.

Nine Classic Contenders.

The nine who went to the post all were splendid animals, and it could be argued confidently that every one had a good chance. There were doubts as to the staying powers of Ataman and Rayfield—or at least there was a lack of proof that they could go the distance—and both were finished after a mile, but it is almost certain they could have done far better on a dry course. Shenkoland looked very dangerous with the addition of Hill's skill and judgment, but the pony was new to him and they might have done better if they had known more of each other. Old Bill and Letchfield kept in the picture all the way, as such gallant fighters always will so long as they can race, but Don Alphonso was rather a disappointment and did not show up as had been expected. True, it was asking a great deal to suggest a griffin should tackle such a field, but Zouave did it, carrying 2 lb. overweight, and New Zealand also. The performance of these two must be counted as particularly good. The race was run with good judgment all round and the heartiest congratulations are due to the owners, trainer and jockey of Columbia for such a splendid success.

Also ran:—Ataman (Mr. Sokoloff), Old Bill (Mr. Brand), Shenkoland (Mr. Hill), Letchfield (Mr. Heard), Don Alphonso (Mr. Patterson), Rayfield (Mr. Stewart).
No time was lost at the start. The ponies went quietly through the parade and quickly lined up, Rayfield on the rails, Zouave and Old Bill next and Columbia on the outside. Dr. Pratt let them go the first time in a good line. Rayfield jumped out immediately and was three lengths in front before the stands were passed, whilst Shenkoland was running last of a closely grouped field. At the mile post Old Bill and Ataman stood out, (still three lengths behind Rayfield), Shenkoland, New Zealand and Zouave being together in the rear. The same order was observed to the six-furlong post and very little change occurred up to Probst's, except for a slight reduction of Rayfield's lead, and it looked more as though the pony was coming back than the others gaining on him. At the half-mile Columbia and Old Bill were pressing the leader, and passing the Monument Columbia went into the van, a length ahead of Rayfield, with Old Bill on the latter's quarters and Shenkoland and Letchfield coming up behind Zouave. Columbia entered the straight well ahead and going so strongly that it was obvious from the turn that he could not be caught. He came in as easily as when he won his Tientsin Champions, many lengths in front of Zouave, and New Zealand was distanced for third. Shenkoland was fourth, Letchfield fifth, Old Bill sixth, Ataman seventh, Don Alphonso and Rayfield last. Time, 2 min. 46 4/5 sec.

LAW REPORTS

THE ABSENT WITNESS AT MRS. ROWARTH'S TRIAL

Mother and Daughter on Trial at Supreme Court on Conspiracy Charge: Serious Allegations of Hiding Amah during "Danger Period"

The trial of Mrs. Judith Rowarth and Mrs. Margaret Davis, mother and daughter, on a charge of conspiracy was begun before the Honourable Judge Peter Grain and jury at H M Supreme Court on Thursday. The circumstances of the case are already familiar the proceedings out of which the present charge arises already having been the subject of lengthy criminal prosecution. It will be remembered that in May last a murderous attack was made upon a Sikh moneylender, Mrs. Rowarth was sent for trial in connexion with the crime, and was acquitted at her trial. Subsequently, the police discovered a witness whose absence at the trial was commented on by the prosecution, viz., an amah said to have been employed by the accused Mrs. Davis, and the appearance of this witness led to the prosecution of both women on charges of perjury and conspiracy. The amah gave an account of the attack upon the money-lender, Pakhar Singh, and alleged that arrangements were made by the accused to keep her out of the way during the trial, her rent being paid and food provided. This formed the subject of the present charge, viz., that on various dates between May 15 and June 25 last the accused, Judith Rowarth and Margaret Warwick Davis conspired together to defeat and obstruct the course of law and justice by preventing Wong Foo-mei from giving evidence at the preliminary inquiry and at the trial in the Supreme Court.

Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Crown Advocate, assisted by Mr. E. T. Maitland, conducted the prosecution, and Mr. S. H. Lewis defended.

The accused pleaded not guilty.

Not a Re-trial for Attempted Murder

In opening the case for the prosecution, the Crown Advocate defined the nature of "conspiracy to defeat the due course of justice." It did not follow, said Counsel, that if the missing amah had been present at the trial the result would have been different, and therefore the jury was not re-trying the charge of attempted murder; it was no concern of the jury how material or immaterial the evidence would have been had it been available. What they were to try was whether the two women agreed together to prevent the girl's attendance at the police court and the Supreme Court. When the police were investigating the circumstances of the attack upon the Sikh money-lender and wanted to find the amah, they asked for her, but they were not assisted in their inquiries and they were not told all they might have been told.

The case for the prosecution was that although the amah was in Mrs. Davis's employ, Mrs. Rowarth took the more active part in preventing the girl from giving evidence, and the legal position was that where two people engaged in a common object, the acts of one could be used as evidence against the other.

Amah Concealed in Chinese Territory

What happened in this case was that the amah was concealed on Chinese territory, rent paid, food provided, and kept there during the danger period. When that was over, the rent simply was not paid, no more food was supplied, and the amah had to seek another place, ultimately coming into the hands of the police.

Counsel went on to say that the jury was not concerned in finding out who committed the murderous assault—(there was no doubt it was committed)—on Pakhar Singh, the question for them being, whether the two accused did not wish the amah's evidence to be available and so carried out their intention to keep her from the trial. Dealing with the details alleged by the prosecution, Mr. Wilkinson pointed out that it cost the accused more to keep the amah in idleness than to employ her. When the police concluded that the amah they wanted was Mrs. Davis's amah, and asked Mrs. Davis about her, they were not told the real facts and got no assistance, the accused merely saying that if she could find the girl she would telephone to the police and let them know. This she did not do. She must have known if her mother had any reason for keeping the amah out of the way, and must have known it was being done.

Difficulties of the Police

The case for the prosecution was that, whatever the motive, the two women agreed to keep the amah out of court. They might in various ways have assisted the police to find her, but they did not, whereas if they were innocent they must have desired to take every possible step to find her. They might have told the police where she first came from, for, said counsel, "amahs do not com down from heaven, even in Hongkew"—but they gave no such information.

Counsel concluded by saying that witnesses would be called to prove the identify of the amah' It had not occurred to anyone to call these witnesses in the lower court, since no one thought the amah's identity would be denied.

The Police Evidence

After Mr. T. W. R. Wilson, assistant Land Surveyor in the Public Works Department, had produced plans showing the place where the attack occurred, and other areas, Det. Sub.-Insp. Quayle repeated his story of the assault on Pakhar Singh, the arrest of the accused, and the defence made, viz., that Mrs. Rowarth was at her daughter's house all the evening, on May 4, leaving about 9 o'clock to visit a picture show and returning home at 11.30. When witness went to the house of the second accused (Mr. Davis) and asked for the amah, the reply was that the girl had left some time previously.

Injured Moneylender Again Called

The man who was murderously attacked, Pakhar Singh, retold in full his story, that on the evening of May 4 Mrs. Rowarth and the amah called at his house, the accused saying she knew where a Chinese lady who owed Pakhar money was living and would show him the house. Eventually agreeing to accompany her, he was taken to the neighbourhood of Ward Road Gaol, leaving the road and entering on a path leading across a corn field. He hesitated to go further, since darkness was falling and it was a lonely spot, but the accused assured him the house of the Chinese was near, and so he went forward, the amah leading and carrying a lantern and Mrs. Rowarth bringing up the rear. A few moments later, he was set upon by Chinese, one armed with an axe, and was left for dead in the field where, next morning, he was found by the police.

Asked by Mr. Lewis whether he had any financial trouble with Mrs. Rowarth, witness said he didn't know.

Mr. R. F. le Mesurier, Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court, gave formal evidence as to the trial of Mrs. Rowarth, whose defence was an alibi, and who was discharged.

All "Nonsense"

The amah, Wong Foo-mei, repeated the story which she has twice told in the Police Court, corroborating that of the Sikh with regard to the proposal made by Mrs. Rowarth and the subsequent assault. She said that she was instructed by Mrs. Rowarth to tell the Indian, if asked by him, that she knew where the place was to which he was being taken. After the assault she first saw Mrs. Rowarth and then Mrs. Davis, each in their own homes, and both said something about its being "nonsense" when she told them the Indian had been assaulted. About a fortnight later, witness, who was employed by Mrs. Davis, was told her services were no longer required, because (said Mr. Davis) an old amah had returned, and it was from this period that a room was provided for her, Mrs. Rowarth paying $3.50 per month rent and also supplying her with rice. She seldom went outside the house, Mrs. Rowarth having told her not to do so, and remained idle in the house until accusd stopped paying the rent and she had to leave.

In answer to Mr. Lewis, witness said that Mrs. Rowarth visited her at this house on many occasions, but Mr. Davis did not go there at all. On one occasion the old lady brought in a bag of rice which was more than enough to last withess for three months.

Crown Case Concluded

The Chinese landlady of the house gave evidence as to the amah staying there for some time and a foreigner paying the rent for her. A woman whom she could not identify called at night to see the girl.

A shoemaker who had a stall in the street where Mrs. Davis lived near Jukong Road, said he knew that the girl was employed there, but he did not see her at all during the fortnight prior to the detective coming to look for her.

A watchman employed in the same alleyway also gave evidence that the amah was employed at the house and left some little time before the detective appeared on the scene.

A small boy formerly in the service of Mrs. Davis gave similar evidence. This concluded the case for the prosecution, and the court adjourned until next morning.

ANOTHER PREOCCUPIED MOTORIST

Fined for Disobeying Signals and Failing to Have Licence

At H. M. Police Court on Tuesday, before Mr. Peter Grain, Frederick Coombs was summoned for failing to obey a police traffic signal at the junction of Avenue Road and Gordon Road on the afternoon of April 23, and for not having a driving licence on that date.

Mr. E. T. Maitland appeared for the police, whose evidence was that defendant drove his car on against the signal of the Chinese constable on traffic duty, and that a motor-cycle and side car had to be pulled up sharply to avoid a collision.

Mr. Coombs explained that he did not observe the signal, being preoccupied with the car and not realizing there was any danger. With regard to the licence, he further explained that the suppliers of the car had informed him they would furnish him with all necessary documents, including insurance policy, and he received the latter together with a document which he assumed was a licence, and for which he paid Tls. 10. It was only when the police communicated with him that he read this document and found it was a car licence and not a driving licence, which latter he then took out.

The Magistrate accepted Mr. Coombs' explanation, but said that the rules must be enforced and imposed a fine of $2 in each case.

TWO MORE MARTYRS

Harbak Singh's Bondsmen Prefer Prison Rather than Forfeit Sureties

Three Indian watchmen, Massa Singh, Nand Singh and Hari Singh appeared before Mr. G. W. King at H.M. Police Court on Wednesday to show cause why they should not be called upon to forfeit the security of $250 which they put up for the good behaviour of Harbak Singh. The recognizance was entered into on January 18, on which occasion Harbak Singh was fêted with rosewater and garlands by his compatriots and was then bound over to be of good behaviour for two years. Harbak was before the court again on April 22, charged with having broken his bond by publishing seditious matter and was sent to prison for two months and ordered to find further sureties, with the alternative of deportation. Hence the present appearance of the bondsmen.

Mr. V. Priestwood presented the case on behalf of the Crown Advocate, and called Mr. R. F. le Mesurier, Clerk of the Court, and Mr. E. G. Abbey, Marshal, to prove the facts stated above.

Massa Singh said they tried to get Harbak to defend himself when last before the Court, but he refused. His offence, however, was a religious matter, and he did not think any of the conditions of the bond had been broken.

The Magistrate—Was not there a breach of the condition of "good behaviour?"

Massa Singh—No. It was a religious matter.

The Magistrate—That line of defence is of no use to you. It had nothing to do with religion at all.

Massa Singh—He made no breach.

The Magistrate—I say he did. What you have got to show me is, whether you knew he was going to do it—yes or no?

Massa Singh—He was not acting against the Government. He only published news which he received from India.

The Magistrate—Did you know he was going to publish what he did?

Massa Singh—Yes, we knew he was going to send out a circular.

The Magistrate—Very well. Then you have no excuse at all. When you entered into the recognizance on January 18 it was clearly explained to you what would happen if it were broken.

Massa Singh and Nand Singh then said they would be glad if the Magistrate would send them to the same place as Harbak Singh. They were not afraid to go.

The Magistrate informed the three men that they must each pay $250. The alternative would be, that they would have to go to prison, and he would give them a little time to think over it.

Magistrate's Warning

Massa Singh and Nand Singh declared that they would rather go to prison than pay up, but Hari Singh expressed his willingness to pay.

The Magistrate—I must remind you that a recognizance is not an amusing thing. It is a solemn promise to carry out certain conditions. These conditions have been broken and the Government must take action. I warn you men that if you are looking for trouble in Shanghai it can easily be found, if you persist in this pinpricking and girding against the Government.

"NOT DRUNK, BUT INTOXICATED"

Russian's Plea: Distinctions between Military and Civil Codes.

The sequel to Russian Easter Day libations was heard at the Mixed Court on Monday when two men were charged with assault on a Japanese in North Szechuen Road.

Complainant stated that he was boarding a tram on North Szechuen Road, when accused in a haughty manner brushed into him and struck him with clenched fists, not once but twice. He fell and was taken to the Station from where he was later removed to hospital, stopping there for two days. A medical certificate showed that he had bruises on the thorax.

First defendant's story was interrupted by a Russian officer, who declared that accused said he pushed him with the foot not with the fist, whereupon the Assessor requested him to demonstrate. A few more questions and then counsel broke in saying that the sergeant was translating improperly, whereupon he reiterated the evidence saying—I was not drunk, I was intoxicated." (Laughter).

The Assessor—Is drunkenness an excuse for crime in Russia. Under English law it is an added offence? —Counsel—Yes.

Sgt. Repas—Under civil law, yes-but in military law, no. He is of the military.

After second defendant had told the Court that he did not have anything to do with the matter, nor that he saw complainant on the ground, counsel for the defence rose to address the Bench. Before presenting a letter from the Russian authorities to the Japanese Consul-General (in apology) he stated that the day in question was a Russian holiday, Easter, and that the boys who had been subsisting for a year on rice and potatoes, might be excused to some extent for being in such high spirits on this day and their conduct overlooked.

The first defendant, who had admitted striking a blow, was ordered to pay a fine of $15 or remain in gaol for seven days, while the charge against the second was dismissed.

A CHILEAN'S BAD LUCK

Bail Forfeited for Absence from Mixed Ct. Where He Cannot Now Be Charged

When Yip Ching-wo, the man charged with malicious prosecution and who is of Chinese parentage but claims Chilian citizenship, failed to surrender to his bail at the Mixed Court on Thursday, it was announced that Chilean subjects must now go before their own Consuls. The Court accordingly discontinued the action, but ordered accused to forfeit the bail he had put up—$1,000. The man had challenged the right of the Mixed Court to try his case, which had been before it for several months. Four weeks ago the Court ruled that it had jurisdiction over Chilean subjects and continued with the case. Bail in $1,000 had been put up to ensure defendant's appearance yesterday. During the remand the Consular Body decided that Chileans should be dealt with by their own representative.

At the hearing yesterday Dr. Sellett (defending) said that his client had not put in appearance and he wished to offer an explanation to the Bench.

Mr. Jacobs—I am not sure that the Court desires to hear an explanation at this time.

Mr. Kentwell (appearing for an interested party)—We have done our best to get him here.

Chief Insp. Wheeler (acting Registrar, prosecuting)—The Consul-General for Chile has directed that accused should not attend the trial and takes full responsibility for the absence. The officer handed up a letter from the Consul containing an official explanation.) I wish to remind the Court that accused is on cash bail of $1,000.

The Assessor (after reading the letter, to Mr. Sellett)—I suppose that your explanation is similar—No, we wish to explain as attorneys. We have this letter to present to the Court. It is directed to Mr. A. Arce, (Consul-General for Chile) and we therein declare, that although the Consular Body has directed that Chileans should appear before their own representative, it is the order of the Court that he must be here this morning and that we could do naught but advise our client to defend himself at this time.

The Assessor, after consultation with the Magistrate, said defendant, having failed to appear, the bail of $1,000 would be forfeited.

Four Chinese, who had pleaded guilty to robbing a tobacco facotory in Woosung Road, appeared at the Mixed Court on Thursday morning for sentence, having been remanded from the week before, when Sgt. Malone told the Court that they had made off with 43 boxes, 50 packets and 120 tins of cigarettes, as well as a quantity of miscellaneous goods belonging to individuals—shoes, clothing, camera and jewellery. One of them was five times previously convicted. He was sent to gaol for two years and re-expelled, two others went to prison for six months and the fourth will remain there for four months.

It is not often that a Chinese who has been tried and found guilty of a capital offence by the Mixed Court is subsequently returned to the Court's jurisdiction by the Chinese Court which finally decides whether judgment of death shall be passed upon the malefactor. This has just happened in the case of a convicted armed robber who made his appearance before the Mixed Court on Thursday, after having been handed over to the Settlement police. Under the Treaties unless a man so adjudged guilty is executed he must be returned to the Settlement. The prisoner was sent to gaol for three years, sentence to begin from the date of his arrest.

UNEQUAL RESULTS OF GENERAL ELECTIONS IN BRITAIN

Liberal Bill to Strengthen Position of Minorities by Proportional Representation: Widening Breach Between Liberals and Labour

London, May 2.

Evidence was afforded of the divergence of opinion among individual members of political parties on the subject of proportional representation during the second reading of the bill in the House of Commons to-day on the bill seeking to apply a modified system to Borough elections.

Mr. Rendall (Liberal), moving the second reading of the Bill, pointed out strong anomalies in the way of representation in connexion with the recent general election. He said that the bill provided for combining constituencies to return a minimum of three and a maximum of seven members. Parties in the constituencies would be represented proportionately to the total votes cast for their parties.

Dealing with the objection that the system would mean that the Government majority would be small, Mr. Rendall cited the present position of the parties as [illegible].

He claimed support for the sparsely populated areas the Bill proposed to continue the present system without compulsory proportional representation and with an alternative vote instead of proportional representation.

Government Opposed

Mr. Sam Roberts (Conservative) seconded the motion.

The Dutchess of Atholl (Conservative), moving the rejection of the bill, objected to this dual system as being thoroughly contradictory. The bill, she said, would not guarantee that the minority would not secure a majority, as had occurred when a Labour Government was returned in the Queensland election in 1922. She objected that proportional representation meant unwieldly areas and loss of personal touch.

Mr. [illegible] (Labour) [illegible] the rejection of the Bill.

Mr. Asquith, the Liberal leader, strongly supported the Bill.

The Home Secretary, Mr. Arthur Henderson, on behalf of the Government, left the Bill to a free vote of the House, but, even if the second reading were carried, he held out no hopes facilities for its further progress at present.

It is thought that the Government attitude would have been very different if the second principle of the Bill, namely, an alternative vote, had been the main principle.

The Bill was rejected by 238 votes to 144.

Liberals Very Bitter

The Government's action with regard to the proportional representation bill has re-kindled the Liberal resentment at the Government's treatment of the Liberal Party, which threatened to become acute until Mr. Snowden's budget had apparently healed the differences.

A recent meeting of the Liberal Party decided on an intensive campaign throughout the country, but significantly postponed decision regarding the extent and nature of the campaign until the second reading of the proportional representation bill, which is one of the most vital planks in their programme and one on which they had expected the Government to give its full support in view of the Liberals' wholehearted reception of the Budget.

Consequently the Liberals are very bitter over the Government's decision to leave the Bill to a free vote of the House, which, they contend, was responsible for its rejection.

The state of feeling was indicated during the debate when a Liberal called out "Turn them out!" to which Mr. Arthur Henderson, the Home Secretary, retorted: "If we are to be threatened like this and told that we will be turned out if we won't go the way of the Liberals on all occasions, then get on with the job and turn us out."—Reuter.

The Conservatives accepted the verdict of the last election and did not propose to put forward a general tariff, but when they returned to power they would apply means analogous to the Safeguarding of Industries Acts for industries suffering from unfair foreign competition. Mr. Baldwin believed that scores of thousands of Liberals and Labourites, although free traders, would support such measures.—Reuter.

The McKenna Duties

London, May 5.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin, the Opposition leader, has given notice of a motion in the House of Commons that it is inexpedient to remove the McKenna duties amidst the present distresses.—Reuter.

RESULTS OF GERMAN ELECTIONS

Socialists and National People's Party Well Ahead: Extreme Nationalists Disappointed: Communists' Unexpected Gains: National People's Party and Allied Experts' Report

Berlin, May 5.

The first election results announced late last evening do not indicate how the general voting went. Eighty-five per cent. of the electorate polled in some districts. Huge crowds paraded the streets. Thousands assembled at points where the returns were thrown on the screen.—Reuter.

Cologne, May 5.

The elections were devoid of excitement. The voting followed religious rather than political lines The only noticeable activity was displayed by the Social-Democrats and the People's Freedom Party, the latter's slogan being "Down with the Jews!"—Reuter.

Berlin, May 5.

The latest indications are that the moderates are holding their own against the reactionaries in the elections throughout the country and that the Reichstag will have a majority in favour of carrying out the experts' proposals.

The former Chancellor, Herr Hermann Mueller, the leader of the Socialists, has been elected.—Reuter.

Socialists Still in Power.

Later.

Sufficient results are available to indicate roughly the constitution of the new Reichstag. The Socialists have lost 50 to 60 seats, chiefly to the Communists, but they remain the strongest party, with about 110 deputies as compared with 172 before the elections. The German National People's party is the second largest, with some 90 seats, a gain of 20 to 25 seats. The Communists have 45 to 50 seats, an increase of 30 to 35 seats.

The relative position of the other parties is still uncertain, as numerous results are still to come in. The extreme Nationalists will probably secure about 20 seats, as compared with three in the last Reichstag.

The form of the new Government is not quite clear at present, but there is evidence that the German National People's party will be a deciding factor.

Notables Elected

May 5.

Up to six o'clock this morning, out of 35 electoral districts the results of the election in 22 were known. Hitherto 244 candidates have been returned, including:—

Social Democrats	58
Communists	33
Democrats	12
Centre Party	39
German National People's Party	42

Hitherto 13 candidates of the Bavarian People's Party have been returned and 10 candidates of the Peasants' Party in Bavaria, Wuertemberg and Hesse.

About 75 per cent. of the electorate throughout the Reich polled.

Those elected include Prince Bismarck, Count Westarp, General von Ludendorff, Herr Dernburg, Herr Hilfferding, Herr Marx, Dr. Wirth, Herr Stresemann and Admiral von Tirpitz.—Reuter.

Berlin, May 5.

The following are the provisional final results of the elections:—

Socialists	99
Communists	59
Democrats	25
Centre Party	61
Bavarian People's Party	15
German People's Party	44
German National People's Party	93
Extreme Nationals	28
Hanoverians	5
Other Parties	19

The results of the elections up to the present have already made it clear that the Extreme Nationalists have in no way done as well as was expected. They must be content to take a back seat in the new Reichstag. Even in the extreme Nationalist stronghold, Munich, a large number of votes went to the German National People's Party. It is significant that the Extreme Nationalists have not gained a single seat in the occupied territory.

On the other hand, the German National People's Party, of which the late Herr Helfferich was leader, and who are monarchists, reactionaries and opponents of the experts' plan, have done extremely well and will be the second strongest party in the Reichstag with about 90 seats as compared with 67 in the previous Reichstag.

The Communists have done even better than was expected. They obtained nearly 60 seats as compared with 15 in the previous Reichstag. It is worthy of note that they gained particularly at the expense of the Socialists in the occupied territory. They also scored heavily in parts of Berlin and in the big industrial towns in Saxony and Thuringia. Seemingly practically every former Independent Socialist has gone over to Communism.

The German People's Party led by Dr. Stresemann, has done badly and is likely to lose a score of seats to the German National People's Party.

The Catholic Centre Party under Herr Marx, and the Democrats both held their own and will have over 60 and about 40 seats respectively as before.

No Important Changes

No important changes are expected in the other groups. The position of the new Reichstag is very interesting, but complicated. It seems certain that the majority of the Deputies will favour acceptance of the expert reports, but a two-thirds majority is necessary for the change in the Constitution involved in acceptance of the experts' reports which is impossible without the support of the German National People's Party. If they remain irreconcilable opponents of the reports, which is doubtful, there will be no chance of the Reichstag adopting the reports and evil days will again fall on Germany.

London, May 5.

Responsible opinion in London considers that the results of the German elections will not materially affect the experts' report and expects the German National People's Party to support the necessary legislation in connexion with it.—Reuter.

Reversion to "Big Coalition."

Thus the Socialists remain the largest party. They will undoubtedly be called upon to form a Government, which, however, will only be possible if they obtain the support of the Democrats, Centrists and German People's Party. Since the foregoing favour carrying out the experts' report, it is practically certain that the new Government will be a reversion to the old "Big Coalition," which with about 234 supporters will be opposed by about 216 German Nationals, Communists, Extreme Nationalists and minor parties.—Reuter.

Result Still in Doubt: German National People's Party's Increased Influence

Berlin, May 6.

Further results of the elections make the situation very confusing. It is now in no way certain that the Socialists will be the largest party in the Reichstag. The German National People's Party already number 99 and it is probable that they may be joined by nine or ten Deputies of the so-called Landbund, the supporters of which are former members of the German National People's Party. If so, the German National People's Party will be the largest party and, should the present Government resign, President Ebert is bound to ask the leader to form a Government.—Reuter.

Paris, May 6.

French official circles are pessimistic with regard to the result of the German elections, believing that defeat of the middle parties and success of the two extremes would render a reparations settlement more difficult.—Reuter.

Berlin, May 6.

Herr Hergt, the leader of the German National Party, in an interview to-day stated that it was impossible to expect concessions from Germany to the extent demanded as long as the main political principles on which the existence of Germany depended were not made clear. "We shall never," he declared, "impose still heavier economic burdens on the German people until points of honour have been satisfactorily solved."—Reuter.

RUSSIA'S RELATIONS WITH GERMANY

Abrupt Rupture Due to Excess of Zeal on the Part of the Berlin Police.

Berlin, May 3.

The Soviet Ambassador has closed his offices and departed for Moscow following the action of the German police in raiding the headquarters of the Russian Commercial Delegation and arresting eight employees. The police have been searching for a man employed by the delegation, who previously escaped after arrest in Wurtemberg.

A strong force of police searched the building from roof to cellar on the pretext that a Communist, for whom a warrant had been issued, was hiding there. The Russian Embassy asserts that the search lasted four hours and says that the liberties of the leaders of the Delegation, who are members of the Diplomatic Corps, were interfered with.

The Ambassador, M. Khestinski, immediately called at the Foreign Office and made an energetic protest. Herr Stresemann assured him that the action of the police would be immediately stopped.

The Embassy regards the action as an unparalleled violation of extraterritoriality.

M. Krestinski, before leaving for Moscow, ordered the closing of the offices of the Commercial Delegation and the interruption of commercial activity for the time being.—Reuter.

The German Version.

The German version of the affair alleges that a German Communist prisoner induced his police escort to allow him to visit the Russian office, where he escaped with the connivance of the Russian employees. The German Government protested to the Russian Embassy against the conduct of the Russians, asserting that the police escort was held up for some time, contending that the offices of the Commercial Delegation does not enjoy diplomatic immunity and characterizing the conduct of the Russians as gross violation of German law.

A judicial inquiry has begun.—Reuter.

Varying Accounts of Raid on Russian Trade Mission: an Alleged Monarchist Plot

Berlin, May 5.

The German official account of the search of the headquarters of the Russian Trade Mission says that it was carried out with the utmost courtesy and moderation under the personal supervision of the Chief of the Political Police. There was no molestation of Russian clerks. Force was only used in the case of one very obstinate official. The cupboards in only one room were forced because the occupants refused to hand over the keys. The official inventory of the papers which were seized is under suspicion of not being genuine and they will be handed back after verification.—Reuter.

London, May 5.

An official Soviet source in London states that it became known in Berlin last week that a German secret monarchist organization intended to commit some outrage against the Soviet Embassy on the eve of the elections with the object of influencing their course. The

DUTY ON BRITISH EMPIRE TEA

Opposition's Amendment to Budget Rejected: Also on Sugar Duty

London, May 6.

In the House of Commons to-day at the report stage of the Budget resolutions a motion by Lieut.-Col. Page Croft (Conservative) for the reduction of the duty on Empire tea to 2d. a pound was rejected by 248 votes to 155.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Philip Snowden, opposing the motion, declared that what was described as preference on Empire tea was not preference at all. Indian and Ceylon teas did not compete with China tea.

The House of Commons confirmed the Budget resolutions affecting tea, cocoa, coffee and chicory without change.

Later.

The unsuccessful attempt of the Opposition during the report stage of the Budget resolutions in the House of Commons to reduce the duty on Empire tea was equally [illegible] later in connexion with cocoa and sugar.

[illegible] the Empire grown cocoa was rejected by 267 votes [illegible]

[illegible] doubled in connexion with an amendment it sought to stabilise preference for Empire grown sugar at 5/4 per cwt. for one year. Considerable was drawn between the preference of 5/4, 16d. a ton given by Japan to the West Indies sugar, the whole of which was [illegible] and the preference of 1/- given by Java to Empire sugar, the whole of which was [illegible] purchase of foreign sugar by the Dutch florins or American dollars, with an effect tending to depress sterling further.

Mr. Snowden said that Empire preference hitherto had only increased production by 10 per cent. in three years, while in the West Indies, for which a special plea was entered, production had actually decreased.

The amendment was rejected by 243 votes to 182 and the Budget resolution affecting sugar was confirmed without change.—Reuter.

STANLEY BALDWIN'S POLICY

Fear of Dominion Trade Slipping Away to Other Markets: Empire Defence Needs

London, May 2.

Outlining the Conservative policy at the Primrose League celebration at the Albert Hall, Mr. Stanley Baldwin referred to the preference proposals adopted by the Imperial Economic Conference. He said that if the Dominions thought that we were reluctant to make a very small sacrifice for the greater good of the future, they would inevitably be attracted into economic orbits other than our own.

Alluding to the Singapore base, the former Prime Minister said that the Conservatives did not object to go on, but preferred to make them to their own people.

They were ready to enter a conference to consider limitations of armaments, but would not allow any weakening at present of the defensive force of the Empire. They accepted the one-power Navy, equipped with cruisers to protect trade routes, and were for an Air Force competent to meet attack from whatever quarter.

...ed represented the carrying into effect of the plans previously prepared. Secret and uniformed police, with the alleged object of searching for a fugitive criminal, spent four hours in the building, breaking open safes and examining official correspondence. The statement adds that this act of violence will probably react on commercial relations between Germany and the Soviet.—Reuter.

Another Russian Note Presented

Berlin, May 5.

The Russian Ambassador, M. Krestinski, is leaving for Moscow to-night in consequence of the police raid of the offices of the Russian Trade Delegation, which will remain closed until the German Government has given satisfaction. Another Russian note with reference to the affair was presented at the Foreign Office to-day.

Later.

The German reply to M. Krestinski's note does not accept the reproach with respect to disregard for existing treaties or the illegality of the arrest of employees of the Soviet Trade Delegation.—Reuter.

ALLIES' DIFFICULTY WITH GERMANY

France Not Relaxing Hold on Ruhr Without Definite Guarantees

London, May 3.

During the visit to London of the Belgian Premier, M. Théunis, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. Hymans, who left for Brussels to-day, according to the diplomatic correspondent of the "Observer," only general principles were discussed.

The difficulty is that the French Government have hitherto not shown willingness to give up the Ruhr as postulated in Gen. Dawes's scheme without a quid pro quo and the Belgian Government are committed to support the French demands.

The visit of M. Théunis had given rise to the hope that the French Government could be induced to evacuate the Ruhr within a few weeks of the beginning of the operation of the Dawes scheme, provided she had some security in regard to Germany carrying out the scheme, but the British Government find it hard, if not impossible, to accept the French Government's main proposals, namely, the retention of the railway régie in the Ruhr and a detailed British undertaking to support France in punitive measures against Germany in the event of future default.

A formal conference may be arranged after the French elections on May 11, but meanwhile the French desire to postpone any decision which might commit them to a definite reparations policy. This tendency is strengthened by the impression in Paris that the British Government's parliamentary position is insecure.—Reuter.

Work at a Standstill in the Ruhr

Berlin, May 7.

Work in practically all mines in the Ruhr is at a standstill owing to refusal to work over eight hours a day in accordance with the Government arbitration award. Eighty-five per cent. of the miners were accordingly locked out. Similar trouble has broken out in the Saxon and Upper Silesian coal regions. Thousands of metal workers and other industries are likely to be affected, as the Ruhr coal reserves are very small.—Reuter.

Duesseldorf, May 8.

The occupation authorities announce that the mines under their control are not affected by the Ruhr mining dispute.—Reuter.

500,000 Men Idle.

Cologne, May 8.

Half a million men are already idle owing to the mine strike in the Ruhr.—Reuter.

Paris, May 3.

The airman, Lieutenant d'Oisy, reached Agra to-day, effecting 1,300 kilometres in less than seven hours. He hopes to leave to-morrow for Calcutta.—Reuter.

The weather was foggy and very hot during the flight from Karachi, and caused the fabric of the upper plane to start to tear.

Haiphong, May 3.

The airman is likely to remain in Calcutta for two or three days owing to the necessity for slight repairs to the wings of his machine.—Reuter.

Paris, May 5.

It is officially stated that Lieut. D'Oisy covered the distance from Agra to Calcutta in 6 hr. 36 min. He experienced a temperature of 108 degrees.

The Under Secretary for Air has conveyed the thanks of the Air Force to the British Air Ministry for the valuable help given to Lieut. D'Oisy during his whole flight across British India.—Reuter.

Major Martin Still Missing.

Washington, May 2.

Orders have been telegraphed to Lieutenant Smith at Dutch Harbour to proceed on the world-flight with three aeroplanes as soon as weather permits. Meanwhile the search for Major Martin continues.—Reuter's American Service.

Lisbon, May 5.

The Portugese airmen have altered their itinerary and now intend to call at Goa.—Reuter.

China Reception Arranged

Peking, May 4.

The Air Department, in a memorandum to the President, says that arrangements have been completed for the reception of the British flyers. It specifies the points at which landing may be made and provides such assistance as will be necessary. A Chihling mandate later will announce these arrangements which, it is understood, apply

Trans-American Airway.

New York May 5.

The Post Office has established a direct New York to San Francisco air mail, which will begin operations on July 1. The special airway will be illuminated at night by automatic acetylene beacons placed every three miles. Emergency landings will be established every 25 miles and fully-equipped landing-fields, illuminated by revolving searchlights, visible for 100 miles, will be established every 250 miles. The trip will be covered in three stages, occupying 30 hours as compared with 87 by train.—Reuter's American Service.

REVOLT IN AFGHANISTAN

Kohat Tribes Roused over Religious Question: Afghan Regiment Ambushed

Peshawar, May 3.

Opposition tribes in the Kohat region have been roused by certain reforms of the Amir of Afghanistan, which they considered to interfere with Mohammedan law. An outbreak of hostilities occurred at Khost, where the Mangalladram tribal forces ambushed an Afghan regiment and captured a number of rifles and ammunition. A general outbreak followed. It is reported that the rebels persuaded some of the smaller Afghan outposts to surrender, while Afghan regulars have been attacked at various points. Reinforcements have been despatched to the disturbed area.—Reuter.

THE PROBLEM OF WORLD MIGRATION

International Conference in Rome: American Laws and Europe

London, May 3.

The British Government has accepted an invitation from Signor Mussolini to take part in an international migration conference in Rome. Viscount Ullswater will head the British delegation.

The United States will be represented by a high official of the Department of Labour. Germany and Russia will also be represented.

It is believed that the conference will chiefly be concerned with the American immigration laws.

Britain accepted the invitation on the understanding that nothing would be done derogatory to the powers of the League of Nations, a representative of which has also been invited.—Reuter.

U. S. IMMIGRATION RESTRICTIONS

Acceptance of President's Proposal to Postpone Enforcement

Washington, May 6.

The exclusion of Japanese under the new Immigration Bill becomes effective on July 1 as a result of an agreement reached at the joint conference of the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. It is regarded as certain that the report of the conference will be adopted by both Houses. The quota basis of 2 per cent. of the 1890 census, embodied in the new Bill, continues until July 1, 1927, when the so-called national origin method will be employed. The total admittances, however, will be restricted to 150,000 annually from this method.

It is indicated at the White House that President Coolidge is dissatisfied with the agreement reached by the joint conferences, but whether the President will consider the exclusion provision sufficient justification for vetoing the Immigration Bill is not disclosed. It is said that he does not consider the two months before July 1 sufficient in which to negotiate an agreement or treaty with Japan regarding the exclusion of immigrants.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Washington, May 7.

President Coolidge has informed the Congressional leaders that he regards July 1 for enforcement of the Immigration Bill as far too soon to permit diplomatic arrangement with Japan. Steps are being taken to rally sympathizers with the President's view in opposing acceptance of the report of the joint conference of the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The President said that he would favour March 1, 1926, as a better date for operation of the new Bill. He hoped that Congress would accord at least a few months' delay.

Later.

The Congressional committee has accepted President Coolidge's suggestion to report a provision making the Immigration Bill effective from March 1, 1925, instead of July 1 next, on the understanding that formal abrogation of the "Gentlemen's Agreement" is in the meantime negotiated. The committee rejected the proposal to postpone the operation of the Bill until March 1, 1926.—Reuter's American Service.

RUSSIAN EMBASSY IN LONDON

Should It Be Handed over to Possession of Soviets?

London, May 8.

It is understood that the British Government have written to M. Sabline, the present occupant of the former Russian Embassy in London, who was acting as secretary on the old Tsarist staff, expressing the opinion that the property which belonged to the old Government should be regarded as belonging to the present Government. It is anticipated that the Soviets will take legal action to obtain possession if, as appears likely, he does not yield.—Reuter.

MINERS AND COAL-OWNERS

A Threat of Strike in Case of Refusal of Proposals

London, May 5.

Mr. Cook, the Secretary of the Miners' Federation, speaking at Pontypool to-day, referred to the Court of Inquiry into the miner's wages which has just concluded. He said that unless the Court made some tangible recommendation the inquiry would have been a waste of time. He had arranged to meet the coal-owners on May 14. If the men's proposals were not satisfied there would be only two alternatives, a strike or an appeal to the Government, which had power to grant the just demands.—Reuter.

THE BRITISH BUILDING TRADE DISPUTE

EAST AFRICAN COTTON

Inquiries as to Purchases by Japan Competing with British Trade

London, May 6.

In the House of Commons to-day Sir Walter De Frece, Conservative Member for Ashton-under-Lyne, alleged that most of the raw cotton from East Africa was now bought by Japan, and the British tax-payer was asked to provide large sums for the benefit of a trade directly competing with Britain.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. J. H. Thomas, replied that there were no direct shipments of cotton from East Africa to Japan. Some of the cotton consigned to India, which was rather more than half the total crop, certainly went to Japan. It was impossible in a country where by international convention trade was completely free, to limit the destination of cotton. It was undesirable to restrict the freedom of growers to sell cotton to the best advantage. If foreign users of this type of cotton bought from East Africa, there was more of the same type available for Lancashire from elsewhere.—Reuter.

Natives of India Ineligible for Citizenship

London, May 5.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to Mr. W. J. Baker, Labour Member for East Bristol, Mr. Robert Richards the Under-Secretary of State for India, said that the United States Government's refusal to naturalize Indians was due to the Supreme Court's ruling that Indians were ineligible for United States citizenship. His Majesty's Government had made representations to the United States with a view to alleviating the hardships resulting from this ruling. The Government of India and Lord Olivier, the Secretary of States for India, had been corresponding in that connexion and the Government of India had expressed appreciation of the Government's action.—Reuter.

DEBATE ON BRITISH NAVAL ESTIMATES

Further Arguments as to Need of at Least One Dockyard East of Suez

DESIRABILITY OF A POLICY OF DISARMAMENT

London, May 8.

The desirability of a policy of disarmament on the one hand and the provision of equipment for the dockyards on the other were the main points of the debate on the Naval Estimates in the House of Commons to-day. The Conserevatives persistently urged the necessity of improving the Singapore dockyard.

Mr. L. S. Amery, former First Lord of the Admiralty, said there was an overwhelming case for the modernizing of at least one dockyard east of the Suez Canal, and in such an event there was no doubt which should be chosen.

Mr. C. C. Ammon, Secretary to the Board of Admiralty, replying, said that the Government noted with the greatest friendliness and pleasure the American Senate's resolutions regarding a Limitation of Armaments Conference. The Government, he said, would do everything possible, as far as Great Britain was concerned, to show a reciprocal desire to enter into any such negotiations and discussions.—Reuter.

Fierce Storm in the Kuriles

Paramashiru, May 7.

A terrific hundred-mile storm in the region of the Kuriles lasted more than a day, and, except for the skilful seamanship and courage of those in command, must have destroyed both Japanese and American destoryers. The storms having extended beyond the time they should ordinarily have lasted, the outlook is bad for the American fliers, who are expecting to leave Atka for Atu at the earliest possible opportunity. The Canadian trawler Thiepval which is preparing the way for the British fliers has left for Hitokappu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

REMOVAL OF THE McKENNA DUTIES

Mr. Baldwin's Motion Regarded as a Vote of Censure on the Government

SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES OF A GOVERNMENT DEFEAT

London, May 8.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. J. R. Clynes, the Lord Privy Seal, announcing that Mr. Stanley Baldwin's motion, that it was inexpedient to remove the McKenna duties amidst the present distresses, would be taken on May 13, said that, although the motion was not couched in ordinary terms, the Government regarded it as a vote of censure.

Later.

A Government defeat on the Budget is always a serious matter and in view of Mr. J. R. Clynes's announcement to-day the Government is bound to treat a defeat on Tuesday in the conventional way of adjourning the House and considering its position, but the chance of defeat is infinitesimal as Liberal support of the Government is certain, while the Labour Members who favour the McKenna duties are bound to rally to the Government's support after Mr. Clynes's statement.—Reuter.

HOLLAND AND THE SOVIET

Failure of Negotiations Due to Obstinate Attitude of Russia

The Hague, May 8.

A communiqué, issued to-day, lays the responsibility for the failure of the Russo-Dutch negotiations in Berlin upon the Russians, who, under the most-favoured nation clause, refused to grant to Holland the advantages accorded to other nations who have recognized her. The Dutch Government does not intend to go further, because it considers that a treaty as contemplated by Russia would be unsatisfactory from the point of view of commerce, navigation, debts and credits.—Reuter.

The Propaganda Menace.

The Hague, May 9.

It is learned that the Dutch Government's desire to come to an early arrangement with Soviet Russia is greatly tempered by the fear of Soviet propaganda in the Dutch East Indies. There is reason to believe that the negotiations will eventually be resumed.—Ruter.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN CONFERENCE

London, May 8.

In the House of Commons to-day, asked when the Government would be able to announce the results of the Anglo-Russian Conference in London, Mr. J. R. Clynes regretted that he was unable to foretell the duration of the Conference, but the Prime Minister proposed to take an opportunity immediately to hurry it up.—Reuter.

EXCLUSION OF JAPANESE FROM AMERICA

Heated Debate in U. S. Senate: Immigration Not a Subject for Treaty Negotiation

Washington, May 8.

The Senate to-day heatedly debated the Immigration Bill. Both sides bitterly assailed the Conference Report postponing Japanese exclusion. Senators Robinson, Borah, Johnson, Lodge, Reed and others maintained that immigration was purely a domestic matter and ought not to be made a subject for Treaty negotiation. The Californian Senator Shortridge announced his intention of moving a point of order that the Committee had exceeded its authority in recommending the extension of the date of the measure and lowering the barrier against Asiatic immigration.—Reuter's American Service.

Cleveland, May 8.

A plenary session of the United States Chambers of Commerce to-day unanimously adopted a resolution opposing the exclusion of Japanese by Legislative enactment.—Reuter's American Service.

Tokio, May 9.

As regards the prospect of negotiations over the Exclusion Law public opinion here is rather pessimistic. Missing Aeroplane Plans Said To Be In Japan: The President's Ideas on the Mellon Plan: Comment on Anglo-American Friendship: Textile Difficulties

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

San Francisco, Apr. 12.

Some little excitement, spectacularly played up to its political possibilities, has been caused by a statement made a day or two ago in the nation's capital that Japan now possesses every aeroplane secret evolved by American genius for the aerial defence of the United States in time of war. That the newspapers are up in arms is only natural. That the anti-Japanese propagandists are making capital out of the affair is equally to be expected. That the Japanese in this country claim that it is all political pull is a sine qua non. But there is little doubt that certain plans have gone missing, and great probability is suspected that they have found their way to the Land of the Rising Sun.

The statement is attributed to Mr. Thos. F. Lane, who was formerly State Senator for Missouri—the state enjoying the reputation of being peopled with citizens hard of conviction, who always "want to be shown"—and before he was ousted from office enjoyed the distinction of being legal advisor to the Air Service Claims Board. Mr. Lane corroborates the sensational charge, run to earth by a Department of Justice agent, "that the Japanese-owned Standard Aircraft Corporation turned over to Japan copies of every airplane secret held by the United States." Mr. Lane further claims that this was admitted by the president of the corporation, and goes on to broadcast to the country the obvious information that, if the Japanese now possess these drawings and models, they will be able to duplicate American Government planes, rendering futile anything that the Air Service people have up their sleeve. The plans are said to have been delivered to Messrs. Mitsui & Co. (alleged to be the Japanese owners of the Standard Corporation), and I now see that the Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks is likely to be dragged into the mêlée. He advances into the limelight because he is charged with having blocked institution of criminal suits to recover a sum of money considerably over two and a half million dollars paid the Aircraft Corporation in overpayments. It is also claimed that the Corporation, which was secretly manufacturing several American aeroplane models for the U. S. Government at the time of the armistice, not only turned over the plans but sent to Japan wooden patterns and other models of the machinery used in American aircraft factories. Should this be true, and no one can tell at the moment whether it is or not, it was, of course, an outrageous breach on the part of the Corporation, fully punishable by law, for it appears that their contract expressly forbade the exploitation of plans or specifications without the permission of the War Department.

Should this develop into wider political significance, you will doubtless be advised by the telegraphic agencies of what transpires.

President Coolidge and the Mellon Tax Plan.

At last the country has been given a definite expression of presidential opinion on the famous Mellon Tax Plan. It looks as if President Coolidge is "all for it." In nutshell form, the President's idea is that a reduction in the taxes on the basis that the ingenious Mr. Mellon proposes would usher in an unprecedented era of prosperity and business expansion. The matter was brought up a day or two ago in the Cabinet, President Coolidge calling attention to reports which had reached him of the slowing down of business in certain lines, and he naturally turned to that veritable wizard of the Department of Commerce (Mr. Hoover) for information. The latter, however, denied any slowing down of production, and declared the belief that at any time during the present year would there be any slackening. Your readers may remember that a week or two ago I reported the general belief in many parts of the country among men well able to gauge the trend of commercial affairs, that this year, despite its being presidential year when general dullness is expected, would probably be a record business year. Mr. Hoover's confirming opinion, therefore, is all the more interesting in view of all the reports that have been sent out. The situation in steel is always a barometer of trade in the United States, as in Great Britain, and I find a steady increase both in production and future orders is the rule of the day. Mr. Hoover also emphasized the important fact that the building industry reached its peak last year, yet so far in 1924 building permits have shown a large increase over 1923, and increased production is consequently noted in all the industries related to building.

Such slowing down as has been reported in certain lines, so the President said he was inclined to think, is "probably due to the failure of Congress up to date to solve the tax reduction programme," which is also unquestionably due to investors marking time.

The man whose activities take him near enough to the financial market to allow him to get an inside view is astounded to find the number among the investing public who refuse to put their funds into industry because of the existing high surtaxes. A preference is shown to lend their surpluses at as low as even three per cent., which of course accounts for the present large accumulation of "call" money. If the surtaxes were lowered, as in the Mellon plan, the consensus of opinion in the financial market is that money would rapidly flow back again to where it rightfully belongs—namely, in industry—and, as the President expresses it, the country "would feel the thrill of a great revival of productivity and general prosperity."

Conditions in the Textile Trade a Puzzle.

The barometer of China trade is piece goods, if any one commodity can be said to offer the general pulse, so that a word or two on the textile conditions in this country will no doubt be opportune.

Warnings have been coming out recently. In the New England district curtailment of manufacture is recorded, and several of the prominent mills are closing down. The Everett mills, the Lawrence duck plant, the Acadia works, the Davis Furber Company, the White Valley denim mills, the York Manufacturing Mills, and other more or less important mills have either been closed altogether or are working at half time, with little prospect of recovery for a fair length of time. The public is blamed. The public is not buying. Cloths are selling at the same price as they were last August, when cotton was six cents lower. The mills in the South are not in such a bad fix. They are curtailing production, but are more confident that they may be able to make money at present raw and finished price levels, but all the manufacturers are warning the retail trade and jobbers that their present hand-to-mouth buying must lead to higher prices, and that when public demand becomes urgent there will be difficulties of supply.

I do not know what effect this may have in the Far Eastern market, but I should presume that American cottons will be quoted by cable at prices that may be competitive with Manchester and the Japanese cotton centres.

But it certainly does appear that while cotton is in the doldrums, it is the only industry that is seriously affected.

Money everywhere is plentiful, as I have above indicated. The thought comes to me of the ease there would be for China to raise money in this country—if there were a stable government in China, if the Washington Government would back up its bankers and foreign financial operators, if China were internally at peace, if the military warriors and the political firebrands all over the country could accomplish what appears to be the impossible, bury their hatchets and get down to constructive centralization of authority and provincial activity, in industry and economic progress.

A Popular British Consul-General

The recent occasion of having conferred upon him the honour of the C.M.G. gives me an opportunity to refer to the popular Consul-General at San Francisco, a man whom a good many of your British readers may at some future time have occasion to visit when over here. Mr. Campbell is a type of British official who is doing much to cement the right and only sensible feeling of goodwill between the Americans and the British in this part of the world. At the luncheon given in his honour, reference was made to the English-speaking Union (to which I saw Captain Dollar also recently referred when he was in Shanghai), and the same feeling existed with that mixed band of Britons and Americans in San Francisco as would probably exist if the situation were duplicated in Shanghai. The Americans were a wee bit uncomfortable, and the British wondered whether the speakers actually believed and felt to be true what they were claiming in regard to growing friendly relations between the two peoples—as distinct from the two Governments. Much the same situation would be experienced if a prominent American were being entertained in the Shanghai Club, where British influence predominates. The British would hold their own opinion, and so would the Americans, and there may appear to be wide differences, but if they were absolutely truthful with each other they would probably find that much in their general viewpoint was common to both.

Both peoples know that a cordial dislike which appears natural among individuals in both nations, does exist, and is often mutual; this, however, comes from those members of both nations who have not broken down their own insular view of the other through lack of experience. One hears what the American calls the "accent" of the Englishman being "tipped the grin" at in the theatres, and the difference in the employment of the long and short "a" often gives rise to mirth among Americans. Similarly, little surface so-called incongruities give the Briton in this country and in others where he meets Americans—for the Americans, like the British, take their national foibles with them—occasion for a smirk. Moreover, motion pictures of a certain type do not tend to make either nationality feel comfortable when looking at them—if the picture is made in Los Angeles the Englishman squirms, if made in London the American has reason to get huffy, should he be foolish enough to take stock of simple surface things that do not matter. But that is, after all, the point. Our lives are so coloured with the things that are on the surface of life that we often in our hurry and competition disregard entirely the immovable basic facts of life. And this a need for a genuine, high regard of these nations for the other must surely be classed as among the basic facts of the nation life of both Great Britain and the United States. The men who think know that upon the lasting concord and growing co-operation of these two great peoples depends the peace of the world.

"Bobs" and "No-bobs."

And now for a lighter theme. I wonder whether all the schools out your way are advertising for lady teachers? If they are, and if no objection is made by the electing functionary I can recommend a fair-sized army who will be willing applicants—they are, however, all numbered among the "bobbed." Shorn of their tresses, they are also shorn of a means of existence. The edict has gone forth, in many parts of this country, that schoolmistresses, youthful or a little less youthful does not matter, who have been to the barber's to be clipped cannot continue their worthy profession of educating the young into the paths that they should tread. Several dismissals have taken place, and officials, mere men naturally, remain adamant. They want long hair, and the "no-bobs," irrespective of natural acumen, are carrying the day and winning the more highly-paid jobs.

A school-marm applies for a position; the Commissioner of Education takes one glance—if a "bob" out she goes. And, seeing that nine out of every ten women in this country (so it seems to me) are numbered not among the "unbobbed," there are a good many "bobs" whose funds are running low.

But it looks as if the "bob" is a newcomer who will be with us a long time. In the United States the barbers—yes, the barbers, indeed—are the perpetrators of this crime. It happened in this wise. Business was bad. Men were hardly coming up to scratch, and as a barber can take a "course" in about three weeks, the army of barbers grew, and this army had to be fed. Among the men there were obviously not enough haircuts and shaves to make the game a profitable one, so the barbers did what all business men in this country do—they held a convention. Barbers flocked from all parts of the country, and the number of men who went shaveless was legion. That is, until the barbers returned. But when they did return the men clients noticed a chilliness and change in demeanour, and a contemptuous sideglance as the tip changed hands. Mightly independent were the barbers. The truth only leaked out when flashy signs appeared in the windows of the barber-shops bearing the strange legend—"Ladies hair bobbed: Fifty cents," which nobody understood, but the barbers—and the ladies.

It appears that these wily haircutters had gone into secret conference at this convention, and discussed various ways and means of increasing business and turning in more honest dollars. They could think of nothing more that they could do for the men. At the present time they shaved them, they cut their hair often when it was not required, they bought them clean collars and shirts at a profit when they came off dirty trains, they stood them in a barrel and pressed theirs suits "while you wait," they "shined" their shoes, they massaged their faces. This was all they could think of. The thermometer was at a low ebb when a thinker caught just a shadow of an idea and turned the swift fire of his imagination upon it—why not "bob" the hair of the women? They called for statistics. So many millions of the female of the species, multiplied by the amount they would nominally charge, multiplied by the amount they would induce the dear creatures to pay. It ran into millions a year. Hastily, plans were drawn up for the assault. Reservations were made and the radiantly hopeful barber made a bee line back to his chair. And he is now raking in the millions. Young and old, school-marms and school girls, the old who look young and the young who look old, all are "bobbing" and marcelling, "bobbing" perhaps once a month and marcelling at least once a week. Well, reader, go into arithmetic.—Literally millions of dollars worth of business. No wonder the men cannot get service. Barbers no longer exist for men: they are giving up their time-honoured shops and opening "beauty parlours." The barber is a wealthy man from now on. Many of his grasping species, clever barbers, make much more money than some bankers, and have a much more interesting time. It is true that the "bobs" are not all successes. Some turn out like deckswabs, others hit the trail with ghastly shaven necks, just like the men, catching cold down their spines. Emulating the men, there is a tendency towards the Chrysanthemum cut—this term is my own copyright, as it expresses ideally the American haircut for men, just as it does for the little Chinese children, who have theirs tied up with little red strings: there is only a difference in the size of the chrysanthemum.

I was going to tell you a story about a "bob," but my space is gone, alas.

CORNHILL IN THE REMAKING

A Notable New Pile in the City of London

Within living memory practically the whole of Cornhill, as indeed is the case in the City in general, has been transformed in appearance, says the "City Press" of March 29. The old school will remember the thoroughfares as one of shops and office buildings in practically equal numbers. To-day all but a few of the former may be looked for in vain, and practically every one of the latter has in like way disappeared. In the place of the old-world buildings have sprung up huge blocks in consonance with modern-day ideas of what constitutes the ideal in business architecture and arrangement. The last of the new buildings is the one erected in Cornhill at the corner of Finch Lane by the Union Insurance Society of Canton, Ld. The elevation is of Portland stone over a grey granite base. The crest of the Society on two bronze plaques, artistically pricked out in gold, flanks the main entrance, and a copper finial of a ship crowns the ridge of the roof. The building is a steel-frame structure. The entrance hall is in marble, with a dome in gold mosaic. On the ground floor the principal apartment is the underwriters' room, which adjoins the main entrance, and is panelled in mahogany. The Manager's and Committee room, over the main entrance, is also panelled in mahogany. On the second floor is a luncheon room for the Committee and the heads of the staff. The floors above are available for letting. The tenants' entrance is at the east end of the site, and gives access to a marble lined hall, with a public lift connecting all the floors. In the basement a public safe deposit is in course of construction. The building, which is a notable addition to the architecture of the banking and insurance quarter of the City, has been erected by Bovis, Ld., according to the designs, accepted in competition, of Messrs. Gunton and Gunton, Finsbury House, Blomfield Street.

The Society was founded in Canton in 1835 by a group of British merchants under the guidance of the then famous firm of Dent and Co., and transferred to Hongkong in 1841 when that port was ceded to the British Crown. From that time onward, the office has been a consistently prosperous concern. Branches have been established not only in China, but in Australia, India, London, Japan, South Africa, the United States, and, in fact, every quarter of the globe. The Society acquired a controlling interest in the British (late China) Traders' Insurance Company, Ld., in 1906; in the China Fire Insurance Company, Ld., in 1916; and in the North China Insurance Company, Ld., in 1919. The growth within the last 50 years may be judged from the fact that the income grew from £121,088 in 1868 to £3,013,591 in 1921. The net assets now exceed £6,000,000, and altogether the claims paid have aggregated £20,000,00.

LIEUTENANT WOOD'S RESIGNATION

After a Fortune Made in Wall Str.

Washington, D. C., April 12.—Osborne Cutler Wood, son and aide of Governor-General Wood of the Philippines, has resigned from the army, in which he held a commission as second lieutenant, and the resignation has been accepted by President Coolidge.

No reason was made public at the war department, which stated to-day that the resignation was effective at once. Lieutenant Wood, several weeks ago, however, after he had made a fortune estimated at $800,000 by trading in Wall street, said he intended to resign and enter the diplomatic service. No application has been received as yet at the state department from him for such services.

Lieutenant Wood was granted leave of absence more than two months ago and left Manila for the United States by way of Europe. Although his present whereabouts has not been announced, he is understood to be in this country. He had been military aide to his father since the latter assumed office in the Philippines.

FROM CHINA TO CHICAGO

Wayside Jottings: The Revival of Japan: American's Preoccupations: The Lordly Pullman-Porter.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Chicago, April 4.

Comfort or speed are deciding factors rather than danger in crossing the Pacific. No really respectable liner of any sort has been lost in a long time. First-class ships cost so much that operating companies take all possible precautions to preserve their property—incidentally the lives of passengers are safe—safer in fact than on land if automobiles are about. At Nagasaki, coal was taken on as usual, a lone foreigner drifted alongside and remarked "it would drive a man to drink to live here more than a week." At Kobe we noticed harbour improvements in progress and heard debates as to its becoming the principal seaport of Japan. The ruin at Yokohama by earthquake and fire is not exaggerated, but recovery seems inevitable if Tokio is to remain the capital city. An hour's drive in a motor-car confirmed the impression that in Tokio itself, recuperation is rapid. Building is flimsy of course, but at least the people are getting under a roof again and appear to be at home. The manners of the Japanese so far as could be observed have improved somewhat since the disaster. At least, they are more sincerly earnest about allowing foreign visitors to spend money with them than formerly. Rigidity about passports had relaxed somewhat, but it it is still well to have proper visas.

The trip across was uneventful. Each passenger carried his own share of troubles, some securely locked, others scattered them around to any that would listen. The self-made man in the smoke room adored his maker as usual, the nervous lady of uncertain age and unattached was with us. Some well-behaved children were nearly ruined by other children whose parents practised the "mighty" sorry method (apologies to Montessori). The best anecdote (of ancient printage) was the following:— At a party where Mark Twain was present, conundrums were in order: The humorist asked "Why is Mark Twain like the Pacific Ocean?" Many guessed but none found the answer. Finally they asked him| His reply was "I do not know: I was only asking for information"

At Vancouver, we left the good ship that brought us across. A loyal British subject will of course go over the Canadian Pacific Railway the first time, after that he will be in the "misery of indecision" until he has tried all the other trans-continental lines. The writer having been over them all once, took the shortest in time, "Seventy hours to Chicago."

Seattle was like [illegible], but a blinding snow storm overtook us in the Rockies. Montana and Dakota seemed dry. Minnesota was still covered with snow. Ice cakes were floating on the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers as we crossed them.

It is a relief to get into a country where a dollar is a dollar and changes for ten dimes or one hundred cents even. No haggling over "big money" and "little money" in exchange. However, a dollar does not take you very far on a Pullman diner and anything less than a 25 cent. tip seems to be an insult to the lordly sleeping car porter for a shoe-shine.

American railroads are improving in the matter of safety. One advertises, "Thirty Million Passengers. No Deaths By Aceident."

The average inland U.S.A. newspaper has the briefest of all brief foreign news, but packed with local politics. baseball and mournfully comic cartoons. Republicans insist that President Coolidge will be re-electel. Democrats say, "NcAdoo, yes, he'll do."

To one passing through rapidly, the remark of Marco Polo as he went by Soochow some centuries ago, is apropos: They are so occupied with their own affairs, they have no thought for any other." Listening is a lost art in China, everybody there talks at once, it is not quite that bad in America—not yet.

We are in the suburbs of Chicago, made up lost time on the double-track section, for the train pulls in on time,

RACE IN NAVAL STRENGTH

Further Limitation Possible?: U. S. Move: Difficulties of a New Conference

In tacking an amendment to the Naval Appropriations Bill for 1924-25, requesting President Coolidge to promote an international conference for the further limitation of naval armaments, the American House of Representatives has repeated the step it took last year.

So far as one can gather, the wording of the amendment is identical with that attached to the previous Naval Bill. On this the late President Harding, after consulting with his Cabinet, decided to take no action, and it is very improbable that Mr. Coolidge, on his part, will do more than formally acknowledge the amendment.

More than once during the past 12 months it has been made clear that the perils of a precipitate move in this delicate matter are fully recognized at the White House.

Friction.

A great many people, by no means confined to the United States, seem to imagine that a new conference to extend the provisions of the Washington Treaty would be all plain sailing. This, however, is far from certain. Various circumstances favoured the success of the Washington parley. Of the five great Powers participating, all were weary of naval rivalry, and none, with the possible exception of the United States, was capable of bearing the financial strain of a renewed competition in super-Dreadnoughts.

Yet, even so, it took more than two months of continuous negotiation to arrive at a settlement, and only a partial one at that.

Battleship and aircraft-carrier tonnage was rationed. But no agreement could be reached for the limitation of other warship types, and attempts to do so created friction between the British and French delegates, which inevitably reacted on the relations between their Governments.

It is doubtful, to say the least, whether France would he working on her present large programme of submarine construction had the conference never taken place.

French Attitude.

A new disarmament treaty, to be effective at all, would have to embrace every type of ship, including submarines. Is it likely that France, for example, would agree to a quota of submarine tonnage which would be acceptable to this country? No one who followed last year's debates in the Paris Chamber on the ratification of the Washington Treaty can doubt the answer. M. Poincaré and other Ministers stated categorically that France intended to keep her hands entirely free in the matter of minor naval construction.

The adhesion of Japan to a compact restricting cruisers and submarines is equally problematical. The late Admiral Viscount Kato stated when at Washington that Japanese naval opinion looked upon these craft as defensive units. Moreover, it is common knowledge that Japan, since the Conference, has been out-building Great Britain and the United States together in light cruisers and undersea boats, and is now far in advance of her 3-5-5 Treaty ratio in both types.

Probably, therefore, opposition to the restriction of such vessels would be as determined, if not so outspoken, in Japan as across the Channel.

Finally, there is the question of bringing all the secondary naval Powers into line, and how thorny a problem this would be has lately been demonstrated by the abortive meeting at Rome, convened under the auspices of the League of Nations.

Not Agreed.

The opinion reached by those who have studied the matter from all angles is that naval disarmament, in the full sense of the term, is something which, desirable though it may be, is practically beyond attainment either now or in the near future; further, that a conference held at the present juncture would do infinitely more harm than good.

It is not as though even Great Britain and the United States were in agreement as to the broad principles of additional naval limitation. American Service writers invariably demand parity with Britain in cruiser tonnage, while British experts hold that the immense volume of seaborne trade upon which this country is dependent requires for its protection many more cruisers than the United States would be willing to concede.

If, therefore, President Coolidge were to summon a new naval conference in obedience to the request of Congress, the effect upon political relations could scarcely be beneficial, and might well prove deplorable. The pruning down of international armaments is a matter that calls for the most delicate and cautious treatment. One hasty move might ruin everything.

The fact that American statesmen, for all their desire to promote world disarmament, are maintaining so cautious an attitude, should give pause to the idealists who are impatient to see the ocean swept clear of all fighting ships.

COLOUR QUESTION IN NEW YORK

Excitement Over a Play

Washington, March 3.—The newspapers and public officials of New York are being bombarded with letters protesting against the presentation of Eugene O'Neill's play "All God's Chillun got Wing," which will soon be given its first performance in that city. The play deals with the tragic love of a full-blooded negro and a white woman of culture and refinement and wife a man who has risen above his environment. The great scene in the drama is when the wife falls at her husband's feet impressed by his nobility of character, and kisses his hand.

The protests are based partly on the danger of arousing racial antagonism in New York, with its huge negro population, which, to say the least, is arrogant, always insisting upon its rights, and protesting against white discrimination, and partly on the feeling of intense disgust that mixture of races always arouses in America. Mr. O'Neill is one of the leading American dramatists, the author of "The Emperor Jones" and "Anna Christie," the latter seen recently in London. He says the racial factor is incidental, and the play is a character study of two human beings.

The authorities are powerless to prevent the new play's production, as there is no censorship of the stage. Legal action against the producer is only possible on the ground that the play is obscene or detrimental to public morals or a menace to public peace.

SECRET OF THE ATOM

Scientist Undaunted After Ten Years' Work

Will the energy of the atom ever be applied for the benefit of mankind?

The Duc de Broglie the distinguished physicist confessed to the "Daily News" recently that, although he has analysed the atom for close on 10 years, he was at loss to say whether the undoubtedly enormous energy it possessed could ever be applied to the problems that beset the world.

He works in a marble-walled laboratory in Paris—sometimes for days without food or sleep.

"I shall," he declared, "continue to study. I feel I must go on. Habits formed and, as it were established over a period of 10 years are hard to break.

"If ever the energy of the atom were liberated its effect might well revolutionize the future of the world; but it is too much to hope for—our task is to hope on and search."

THE NEW. SPAIN

No Likelihood of Any Counter-Revolution

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Madrid, April 2.

The Directorate in Spain is slowly elaborating a new constitution.

Instead of summoning a special representative assembly for that purpose, General Primo de Rivera has thought it wiser to take the matter in hand personally, with the help of his colleagues of the Directorate, and not to hand the sovereign power back to the people until he feels satisfied that the new machine is in good working order.

By the new Statute of Local Administration, which has just been published, the municipalities are to acquire a much larger degree of autonomy than was the case under the old regime, while care has been taken to avoid the old political corruption and the usurpation of power by professional politicians. The ballot is to be secret, which was not the case formerly, when votes were freely bought and sold.

All men will have the vote at 23 years of age, and women at the same age when heads of families.

Tariff Questions

Another important new institution is the Council of National Economy. This is composed of Government nominees and representatives of industry and agriculture, and will draw up tariffs and prepare commercial treaties with foreign Powers. It will, of course, be under Government control, but constitutes a great step forward, since every important branch of industry is to be heard before any changes can be made henceforth in the tariffs.

It is hoped that the Directorate may soon be able to simplify much of the complicated machinery that at present makes it very difficult in Spain to establish a business.

I know a man who has been trying ever since October to open a place of amusement of a particularly innocent sort, but the number of officials whose signature is necessary is so great, and the time each one takes to affix it to the necessary documents so long, that, in spite of spending most of his time in government and municipal departments for six months, he has not got his papers through yet.

Coup Canards

The likelihood of counter-revolutions, or anything like violence with bloodshed in Spain, for some time to come, at least, may be put down as negligible. The almost unanimous feeling of the country is that things are improving, and will go on improving, and a counter-revolution would have no partisans outside small political or military groups. In such circumstances it would certainly not be successful, unless for a moment only.

The recent news of serious reverses in Morocco, like that of rebellion in Catalonia a few weeks ago, had its origin doubtless in speculation on exchange, and was given prominence in certain foreign newspapers out of mere impatience for the sensational news which does not come.

THE PASS-WORD OF THE TOWER

Lord Mayor's Privilege

A question asked by the Lord Chief Justice at the Masons' banquet the other night, would have to be answered by a good many persons, one supposes, in the negative. He was speaking of the various duties of the Lord Major, and asked whether it is "generally known that every week he is given the pass-word of the City of London."

Though "every week" and the reference to the City are not strictly accurate, the interesting fact remains that every quarter the pass-word of the Tower of London for each day in the three months is sent to the Lord Mayor by the resident governor under the Sovereign's sign manual, that is to say, the King actually signs the list of words. ("Appd. Geo. R.I.") in his own hand.

Though the privilege is rarely if ever exercised the pass-word enables the Lord Mayor, at any time of the day or night even though the guard is set, to pass through the gates to see the Governor, or for any other public duty. When the Lord Mayor goes out of office he communicates the pass-words for the remainder of the quarter to his successor.

ELECTRIFYING IRELAND

German Scheme to Harness Shannon: Free State Favourably Disposed

The harnessing of the River Shannon for the supply of light, heat and power throughout the Free State has been provisionally undertaken by Messrs. Siemens, a Berlin engineering firm.

This ambitious scheme is disclosed in a White Paper issued by the Free States Government recently.

Dr. Wallen, director of Siemens, visited Ireland recently and investigated the water power resources. He laid before President Cosgrave and other Ministers plans for the supply of electrical power in sufficient quantities and at a low price to meet the present and prospective needs of the whole of the Free State.

Government's Attitude

The White Paper states that the Government is not at present in a position to judge of the merits of the Siemens proposals from the technical side, but is prepared to give the firm an opportunity of developing their plans.

It is pointed out by the Government that previous inquiries into possibilities of the Shannon for the purpose of hydro-electrical development led to much less optimistic conclusions than those reached by the Berlin firm, who are to produce a full report on the scheme on or before September 1, 1924.

A State Scheme?

The Government reserves the right itself to carry out the scheme, if approved, or to authorize the firm to do so.

As to the condition of Siemens that if the Government promotes the undertaking the German firm should have the contract for the supply of all material and for the construction of all works the government replies that it would reserve the right to test the quality and prices of the material with a view to ascertaining that the prices were not higher than those obtainable from a reputable firm in any part of the world.

Siemens accept the complete contents of the Government stipulations as the basis for proceeding with the scheme, and will proceed with their investigations, sending engineers to the Shannon as soon as it suits the convenience of the Government.

BOX THAT TALKS

Will It Enable the Dumb to Speak?

How to make a scientific instrument speak by means of an artificial tongue has been demonstrated by Sir Richard Paget before the Institute of Electrical Engineers.

Sir Richard, taking a small dummy voice box and blowing air through it by a rubber tube, so manipulated his fingers that he was able to make the box produce vowels and words. The magical box also called on Sir Oliver Lodge and Professor Vernon Boys by name.

A model was used containing an organ reed as a substitute for the vocal chords. Pairs of pot-shaped resonators gave the effect of the mouth cavity and spoke the vowels like a human being. Another instrument, recently invented by Dr. Eccles, was operated. In this the resonators were merely tuned electric circuits after the manner of a wireless set. The vowel sounds were produced by a "loud speaker," apparently by depressing a row of keys.

These experiments suggest the possibility of the dumb being able to speak by regulating the air in an artificial mouth box with their fingers.

MANCHESTER DIVIDED OVER THE EMPIRE EXHIBITION

Salford Its Own Pet Grievance: The Influence of a Trade in Cancer: Troubles with Municipal Housing: The Nightingale and Wireless Telephony

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Manchester, April 9.

Our City Fathers have been quarrelling again. The bone of contention on this occasion does not lack size, for it is nothing smaller than the Great British Empire Exhibition. It appears that Wembley has a concrete palace for which it has no particular use, so the promoters have christened it the "Civic Hall," and propose to let it out by the week, fortnight, or month, to any enterprising city or township that cares to hire it and boost its local manufactures, residential amenities, or civic enterprise. One group of our Aldermen and City Councillors are in favour of renting this white elephant for a fortnight and holding a "Great Civic Period." If we don't, they say, it will brand our lack of public spirit for many generations. The rest of the Council—slightly in the majority—are frankly derisive. What is a Civic Period, they ask, and who will spend time looking at photographs of the Manchester Sewage Works when there is the great Burma building to see next door? As no one could tell them what a Civic Period was and as its supporters were accused of desiring a glorified picnic on the cheap the proposal was defeated: We are to have a Manchester Bureau in the Exhibition for the whole period, but there is to be no big splash.

Salford Aggrieved.

While our City Fathers were knocking on the head this conspiracy to depress the Exhibition's patrons the neighbouring Council of Salford was passing a resolution to co-operate with us in a joint Civic Period. The only opposition came from a few jealous councillors who objected to it being called the "Manchester Civic Period." Salford, they indignantly asserted, was always being overshadowed by its better known neighbour. Why not a Salford Civic Week? The wrath of these patriots is now assuaged for Salford is to have a Civic Period of its own. It will then have another grievance against Manchester, for every intending purchaser of Salford's manufactures taking a train to the place of their origin will be compelled to alight at a Manchester station and run a short gauntlet of our business men.

The great contribution of Lancashire to Wembley is to be staged in the Palace of Industries. It will consist of a practical demonstration of the whole process of cotton spinning carried through on a complete plant of the most modern machines. Visitors will see the cotton opened out from the bales, cleaned, and spun; and experts will be in attendance to explain the process. The whole of the cotton exhibit will take up 51,000 square feet of floor space and cost over £250,000.

Cancer in Cotton Industry.

The problem of the cause of the disproportionate number of cancer cases among the mule spinners in the cotton industry has been brought to the fore by an interesting lawsuit which came before Judge Mossop a few days ago at the Ashton-under-Lyne County Court. It was in the nature of a test, for over a hundred individual cases will be affected by the result. Mr. Harry Whiteley, an operative cotton spinner at the Tudor Mill, Ashton, claimed compensation from his employers for a cancer in the scrotum, alleging that it was caused by the left side of his groin coming into contact with the faller bar of his machine.

Some years ago it was remarked that cancer of a certain kind was very prevalent among mule spinners. As the only known cause of cancer is chronic irritation, and as it was noted that 80 p.c. of the cases occurred on the victim's left side medical men investigated the working conditions in the mills. They found that the spinner's left side came into incessant contact with the faller bar, and that this bar was usually coated with a mineral oil which penetrated the worker's clothing and set up irritable conditions. Two well known Manchester doctors who have been investigating this incidence of cancer among mule spinners gave evidence at the Court. They said that of the large number of cases treated in the Manchester Royal Infirmary, more than 50 p.c. were mule spinners, and in their opinion the case at issue was directly attributable to the man's occupation. The hearing of the case has been adjourned until May or June. In the case of mule spinners there seems every likelihood of this form of the disease being scheduled as an occupational complaint and liable for compensation. The defence is concentrating on the undeniable factor that some people have a predisposition to cancer.

Other matters affecting conditions in the cotton mills have recently achieved considerable publicity through the efforts of the Legislative Council fo the United Factory Worker's Association. This Council alleges that the artificial humidity used in many weaving sheds is only "a scientific apology for the use of inferior materials," and demands its discontinuance in the interests of the health of the operatives. A campaign is also to be carried on against the existing system of fining in mills. It was said that the management of one mill fined its women operatives one shilling every time they were caught talking, and that in most mills where systems of fines are in operation the workers have to pay because of accidents to the material before it reaches their machines. Mr. A. Henderson, the Home Secretary, is now making a personal inspection of the mills of Lancashire to observe conditions at first hand. New factory legislation is expected as a result of his visit.

House Shortage.

Although Manchester claims to have built more houses, in proportion to its population, than any town or city in the kingdom the house shortage here seems as acute as ever. The people who cannot get houses are dissatisfied, and the people who have the new Council houses are even more dissatisfied. The latter contend that the rents are far too high. As the wages of many workers have fallen to 40/- and 50/- per week it is undoubtedly a hardship to have to pay 16/- to 20/- of it in rent. Some of these Council houses are warmed by an elaborate system of central heating and this has induced dry rot in most of the wooden floors all of which are now to be replaced at the cost of the general body of ratepayers. But the burning grievance of the homeless is a curious one. It appears that when the Housing Scheme was commenced the building contractors had considerable difficulty in getting operative builders. To attract them to Manchester, one firm—with the permission of the Housing Committee—offered them housing accommodation in the first houses to be built while they were building others. The builders came, but in most instances when they were comfortable installed in their new residences they abandoned the comparatively unprofitable business of house building and engaged themselves on more profitable contracts. Efforts to persuade them to vacate the houses of the citizens have failed, and they are now, by a decision of the Council, to be allowed to remain.

The Hulton Papers.

The block of Manchester daily and weekly newspapers formerly owned by Hultons, and sold by them last year to the Daily Mail Trust, have again changed hands. Sir William Berry, and Mr. Gomer Berry, are the new purchasers, for £5½ millions. The papers are the "Daily Dispatch," "Evening Chronicle," "Sporting Chronicle," "Sunday Chronicle" "Empire News," and "Athletic News." The Berry Brothers rank next to the Rothermere-Beaverbrook interests in the range of newspapers and periodicals they control. They have a controlling interest in the "Sunday Times," "Financial Times," "Daily Graphic," "Western Mail," and the Weldon and Cassell groups of periodicals. Manchester folk do not take very kindly to these changes. Lord Rothermere is not popular here. The Berrys are likely to be less popular, for both of the former proprietors were primarily news sellers, whose main interests were in the press. The new proprietors are primarily concerned with coal and textile interests. Their press is their organ of propaganda.

The Nightingale Broadcast.

Our local bird and poetry lovers have been looking forward to April, for the British Broadcasting Company have promised to let them listen to that rare visitant to the north—the nightingale. 2LO, the London station, is to take a microphone into a wood where the nightingale is singing, transmit the sound to London, and broadcast it from there to the north. It should not be a difficult task as the bird is not difficult to approach, and its vocal performances are comparatively lengthy. It should be a special pleasure to hear, in this drab sooty city that voice.

"The same that oft-times hath
Charm'd magic casements, opening on the foam
Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn."

If the scheme is successful it should open up a vast range of possibilities. The anti-prohibitionists in the States may yet provoke their parched fellow countrymen to revolt by broadcasting there the cheerful sound of care-free men calling for "another" in a British inn.

Local Patriotism.

A few days ago the first meeting was held of the new Manchester Regional Society. Its special function is to co-ordinate the local discoveries of individuals and societies over the whole of the Manchester area. Professor Weiss, who addressed the meeting referred to many curious discoveries within our area. He said that the hot water flowing from the mills into one of our local canals kept its temperature high, and in it could be found several animals and plants only found elsewhere in Southern Europe and Africa. He thought they must have come over with the cotton from Egypt. Rare moths, much coveted by museums and collectors had been found on Kersal Moor, which is within a mile or two of the town's centre. These statements have engendered great enthusiasm among local naturalists and collectors. We have heard that many industrious Manchester investigators are now feverishly engaged in trying to discover where the sun gets to during the summer months. Old Mancunians are reported to have seen it several times during their childhood but the assertion is usually received with caution.

ENCHANTMENTS OF THE MIDDLE AGE

London is beautiful, I know
Its sooty churches chalked with white,
The quiet squares where plane trees grow
And lamplit streets on rainy night.
Beauty of light and fog and dark,
And yet my heart within me turns
To lands in woodcut books I mark,
For missal lands my spirit yearns.
Where everything is flat and bright
With colors definite and clean,
Where roads turn dazzlingly white
Through forests square and neat and green.
The little cities, twisted, tall,
Stand up on hills more steep than high,
Each red machicolated wall
Seen clear against the clearer sky.

LONDON, May 7.—Major Brackley, formerly a member of the Air Mission in Japan, has been appointed Air Superintendent of the new Imperial Airways Company.—Reuter.

IT is interesting in view of the agitation regarding continuance of the Gentleman's Agreement and the proposed Immigration Law, to learn how many Japanese entered the Pacific ports of America. Figures to hand for the month of March show that approximately 600 Japanese steerage passengers landed. Less than 500 first-class travellers of other nationalities disembarked during the same period.

OUR PARIS LETTER

Anxiety over the Franc Subsiding: Early Prospect of Improved Financial Position

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Paris, Mar. 21.

The panic over the franc has become less acute, the Government having at last resorted to the only kind of measures that could give immediate results.

Arrangements were made in London and New York for credits, so that the official brokers could step into the market and buy francs wholesale. As soon as this became known, the tide began to turn. Speculators who had sold francs which they did not possess had either to borrow them at high rates of interest or close their accounts. For five days in succession, the franc moved sharply upward, and the pound, which last week touched Frs. 120, is now in the neighbourhood of Frs. 84. This confirms the French contention that the depreciation of the franc, which became so marked during the early part of this month, was artificial.

As it was so easily stopped, one wonders why it should have been allowed to take place at all, as the rise in the prices of commodities, which it caused, inflicted great loss on the community. The recovery was brought about by a market operation and not by the French Parliament's rather tardy acceptance of the Government's fiscal proposals.

Only a Temporary Remedy.

Admittedly the operation was merely a temporary remedy. Money borrowed to meet an emergency must be repaid if credit is to be maintained, and the borrowing will not have been of much use unless, before the time comes for repayment, the borrower has been able to "turn round" and realize some of his assets. It is hoped that this can be done in virtue of the wide powers which have been granted to the Government for cutting down public expenditure. As the tax revenue is rising, there is every reason to suppose that in a few months the financial position will be considerably better, and that the burden of the enormous floating debt will be accordingly lightened, independently of what is really the main question—Germany's ability and willingness to pay reparations. The experts now sitting in Paris may succeed in drawing up a plan for payment by Germany, but at present there is not much belief that Germany will accept the plan and that she will carry out her part of the bargain. If she does, so much the better, but I do not think that either the French Government or the people is counting on it. All the indications from Germany point to resistance rather than acquiescence.

Practically all Devastated Areas Cultivated.

M. Reibel, Minister for the Liberated Regions, has just made a statement of the work of reconstruction carried out by France, at her own expense, in the war-ravaged districts of the north and east. There were 3,000,000 claims for compensation, of which 80,000 still remain for final assessment. The total amount of the claims is Frs. 140,000,000,000 and is is estimated that the actual payments will come to about Frs. 82,000,000,000, of which Frs. 54,000,000,000 has been paid out up to the present. France consequently has still to find another Frs. 28,000,000,000 as compensation ot her nationals, and she must either turn a deaf ear to them or go on borrowing, except in the unlikely event of Germany paying.

As proof of the care with which the claims are assessed, M. Reibel says that 1,170 persons have been prosecuted for attempted fraud, and that 310 have been convicted. Nearly all the devastated agricultural land has been brought under cultivation again, except about 110,000 acres rendered useless for crops and fit for nothing but conversion into forest. Out of 741,993 fram houses and buildings destroyed, 598,000 are now rebuilt, and out of 22,900 destroyed or damaged factories, 20,500 are again in working order.

The Late Baron Monti.

Mr. Jean Carrère, the Rome correspondent of the "Temps,", gives an interesting sketch of a personage who, though quite unknown to the public, had played for more than 30 years, up to his death the other day, a very important part in Italian political life—so important, in fact, that in the inner circle he was referred to is "the Italian Ambassador to the Holy See." This personage was Baron Carlo Monti, a descendant of a very old Brescia family, a good Catholic and an ardent patriot. In 1892 he held one of the higher posts at the Ministry of Justice and Cults. Signor Ciolitti, then in office for the first time, noticed Baron Monti and appointed him comptroller of the department which controls the funds set side for church purposes. It was an extremely difficult and delicate post, the holder of which was constantly called on to act as arbitrator between Church and State and to settle the innumerable claims that arose in connexion with the abolition of religious congregations. Baron Monti, who combined the virtues of a first-rate official with unfailing courtesy, settled all these questions with so much tact that in a few years he secured the confidence of the Italian Government and of the Vatican. As he was also known to be a sincere Catholic, his influence extended far beyond the limits of his official position. Whenever a difficulty arose between the temporal and spiritual powers in Rome, Baron Monti was the one and only channel of communication. Pope Leo XIII greatly appreciated his services. Pius X frequently consulted him and Benedict XV treated him as a friend. They were college students together, and when Cardinal della Chiesa became Pope and Baron Monti came to see him for the first time after his election, the new Pope would not let him kneel but kissed him on both cheeks.

Trusted Ambassador to the Pope.

It soon became known at the Vatican that Baron Monti could see the Pope whenever he liked, and this gave him a unique position. He was in reality, though not in name, Italian Ambassador to the Holy See. He had to contend with a good many difficulties during the war. At times the relations between the Quirinal and the Vatican became extremely strained, but, thanks to Baron Monti, nothing serious happened. Baron Monti possessed the tact, patience and length of view characteristic of the Vatican diplomacy, and as the Italian Government had confidence in him and gave him a free hand, he always managed to come to a settlement acceptable to both sides.

It will not be easy to replace him, and yet somebody must be found to maintain communication between the Italian Government and the Vatican. Soon after the resumption of relations between France and the Holy See, territorial concessions to the Holy See were discussed in Italy, and it was even asserted that the two powers had come to an understanding. Baron Monti had no illusions on this score. He knew that the Vatican, with all eternity before it, could not accept any vague and hasty settlement, and that no Italian Government, however well disposed, could hand over national territory. He considered that though the Roman problem was not insoluble, inasmuch as anything can be settled in course of time, it cannot be solved for the present. This is still true, despite Signor Mussolini's respect for the Papacy and his sincere admiration for the Church's power and influence.

ONE of the tests of the prosperity of the interior towns and villages lies in the amount of mineral oil consumed. The kerosene imported this year amounts to nearly 9 millions, against 3½ millions last spring. Another test is the sugar import, and this also has swollen.

A CORRESPONDENT in a Japan paper who writes to correct an impression that stevedoring in Japan is slow and costly says: "Stevedoring (using the term in its strict and proper sense) in the main ports of Japan can compare favourably with most ports in the world. Take Kobe for instance: one gang will discharge or load, on an average, 25 tons per hour, of a cost of 50 sen per ton. Readers with the knowledge can compare these figures with the other great ports of the world.

THE DIVINE "POWER" OF JESUS CHRIST

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, on Sunday Evening, March 23.

St. Matthew XI: 12.. And from the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and men of violence take it by force."

Few words of our Lord, to use the words of the text, have suffered more violence than these, at the hands of well-meaning people. They have been made to teach everything except exactly what they do teach. Piety has wrestled hard with them. It has been rather shocked at their tone. It is astonishing how frequently Jesus Christ does shock well-meaning piety, not only in the Jews of His own day, but also in the Gentiles of ours. They have been made to refer in condemnation of the violent attacks on the Gospel and its adherents by the Roman Empire and its officials, and all their persecutions of the early church. It has not often occurred to Christian people, that although sometimes the Lord spoke in metaphorical language, the meaning of which needs to be "observingly distilled out," yet sometimes He spoke in plain straight language, with no trace of metaphor about it, and that this may well be one of the latter cases, as indeed it is.

Words that Have Been Weakened.

So then, let us try to look at these words for a few minutes on the supposition that Jesus meant what He said. We must pay a little attention to the words first, and try to be sure that we do not misinterpret them. The word translate "suffereth violence" means to be forced by strong action, to be broken into. Actively it seems to be to break in, to use energy in getting one's way. So that it means that the kingdom of heaven is entered by people, who really mean to get in, if the application of human energy and will can do anything in that direction. It is not to be entered by people, who are only languidly interested, and do not care much whether they get in or not. And the second clause has the same signification. To "take by force" is not as this phrase is often interpreted to mean, like the besieging of a fortress: it is rather like the seizing of the prey or valuable booty. A man is so delighted, overjoyed to get it, that he, as it were, grabs at it. How many to-day do that to the Salvation, that the Saviour died to give? Men philander over it, toy with it, criticize it, doubt it, improve it; anything but "go for" it, for that common expression is the best translation one can give. The word "violence" has come to have the meaning of overstrong action when milder measures would serve. And so these words of Jesus have been weakened. He was mild and gentle; but there was another side to Him altogether. His gentleness was the gentleness of strength and power, not the gentleness of weakness. Carlyle once protested against the idea of a pallid "soupkitchen Christ."

Fable of Our Lord's Weakness.

When we want anything very much, as Jesus Christ supposes men ought to want to be what He calls "saved." there is [illegible] They are ruthless as regards small, and often great difficulties in the way. They are not easily put off. The gentleness of our Lord has been abused. He has been represented as sentimentally weak. There is a story of a visit of a quiet English village of some 20 [illegible] You know how deadly quiet life in such a village is. One morning the such brought him an invitation to a "Quiet Day" at the episcopal palace. You know what is meant by "A quiet day," a day of silence except for almost inaudible prayers, with intervals for "silent prayer." The good man wrote to his bishop in these terms, "My Lord, what we want in our village is an earthquake." He was sick of quiet days. No wonder! A Primitive Methodist Camp-Meeting would have done him more good. Jesus Christ did not come into the world to conduct Quiet Days. He came to cause earthquakes, to set "a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." That is, truth is truth, and if the following and obeying of it disrupts a man's domestic relations, it must be so. This happens in India every day, when men are converted. He calls for us to take His message and claims as matters of the utmost urgency. His Gospel of forgiveness and mercy is a treasure, that ought to urge a man to do a most violent thing, to "sell all that he hath," and buy it. I suspect, that we have all been led astray into exaggerating the quietness and gentleness of the Lord by His meekness at His arrest in the garden and in the judgment-hall. But that was deliberate in fulfilment of His purpose of giving His life for the sins of the world.

At other times in word and deed He was strong, and moved with admiration of strong, even violent action.

This is clear enough from the story. Consider the speculations of the people as to who He was. When He asked His disciples, who men said He was, they answered, John the Baptist or Elijah. When we remember the impression John made, how he called the Pharisees "vipers" and asked them, "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come;" also when we remember Elijah and the prophets of Baal, and reflect that the people took Him for one of these men, we see that the popular idea of our Lord as always mild and quiet, for "peace at any price," cannot possibly be true.

"Violent" Humanity.

Notice next, the emphatic praise Jesus always gave those who adopted violent methods to get at Him for His help and blessing. He was lost in admiration of those who "seized it," who would take no denial. There is the case of the poor man, who had to be let down through the roof, because there was such a crowd round the door. Any of us would think it unreasonably violent if anyone broke up our roof to get to hear us preach. But He couldn't resist such determination and He healed the man. There was the Syro-Phoenician woman. She answered Him back, and said even the dogs get the crumbs on the floor. That captured Him, as earnestness brought to the pitch of violence always does. The daughter was healed at once. There was Zacchaeus. Little men are handicapped. The violent is the unusual. Customs official as he was, he threw dignity to the winds and climbed a tree to see Him. Of course Jesus saw a man who cast social conventionalities aside like that, and the man was saved. "This day is salvation come to this house." The blind men too are a case. The people told them to stop their noise. But the Lord had no objection. He liked them because they were what He called "violent," dead in earnest. Now, it cannot be without meaning that the man, who takes a strong initiative is Christ's model man. In fact, the text is literally true, "From the days of John the Baptist, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence." Jesus took up the work of John. The cases I have quoted show, that from the beginning of Christ's ministry, He was taken by the vigorous people, who shewed small respect for difficulties, social conventions, and conventional religious ways.

Then, have you ever noticed how, in His teaching as to prayer, He is in favour of "violence?" His two cases are of the Importunate Widow, and the Friend at midnight. Both are most extraordinary ones. The widow keeps at the judge till in sheer weariness he grants her prayer, and the man rings his friend up at midnight to borrow three loaves. And the teaching is clear, that God cannot resist determined prayer. A Salvation Army captain wrestling in prayer for the crowd round him on the sands at the seaside is much more Our Lord's ideal of prayer than our quiet pretentious whisperings to God, according to Jesus, lose people who stick to Him, till they wrest an answer. To ask quietly and doubtfully, expecting a refusal is to get a refusal. If that is not the meaning of it, what is the meaning of each of these parables?

The Language of Jesus

Then there is the language of Jesus Christ. As it has often been remarked, we read certain chapters of the Gospel by John about the Good Shepherd, and we do well to read them. We need shepherding, and the lost sheep need seeking, and tired lambs need leading or carrying home. That is true. But there are other chapters that show the complementary side to the nature of Jesus, and these we do not read. There is the eighth chapter of John. The people said that God was their Father. He said that can hardly be so, because, if God were your Father, you would love Him. And He went on to say the fact was that they were of their father, the devil, and they did the lusts of their father. That is plain speaking, nothing gentle about it. Christ had a tremendous respect for man's capacity to perceive the truth, if he is willing to perceive it, and wants to do so. No one was ever so complimentary to man's capacity to take in truth as the Lord. He credited everyone of us with the capacity to know the truth, if we want to. And He didn't believe they wanted, and He said, that not to want the truth is devilishness. Do we ever read that tremendous chapter, St. Matthew XXIII? You can hardly say anything worse of a man than that he is a "whted sepulchre;" then He calls them "hypocrites," "fools and blind," and winds up with calling them, "serpents" and "a generation of vipers." And these words are to describe the religious leaders of the nation! Yet such violent language was not inconsistent with tenderness and love, for He immediately breaks out into a passion of tears for the unhappy city that has rejected Him, how He would have gathered her children together "as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing," but they would not.

We talk glibly about Christianity being independent of doctrine and so on, and being simply "living in the spirit of Jesus." But, are we sure we have got hold of the real spirit of Jesus? It is not the spirit of the young lady in one of Charles Dickens's books, who was so charitable and broad, that she "could smile with equal sweetness on brimstone and on treacle." Indeed it is not as if there were no difference between truth and deadly error.

Success of Violence.

The history of the Church teems with examples of the success of violence. Talk and remonstrance had failed to abolish gladiatorial shows in the Roman Empire, even after it had become Christian. Old custom dies hard. Then a monk one day leapt into the arena among the wild beasts. That put an end to it. The Reformation began when Martin Luther did a very violent thing, that made an immense sensation, his burning of the Pope's bull against him, a risky thing to do in those days. Violence like that is clean-cut. You know where he was, and you are. A deed like that scatters verbal fogs, throws principles into a clear light, does more to make men think than ages of talk. That is the effect of the crucifixion of Jesus. Reams of Sermons on the Mount would never have made Him the world's Saviour. The chances are that we should never have heard of Him, if He had left nothing but dusty volumes of Sermons. But He was crucified, a violent, terrible thing. The world has had to sit up and take notice of that. That the Son of God, that such a one as Jesus, so holy, so loving, was crucified, and had to be crucified, before man could be saved, leaves sin, and all excuses for sin, without excuse. There is nothing to be said for a thing that did that. Man, if he will think at all on his relation to God, knows that he cannot belittle sin in view of Calvary.

Now, for a few moments, let us see why it is, that Christianity favours what Jesus calls "violence," strong action. First, it is in its very nature "violent." That is to say, it is a breaking into the natural order of the world of a higher and supernatural order. Jesus Christ was not the outcome and evolved result of [illegible] existing "resident forces," as Huxley said. No. It is, however you explain it, a breaking in of divine power in Jesus Christ, and all breakings in to an established order are in the nature of violence. Christianity is a "new thing"; it is not just old methods furbished up and given a new name. Violent things are definite, and we date the actual time when this happened, when the angels sang in heaven in the ears of a few shepherds, and a child was born in Bethlehem.

Naturalism hates this idea, and tries to smother it, but it is plain on the most superficial reading of the New Testament, that this is what Christianity claims to be. We can't argue it all out now.

This being so, the Gospel implies the introduction into the world of tremendous forces. It is strong wine, not the weak aerated water we tend to represent it to be. No. It is the gathering of all even of His own forces by God, the Eternal, in a supreme effort to bring man to Himself. It has the energies of the Eternal Spirit of God wrestling with man, it has the ceaselessly exerted power of the Son of God, once alive in the flesh, dead and buried, and risen at the right hand of God, ever seeking entrance into human hearts, and there is all the cosmic clash of opposing divine and human wills. No wonder there is upset and trouble in the world, and will be as long as man rebels against God's Chosen.

And finally, Christianity claims to be final. No wonder Jesus Christ was in deadly earnest. As the late Dr. Gwatkin says, "it claims to be the final truth of God and man." The New Testament means nothing unless it means that. The final destiny of us all depends on our relation to Christ. The idea of Christianity is tremendous, and in a sense terrifying; that it is the final appeal of the God of heaven to man, to accept His love, to seek His pardon, to be reconciled to Him in Christ Jesus. Such being the case, no wonder the Saviour smiled on men, who broke down roofs to get at Him and be healed, and who shouted at the passing prophet of Nazareth, to the annoyance of quieter people, that He would give them their sight. He always approved of vigorous initiative which is always in its nature "violent."

LESSONS IN GOLF

XI.—The Playing Pace

By Harry Vardon—Six Times Open Champion

The manner in which the clubface strikes the ball is the subject of closest attention when practising the various strokes of golf, but there are a good many subordinate points that repay consideration.

Take, for instance, the question of the playing pace. I feel certain that the thousands of golfers handicap themselves by spending too long in addressing the ball and wondering whether they are going to hit it well or ill. We cannot all be like Mr. Bobbie Jones and George Duncan, whose way it is to ground the club once and then swing it, but if we spend an inordinate time in our preparations, the chances are that our concentration begins to weaken before we actually start the swing. And concentration of the mind, as the variest novice at the game knows instinctively, is one of the secrets of a successful shot on the links.

The Worst of Procrastination

Worst of all, this procrastination when the player has taken up his position to hit has a way of making him set his muscles more and more rigidly the longer he puts off the business of swinging the club. As his mind is working all the while, it must have some effect upon his physical constitution, and what it does naturallly—seeing that it is preparing his body to deliver a blow—is involuntarily and steadily to tighten all his muscles.

Of all the effects of slow play, this is the worst. I have in mind now the golfer who either waves the club-head many, many times to and fro in the address, or else places it behind the ball and stares steadily at the latter object till at length he seems to have transfixed it with his gaze. Either type of player is to be seen in profusion on any course.

Nearly always he has a stiff action. There comes a stage in his preparations where mental concentration begins to wane and muscular concentration becomes supreme, and that condition is fatal to good golf.

America's Speeding-up

Alexander Herd is the only first-class golfer I know who flourishes the club-head six or seven times at the ball before hitting. He is a law unto himself; the exception that proves the rule.

J. J. McDermott, the first really great American-born professional—it is excellent news that his health is so far recovered as to engender hopes of his return to the game—was at one time rather a slow player, but, at about that period, infinite preparation was something of a cult among prominent American golfers. Evidently they came to the conclusion that it served no useful purpose, for nowadays they are very far from being slow.

The duration of the address must necessarily vary in different people, with their different temperaments, but once the golfer has taken up his position and grounded his club carefully behind the ball, the sooner he takes it back for the swing—without feeling that he is hurrying—the better, I think, will be the results.

He may reasonably want to flourish the club-head two or three times at the ball in the process of taking aim, but, after that, the action is apt to become automatic and stiff because his concentration is losing the strength of its freshness.

Particularly does he need to remember that, although the body must be stable and well-balanced, there should be a condition of ease and relaxation in the joints and muscles all the while.

If he is accustomed to long and frequent waggling and protracted focussing of the eye on the ball before the shot, let him pursue his usual methed and stop just before he raises the club to consider whether he has made his body taut in these preliminaries.

Let him begin by deciding whether he has tightened his grip—which is a common result of such preparations and a bad one. My settled conviction is that at no stage should the grip be more tha reasonably firm; that it should never be actually tight. It has a way of tightening from the sheer mental suspense of a long-drawn-out address.

Teeing-Ground Options

Among general details on the art of golf methods, I have given first place and most consideration to this question of the preparation for the shot, because often it is the cause of all the trouble. There are, however, other points worth considering.

It is wise, for instance, to remember that you have the choice of a position on the teeing ground, at any rate, within the limits of that area. I suppose that most players simply select a place in the middle of the teeing ground on the principle that the centre of the course is always best. That, at any rate, seems to be the dominating idea when driving.

Often, however, there is a big bunker on one side or the other, perhaps 180 yards down the fairway. Now is the time for the player to consider whether he will not drive from one side or the other of the teeing ground in order to adopt his shot to the circumstances imposed by that bunker.

For instance, with the wind blowing from the left and the bunker situated on the right, he may resolve to drive from the right-hand side of the teeing ground so as to aim slightly into the wind's eye on the left and well clear of the bunker on the right.

After all, he is not compelled to start from the middle of the teeing ground. It is only habit that makes most people do so. He may find a more comfortable stance a little away from the centre, for, even on teeing grounds, stances sometimes vary.

To the average golfer, half the pleasure of the game is derived from satisfactory driving; so that it is worth while utilizing every resource to promote this dispensation. It is a good tip, for instance, to carry two drivers, one with a rather stiff shaft and the other fairly whippy.

The swing of the ordinary handicap player is apt to vary a little in pace from day to day, for he is not a golfing automation. When he is swinging rather more slowly, he will probly obtain greater satisfaction from the whippier shaft. If one fails him several times early in the round, he may find salvation by taking to the other.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE BANDIT OUTRAGE AT LINCHENG

When the Blue Express Was Held up and 35 Foreigners Were Taken Prisoner: A Story of Evasion and Delay: Penalties Demanded and What has Come of Them

On May 6, 1923, the Blue Express from Pukou to Tientsin was derailed by brigands at Lincheng on the southern border of Shantung and 35 foreigners, men, women and children, were carried off to the hills, where some of them remained in captivity till as late as June 12. They included several well known Shanghai residents, Mr. G. D. Musso, Mr. R. H. Rowlatt, Mr. J. B. Powell, Mr. Leon Friedman and others; two American army men Major Pinger and Major Allen; a young Brazilian couple Mr. and Mrs. Verea, of whom Mrs. Verea earned great honour by refusing to leave her husband for many days after all other ladies had been released and only at last, being persistently urged, consented to do so; and Miss Aldrich niece of an American millionaire.

One unhappy foreigner was killed, Mr. Joseph Rothman, a Rumanian by birth, naturalized British in South Africa, who had fought in the Boer War and was known as a merchant in Shanghai.

The nationalities represented among the captives were British, French, American, Brazilian, Italian and of course Chinese.

World-Wide Excitement.

The excitement produced by the outrage none will forget. A telegram from Washington reported that Mr. Davis, Acting Secretary for War, had stated, after consultation with the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, that "the War Department was ready to back up with armed forces any decision reached by the State Department or the council of foreign Ministers in Peking." The latter body informed the Chinese Government that it would be held personally responsible for the safety of the captives and the Chinese Government promised to punish all guilty officials in Shantung and ensure the prisoners' speedy release.

To this day it remains a mystery why, exactly, these promising beginnings came to naught. During the first few days after the outrage a number of prisoners were set free. But there remained always eight men in the bandits' hands, Mr. Freddy Elias, Mr. Leon Friedman, Mr. Emile Gensburger, Mr. A. D. Musso, Major Pinger, Mr. Powell, Mr. Rowlatt and Mr. Lee Solomon. Toward the end of May these captives were removed to an inaccessible peak named Paotzeku, extremely dangerous in the ascent, impossible to capture.

It says much for China's indifference to the bandit evil that on this lonely height, the foreigners found numbers of Chinese captives, including children, who had been there for many months and were in some cases melancholy mad. The filth and the general hardships of life on Paotzeku, combined with the uncertainty as to their fate, not improved by continued threats by the bandits to shoot them, made the existence of the prisoners most bitter and nerve-wracking, in spite of the letters and supplies of minor kinds which their friends in the outside world contrived to get through to them.

The Bandits' Demands.

The terms demanded by the bandits began as usual in the most extravagant strain—a vast ransom, pardon, enrolment in the army, the choice of their own magistrate in the district in which they were to serve. These eventually were reduced to pardon and enrolment in the army. A number of foreign advisers had flown to Tsaochuang—the nearest point to the bandits' headquarters—immediately after the outrage and it is by no means clear that they contributed to expedite matters. However, at the end it was the personal promise of Mr. Roy Anderson that the Government would keep its word which got the eight men of "the Old Guard" released. In the closing phases of negotiation mention must also be made of the fine work done by Mr. Wen Shih-tsen of Nanking. His services were truly invaluable.

Delay and Evasion.

Much however, was to happen before this dénoûment was reached, and the Diplomatic Body was much criticized for its apparently vacillating tactics. The Chinese Government too, seeing that no high official in Peking appeared likely to suffer any inconvenience, rapidly lost all interest in the affair and devoted itself once more to the enthralling pursuit of political intrigue. By May 16 we find it actually attempting to put the blame on the Diplomatic Body for the continued detention of the prisoners by alleging that they had tied the Government's hands by insisting that there must be no hostilities which would endanger the prisoners' lives. Whether the Diplomatic Body had done this is not clear. On May 20 they did request that the cordon of troops drawn about the brigands' stronghold should cease firing. But it is fair to remember that some days earlier they had warned the Government that for every day's delay in releasing the prisoners the penalties ultimately exacted would grow progressively heavier. The weak part of the foreign Powers' attitude would seem to be that they did not at this time make any particular Chinese official a scapegoat for the offence. A general indictment of the Government worried nobody. It might change any day, as in point of fact it did on June 6 when President Li Yuan-hung resigned, at the compulsion of the Tsao Jui (brother of Tsao Kun) clique and fled from Peking.

A Significant Interlude

Nothing could better illustrate the state of China's affairs and the complete indifference of her officials to internal disorder and external displeasure than that such an intrigue as that leading to the expulsion of Li Yuan-hung could have been pursued at such a moment, especially when we remember that the destined President. Tsao Kun, was, as High Commissioner of Chihli, Shantung and Honan, primarily responsible for the Lincheng outrage.

On June public feeling in Shanghai had reached such a pitch that the most largely attended meeting ever recorded was held in the Town Hall to express its horror at the outrage and at the continued detention of the captives with a view to strengthening the hands of the Diplomatic Body in whatever measures they might think fit to take with a view to redressing the wrong.

Early in June the Diplomatic Body sent a military commission to report on the general situation at Paotzeku and the Government's military dispositions. It must regretfully be added that nothing has since occurred to disprove the general impression that the said military commission was nothing more than what is vulgarly known as "eye-wash." By June 6 negotiations with the bandits had proceeded so far that enrolment of them in the army had actually begun and on June 12 the last eight captives were released.

The Note of August 10.

Then everybody waited to see what the Diplomatic Body would do. They waited until August 10 when a Note was presented to the Waichiaopu on behalf of the whole Diplomatic Body—it is worthy of note that the Powers made common cause in this matter though but five of them were affected—of which the following were the main demands:

(a) Compensation for loss of baggage and objects which were either stolen or lost at the time of the attack on the train and for individual medical attention rendered to the prisoners during the period of their detention;

(b) Compensation for the loss of life and of liberty and for sufferings and indignities undergone by all the foreign travellers while in the hands of the brigands; Mex. $20,000 for the foreign traveller who was killed on May 6 at the time of the attack on the train by the brigands; Mex. $500 Mex. per prisoner per day for the first three days of detention, May 6, 7 and 8; Mex. $100 per prisoner and per day during the week commencing May 9; Mex. $150 per prisoner and per day during the week commencing May 16; Mex. $200 per prisoner and per day during the week commencing May 23; Mex. $250 per prisoner and per day during the week commencing May 30; Mex. $300 per prisoner and per day during the week commencing June 5;

(c) Compensation to cover reimbursement of the amounts expended in supplying relief to the prisoners.

Responsibility of Officials.

The Note goes on to comment strongly on the prevalence of brigandage and the duty of officials to suppress it, and it adds:—

Brigandage having become a grave menace to the lives, property and rights of foreigners in China, the Diplomatic Body will keep itself accurately informed with regard to this state of unrest and for that purpose it has decided on the despatch, in case of need, of its own representatives into the provinces infested by the brigands in order to examine and report upon the local situation. When it appears to the Diplomatic Body that a Military Governor or officer commanding troops, or that a provincial or local official, has failed or is failing in his duty of providing protection for foreigners in conformity with the clauses of the Protocol of 1901 above mentioned, the Diplomatic Body will demand the immediate imposition on the offender of the penalties prescribed therein without prejudice to such additional punishments, fines, etc., as the circumstances may call for.

As regards the general insecurity of railways we read:—

The Diplomatic Body considers that reforms are necessary and that it is its duty to aid the Chinese Government to carry these out, by collaborating with them in the task.

The reforms which the Diplomatic Body has in view would consist in the reorganization of the forces of the Special Chinese police, who would be placed under the supervision of foreign officers and entrusted with the protection of the Chinese railways.

The Diplomatic Body reserves the right, after a more elaborate study of the question, of presenting as soon as possible to the Chinese Government the scheme which it will have adopted.

Officials to Be Punished.

The note then mentions certain officials, who must be punished, Tien Chung-yu, Military Governor of Shantung, Ho Feng-yu, Defence Commissioner in Southern Shantung, Chao Te-chao, who commanded the guard on the Blue Express when she was attacked.

The Note winds up with some admirably worded paragraphs on treaty rights, misgovernment and the Chinese officials' general neglect of their duties; and it concludes:—

If the Government of China continues to, authorize or to tolerate these abuses, if they do not set themselves resolutely to repress the brigandage which threatens the rights and interests of foreigners in China, the Diplomatic Body will be obliged to consider what further steps should be taken to protect the lives, the property, the rights and interests of foreigners in a country which, although it enjoys the rights and privileges accorded to members of the great family of nations, has shown itself incapable of fulfilling even the most fundamental of the duties which are inseparably connected with the rights and privileges of membership.

The Diplomatic Body desires the Chinese Government to understand its intention to obtain in reparation for the Lincheng incident the indemnities, guarantees and sanctions enumerated above.

Nirvana.

Not till September 24 did Dr. Wellington Koo trouble himself to reply—then with an answer of smooth evasion and hardly veiled insolence. To this the Diplomatic Body answered by reiterating its former Note. On October 18 Tien Chung-yu was allowed to resign and immediately promoted.

From that day to this nothing more has been heard of the Lincheng Note—its compensations, sanctions and railway reforms, nothing, that is, which supplies any hope that any of its terms will ever be realized.

RESIDENTS in the Central District will lately have noticed a monster police dog straining at the leash in his master's hand, while out for an evening airing. "Tobi," the dog's name, has quite a history. His mother is a pure-bred police dog, the property of a German ex-prisoner in Siberia, which was taken into the forests in the vicinity of Chita and tied to a tree, left alone and finally bred with a full-blooded Siberian wolf. The offspring naturally exhibit a varied group of characterics, and "Tobi" though but nine months old, has attained to nearly the size of his father, standing from the ground to the tips of the ears, more than 36 in. He is a one-man dog and no one but his master, Mr. P. Viles, may go near him with impunity. Even his best friend came into the room several days ago and had that portion of the trousers, usually burlesqued in the "movies," removed by "Tobi's" teeth. Mr. Viles, who is proceeding to Eugene (Ore.), viâ San Francisco, on the Pacific Mail str. President Cleveland on Saturday, proposes to enter his police-wolf in the large dog shows of America. The fact that since his arrival from Harbin a week ago, he has been offered no less than $500 for his pet, leads one to believe that "Tobi" may take away a few blue ribbons from other competitors in the exhibitions.

AN AMERICAN SKETCH OF SUN YAT-SEN

Intemperate Denunciation of the British

The following article by Thomas Steep in the "New York Tribune" was reprinted by the "Canton Gazette" whence we take it.

It is probable that the Cantonese laundrymen in this country, being unfamiliar with American history, never refer to Dr. Sun Yat-sen as the George Washington of China or the "father of his country." Yet to them he is the father of the Chinese Republic. He is the idol of the Cantonese, one of the few idols other than bronze China ever produced. He was the symbol, the voice, the leader, of southern China's hostility toward the Manchu emperors, China's conquerors from the north, and when the Manchus were overthrown he was the first President. The Cantonese abroad, laundrymen and others, contributed to his success by sharing their earnings, and they still support his government at Canton in the hope that it ultimately will embrace all China. No Chinese laundryman, far from his native land, would begrudge a week's profits to see Dr. Sun in person.

That was my reflection, when I went to visit Dr. Sun, who had been driven out of Canton by a local revolution and who had taken refuge in Shanghai's French settlement. We sped in a motor car through the city's noisy streets at dusk, when the lanterns in the Chinese quarter were beginning to blink and the Willow Pagoda and its crooked little bridge were fading into the ghostly Oriental darkness.

Dr. Sun's secretary escorted us. He spoke English perfectly—an accomplishment it was well not to compliment him upon, because, although he was Chinese, he did not, I was told, speak his native tongue. When later I found English books on Dr. Sun's library shelves I likewise refrained from commenting. It seems that reformers do not feel particularly flattered by mention of their long sojourns away from the country which they seek to reform.

A Physical Surprise

Dr. Sun, darkly tanned, slightly gray, medium in stature, obese in build, greeted us in his library, a rear room on the second floor overlooking a garden. My first impression was that he was not as he should have been. We expect men of action to be big, as if commensurate with their deeds, and we are surprised to find them like other men. It recalls the lines:

> How very weak the very wise,
> How very small the very great are!

Dr. Sun's slow movement and quiet manner seemed to belie his record of strange adventures and hairbreadth escapes. As I looked at him there flitted through my mind a rapid review of his remarkable career. He more than any other one man caused the downfall of the Manchus after their reign of two and a half centuries. He lived with a price on his head. He was kidnapped in London and imprisoned in the Chinese Legation. He escaped, let out of an upper story window by sympathizers. He disguised himself, while in his own country promoting the revolution, as coolie, ricsha runner, sailor and beggar, appearing sometimes on the Chinese streets in rags, but with his pockets filled with state secrets. He was exiled repeatedly, but he was recalled at last to become China's first President—the President of the first republic in Asia. Betrayed by Yuan Shih-kai, who wished to restore the monarchy, he re-established the republic at Canton. He is beloved by more of his countrymen than any other man.

Attack on Great Britain

As conversation began I observed that Dr. Sun did not say much. He was on his guard, obviously as one accustomed to expect assassination. He desired to see China united, a constitution enforced, an honest parliament assembled, representative government established, schools everywhere opened, sanitation applied, China uplifted to the rank of a progressive nation. Though he talked, he was reticent—until some one referred to the British. Then he bristled.

He regarded the British as China's worst enemies. He blamed the British for the revolt at Canton that had caused him to seek refuge on a gunboat in the Pearl River and subsequently to flee to Shanghai. His regret was that he had to travel to Shanghai on a British ship. He considered that the British regarded China merely as a trading ground and that they desired to keep it in disorder so that they might buy its produce cheaply. He did not see how America, a friend of China, could align itself with the British on Chinese questions. My reminder that America in aligning itself with Britain had induced all the powers to respect China's integrity did not much impress him.

Confucius's Strength

We drifted to Confucianism and Chinese culture, and there I found Dr. Sun not so Westernized as I expected. He had faith in China's philosophy, which, as near as I could discern, was a conviction that China calmly, unhurriedly, in spite of the pessimism of foreigners, would achieve its destiny and that, because of the slowness of its growth, it would endure after other nations had become extinct.

We talked about Wu Ting-fang and Li Hung-chang and their relative popularity in America; about chopsticks, silks and civilization; about the short lives of 'rickscha runners; about books, poverty and the standard of living.

As I said, Dr. Sun did not reveal much. Great men seldom do. Suppose one met Napoleon—What would he talk about? The weather, likely.

WOMEN AND HORSES

While I was saddling her she tried to bite me
A dozen times and now I'm hardly mounted
And feeling for the stirrup she wants to fight me.
Look there! with rapid sideway steps uncounted
She tried to brush me off against that wall
And now she shies and plunges, bucks and rears.
She feels her oats, my pony, that is all,
There's nothing, not even me, she hates or fears.
We missed that lorry by a half an inch—
She hopes to get her head across the stubble:
Bless you, you'd think she felt the girth-straps pinch:
That's not the trouble, though we shall have trouble.
But when we're on the turf I'll let her go.
And she'll be happy then and I shall too.
No wonder in her stable she found it slow
But if I'd left her there, I ask you who
Would have complained the more? She wants to run
And doesn't want it, since I want her to;
And playing up is what she thinks is fun
United on turf there's something better to do.
Come up, my darling, damn you! Steady now,
Or else we shan't get anywhere to-day:
We'll go with delicate steps around the plough
And then we're on the grass, and then away!

HENRY F. DERRICK

—in the "Outlook."

AN amazing story of a human being "with four eyes" has been swallowed by a Japanese newspaper. One of them, quoted by the "Advertiser" says: With a package containing Y.2,000 tied on her back a girl three years old with "four eyes, two being in the back of her head," was deserted in Inna-gun, Miei prefecture recently. The village had been celebrating a festival, and it is believed that the girl came from the country. During the festival a woman well dressed in a silk kimono appeared near the village shrine leading her little girl. She requested an elderly woman to watch the child while she retired to wash her hands. The elderly woman waited with the child for hours, but the mother did not return. Lifting off the little girl's hat, the guardian discovered two eyes in the back of the child's head and the bundle of money, left evidently to be used for the care of the chlid. The little girl was immediately turned over to the police.

CHINA: AN INTERPRETATION

By Ku Hung-ming in The "North China Standard."

A French gentleman who two years ago came on a visit to China said that, having read my books, he became so interested in them that he came to China specially to see me. Just before leaving Peking, he asked me if I could tell him in one word what the people of Europe could learn from the Chinese. I answered, "Yes: and that word was soberness, la sobriété." Now if there is anything which has confirmed me in my opinion that what the people of Europe can learn from the Chinese is soberness, it is a book on China which I have lately been reading, written by a French gentleman, Emile Pierrejean and translated into English by Miss Lawrence Binyon. This book gives a most sympathetic interpretation of China and her civilization. What is more, the book is most brilliantly written, brilliant not only in language and style, but in ideas. But then, because it is so brilliant, it has failed to give a true and correct interpretation. There is so much colour and brilliancy flashing through the whole book, that one sees no picture at all, but only colours. Instead of a sober interpretation of facts, the author gives us brilliant generalizations, some of which are approximately correct and some—to speak quite frankly—utter nonsense. In fine, for want of this quality of soberness, this most sympathetic and brilliant interpretation will not, I am afraid, help the people of Europe to a better understanding of China and her civilization.

China's Mystery

The book is divided into four parts. The first part is entitled, "China seen from without." The author says, "There is no better introduction to the mystery of a country than direct contact with the land and its inhabitants." This is quite true, generally: you take the trouble to see the things as they are. But now what picture does the author give of China—the land and its inhabitants as he saw them. To tell the truth, he gives no picture at all—he merely notes down the thoughts, ideas and feelings which the sight of the things he sees give rise in his mind. In other words, the author sees the things not with his eyes, but with his mind's eye.

Travelling from Haiphong to Hongkong, this is the picture which the author gives of his first contact with the Chinese. He says:

> Everything on my trip was an introduction to China, and above all to China's mystery. I underwent for the first time direct contact with the Chinese. It was not without disgust. On the deck, among the pens alive with two thousand pigs huddled a mass of flabby yellow human beings squatting over their unclean foods or petrified into attitudes of stupor by the sickening fumes of opium. The obscene display of those nerveless bodies, swarming like clusters of yellow caterpillars, sickened me. And yet I could not take my eyes off them. I was fascinated by the weird gestures of those delicate hands, by the shrill sing-song of those strange voices. I never tired of scrutizing those oily masks which grew wan beneath the sultry glare.
> In another place the author speaks of the mystery which appears in the impenetrable black enamel of the eyes of the Chinese and in their features impassive as a death-mask.

Humanity of the Chinese.

Thus to this French gentleman the Chinaman is an awful, mysterious being. But is there really anything mysterious about the Chinaman? Professor Lowes Dickinson coming from India to China says, "When I landed in China and first saw the Chinaman I was aware of a feeling as though an oppressive cloud had lifted. Iron was sublime. But it was terrible. China on the other hand, was human. At the first sight of these ugly, cheery, vigorous people I loved them. Their gaiety, as of children, their friendliness, their profound humanity, struck me from the first and remained with me to the last."

The right word to describe Chinese and their civilization is the word which Professor Dickinson here uses—human. Because the Chinese is human, there is no mystery about or in him. The mystery which the European, like the French gentleman here, fancies he sees in the Chinese is really not in the Chinese, but in the brain of the European—the European with the mentality of Mediæval Europe still in him. The reason I may here point out, why the Americans get on best with the Chinese, is because the Americans are a people who have entirely got rid of the mentality of Mediæval Europe. Indeed as Professor Dickinson says, "The Chinese is already what the democrats in France and America hope the Western man may become." In fact, in order to understand the Chinese and their civilization, the first thing one must keep in mind is that the Chinaman is a very human, human being in fact, he is a plain matter-of-fact modern man without any Mediæval mystery in him.

Havelaque's Brilliant "Nonsense"

But before I finish with this first part of the book, let me show from one passage the want of soberness in this book. Speaking of the Flower boats in Canton—which are the equivalent of the sing-song girl houses in Shanghai and other parts of China, the author says: "Under its Chinese disguise I recognized Immoral Lust—Lust which, there as everwhere, turns woman into a creature fashioned for the sole satisfaction of man's desire, etc., etc. Describing the inmates of these flower boats, he says: "Apparitions, incarnations of the cruel dreams of jaded voluptuaries, of love-ghouls—such were the strange hieratic puppets with blood red mouths. They sat there like goddesses enthroned, against the scarlet lace work of the partitions in the rosy light, veiled in purple and azure and emerald and gold under the scrolls of gold, the dragons of gold and the fantastic creatures that writhed in gold. Their splendours and the warm perfumed air seemed to quiver with desire around them: it was no illusion. The cables of the boat strained and shivered in the rushing current: the glittering jewels trembled in the glossy blackness of their hair, bright with white odorous flowers, as did the cut-glass lustres descending from the ceiling: all things responded to the throbbing of the wave which in the unfathomable night flowed on endlessly."

Western Club and Sing-song Girls

All this is certainly very brilliant—but then I must say, it is all brilliant nonsense. In the first place, the flower boats and sing-song girls houses in China are not houses of prostitution. The sing-song girl's house in China is the club of the Chinese. As the Englishman goes to his club to meet his friends for relaxation and recreation, so the Chinaman goes to the sing-song girl's house also to meet his friends for recreation and relaxation. The Englishman in his Club in order to make himself jolly with his friends orders a drink and it sometimes happens he gets drunk. But then one would not say that the Englishman goes to the Club to get drunk. In the same way, the Chinese in the sing-song girl's house in order to make himself jolly with his friends goes pretty young girls to sing and entertain them, and it sometimes happens he gets into intimate relations with one of these girls. But it is a mistake to say that the Chinese goes to the sing-sing girl's house to satisfy his lust, as it would be a mistake to say that the Englishman goes to his Club to get drunk.

The title of the second part of the book is—"Ancient China: its History, Religions, Institutions and Art."—Here also the author gives many of his brilliant generalizations. But then in order to generalize, one must first know and have a full grasp of the facts of the matter upon which one generalizes. But how much does the author know of the history and institutions of China. It is true, he seems to have read all the best European books on these subjects. But even all the best European books up to the present have furnished very superficial information on the history and institutions of China. There is at present not a single history of China written by a scholar who has access to the original sources. Of Chinese literature, the only European scholar who has done original work in that line—is my old friend, the veteran Sinologue, Dr. Herbert Giles. His "Gems of Chinese Literature" is the only translation of real Chinese literature, outside the Confucian books.

Thus for want of an adequate knowledge of the facts, the brilliant generalizations given in this book are, it seems to me, for the most part misleading and unreliable.

Are Chinese Patriotic?

In order to show how unreliable the brilliant generalizations in this book are, let me here give just one specimen. The author says:

> The most important characteristic of China is her lack of unity. China possesses no unity whatever, whether geographical, ethical, historical, political or social! It has never been a welded state or constituted a nation .....
> Between the various links which stretch from the family to the Empire, the only relation is one of direct dependence, and the band of certain common duty to the supreme chief. When he is strong he can direct these and insist on their fulfilment; as soon as the supreme power weakens, each community resumes its independence and ceases to collaborate for the good of all; the consciousness of interdependence and the will to co-operate, in short, patriotism and national feeling do not exist!

Now in order to prove that the above generalization is altogether untrue, I will just give one fact in the recent history of China. When the supreme power in China was very weak, an orphan child in the arms of his widow mother was on the throne of China. But when the Empress dowager appealed to the governing class, the literati to collaborate for the common good, these long-gowned literati with the great Marquis Tseng Kao-fan at the head, nobly responded to the call and with burning hearts and grief-choked voices crying, "Imoriamur pro Rege, Regina!" put down the rebellion and finally restored the country to comparative order and prosperity.

"Moreover," the author goes on to say, "nothing is more imperfect than the military and financial systems; in their passage from one civil servant to the next above, all equally badly paid, half independent, the majority of whom have had to purchase their posts and whose only ambition is to amass wealth, the taxes melt away; and the small sums that finally reach Peking are squandered by eunuchs and favourites!"

The Treaty Port Mind

When the author speaks like this, he is really speaking like the muddle-headed Treaty port gentleman in China. Every word of the above is ridiculous nonsense. These libellous statements are not true even when applied to the state of things during the last days of the Ta-ching dynasty when the mandarins were certainly very much demoralized,—but when this ridiculous generalization is applied to the whole history of China,—it is—to use a French word,—bête! For if the financial system is so idiotic and the public service so corrupt, how is it, I want to ask, that China, coming out of a formidable rebellion which devastated 15 out of the 16 provinces, in fact as terrible as the late war in Europe, was left unencumbered with one single cent of public debt?

Indeed, when I read passages like these in this brilliant book, I am almost inclined to think that this French author is really not a serious scholar, who writes to interpret China and her civilization, but only a literateur who writes for effect merely to give lively amusement, to the sensation-loving public.

In this second part of that book, the author gives an account of the Religion and Art of China. His brilliant generalizations on these two subjects are the best part of the book. These generalizations are not quite the truth,—but are approximately correct. Let me here give one specimen.

Speaking of the cult of the Family, the author says:

> This cult then is the base of all Chinese civilization. The day on which its foundations are shaken, the entire fabric of this civilization will totter, just as the civilization of antiquity in Europe crumbled away when its beliefs decayed. The downfall of this cult will drag down in its ruins all the institutions which it has created. And since, as we have seen, everything in China is bound up together, the smallest modification in her way of life, in her social structure, even in her habits, is a wound inflicted on its integrity. The Chinese feel this: and it is this feeling which explains their passionate conservatism. With them it takes the place of patriotism; it is its Chinese form, since what they defend when they repudiate all changes as inimical to their country is the very essence of China, the soul of her civilization. This conservatism with its various manifestations, is thus less blind than one might think, and more justifiable. For this civilization has proved itself. It has ensured to myriads of men their earthly and their spiritual food. It has been a school of virtue and of moral beauty, of kindness, gentleness and wisdom. It has given to China an amount of happiness and to her life a stability and a harmony which no other civilization has surpassed nor even equalled. A purely human religion, without metaphysics, without mysticism, without a church, without priests, without any God other than humanity, without a Heaven or a Hell, finding on this earth and within this life, its principle, its ends, its sanctions and its rewards,—unquestionably it is of all the solutions which man has given to the problems of existence, not indeed the highest, but the one more closely adapted to his condition, the one which by its soundness, proved by its immense duration, has procured the greatest sum of blessedness.

The account which the author gives of Confucius and his teaching is also very sober and to the point. Then the analysis which he gives of Lao-Tze and Taoism—the speculative, the idealistic side of Chinese civilization although not very deep, yet is very clear and near the truth. The comparison, however, which he makes between the most brilliant exponent of Taoism, the philosopher Chuang Tzu with the English poet Wordsworth, it seems to me, is not a very happy one. Wordsworth is a sober, constructive, conservative idealist whereas Chuang Tzu is a brilliant, high soaring iconoclastic idealist. The one European philosopher to be compared with Chuang Tzu is Carlyle, the fanatic destroyer of cant and humbug.

Taoist Idealism.

Emerson, speaking of Carlyle and his philosophy says, "In the decomposition and asphyxia that followed all this materialism, Carlyle was driven by his disgust at the pettiness and cant, into the preaching of Fate. In comparison with all this rottenness, any check, any cleansing, though by fire, seemed desirable and beautiful. The necessities of mental structure force all minds into a few categories, and where impatience of the tricks of men makes Nemesis amiable and builds altars to the negative Deity, the inevitable recoil is to heroism or the gallantry of the private heart which decks its immolations with glory, in the unequal combat of will against fate." What Emerson here says of Carlyle and his teaching, is applicable every word of it to the Chinese Chuang Tzu and his teaching.

What the author says of Buddhism, the Religion of Nature, as he calls it, is, it seems, not at all illuminating. Not Buddhism, but Tao-ism is the Religion of Nature. The Sung philosopher Chu Hsi says, Taoism teaches men to nourish their energy, the Life-force in man 道家養氣 While Buddhism teaches men to nourish their heart—their Soul 釋家養心 In fact, Buddhism, from what little I have studied of it,—is, it seems to me, the negative ending of the Taoist idealism—in fact, a Religion of despair. Taoism says—"Fight Fate," but Buddhism, "Don't fight, but resign yourself to Fate and find the solution of existence in Nirvana, Annihilation."

Last of all in the second part of the book, the author gives an account of art in China. As I know nothing of art, I will say nothing on this part of the book.

Foreigners in China

The third part of the book deals with the exterior relations of China—The author says, "The story is a long and lamentable one, fraught with shame for Europe, a monotonous tale of [illegible] aggression on our part [illegible] total mutual incomprenension on both sides." Here, I must in all fairness say, the author is too severe and not quite just to the nations of Europe. For it was not the foreign governments or even the individual foreigners in China who were responsible for the [illegible] which her foreign intercourse brought upon China. This [illegible] this savage aggression, was [illegible] what Professor Lowes Dickinson has called the organized anarchism of Europe. Indeed in [illegible] justice he said that the foreign governments even tried if not to prevent, at least to lessen as much as possible, the harm [illegible] organized anarchism of Europe was doing to China. What is more, in many instances, it was the arrogant attitude of the Chinese themselves which hindered the foreign governments in their effort to be just and fair to China. In fact, as I have already said elsewhere, our past war with the foreign nations before the Boxer outbreak were caused as much by the arrogance of our mandarins as by the aggressiveness of the foreign Powers.

Insufferable Mandarins

Take for instance, the opium war. For a long time opium had been imported into China without the least objection on the part of the Chinese. But by a sudden fit of moral priggishness, the Peking Government ordered the opium to be stopped at once, which of course, meant ruin to the British merchants. The British representive tried to effect a compromise, making all possible concessions. But the Imperial Commissioner Lin was inexorable and burnt the opium. There was no other alternative for the British Government but war. It was the same way with all our other wars to the time of the Boxer outbreak. But even in the Boxer war, the whole catastrophe was due,—as the Empress dowager in her decree said—to mistakes on both sides.

In fine, the only act of openly shameless brutal aggression on the part of foreign nations towards China was the seizure of Tsingtao by Germany. But even for this brutal act of aggression, a German friend of mine gave a good excuse. He said, using the words of a German proverb: when the Devil is hungry, he will even devour flies wenn der Teufel hungrig ist, frisst er Fliegen."

Thus the hope for the solution of the Chinese problem lies in the fact that this organized anarchism of Europe has now been broken by the late war. But unfortunately China too has already been wrecked by this organized anarchism of Europe. If we had men now in China to put our house in order, China would not only easily save herself, but also even co-operate with Europe to bring peace and civilization into the world.

In the last part of the book, the author tries to give an account of the Revolution and his raids on the future of what he calls—The New China. But here basing his conclusion on imperfect knowledge and distorted facts, the author has completely failed to understand the meaning and the outcome of the Revolution and in fact sees and gives no hope for China.

Last of all summing up his conclusions, on the present state of civilization in China and in Europe, the author says, "To Asia, our present Western civilization appears materialistic, hideous, restless and inhuman. So be it. But it is alive: while the beauty of Asia's noblest civilization breathes of death." There is some truth in this; but it is not the whole truth. A drunken madman who goes about smashing the furniture in his house and knocking down every man he meets, may think he has more Life-force in him than the old man who has to sit still and cannot move, from having his feet numbed by sticking too long over his desk pouring over old learned books. It may be a matter of taste, but for myself, I think I would rather be the old man with the numbed feet than the drunken madman.

But last of all, to speak seriously, what is the intrinsic value of the Chinese civilization to Europe and the world? Or, as this brilliant French gentleman puts it, when this phantom from another age,—i.e., China and her civilization, comes into our life, what will she bring us in her closed hands?" My answer is, she has in her hands the civilization which the people of Europe want. Professor Lowes Dickinson says, "The Chinese man is already what the democrats in Europe hope the western man may be." In the same way, I say, the Chinese Civilization is already what the Liberals in Europe want the modern, western civilization to be.

Chinese Philistinism.

The present Chinese civilization now has one very grave defect which the modern Western civilization when it is fully developed, will not have—and this defect in the present Chinese civilization is that it is too moral. As a result, the average Chinese of the governing class now, like Marshal Wu Pei-fu, is a hopeless creature because he is too much of a moral prig, in fact,—a Philistine. Now it would take me too long to explain here how this moral priggishness, this Philistinism has come into the Chinese civilization and entirely vulgarised and spoilt not only its beauty, but also its usefulness. I will only say here that the teaching of Confucius, the spirit of the Chinese civilization was petrified by the Puritanism of the philosophers of the Sung dynasty and since then the real Chinese civilization has become stagnant, and incapable of expansion and progress. Now contact with the Western civilization will, I believe, enable us Chinese to get rid of this moral priggishness, this Philistinism, in our civilization. In fine, the contact between the two Eastern and Western civilizations will in the end be beneficial to both.

CHINA'S YOUTH AND HER FUTURE

How the Country's Hope Hangs on the Young Men and Girls Now in Colleges

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Professor Roxby of Liverpool said during his visit to China two years ago that there was no class of people in history which had laid on it such a task as this generation of young Chinese students is called upon to undertake. This was the considered judgment of a man with sufficient background of history and knowledge of China to make his opinion worthy of consideration. An unsympathetic observer, on the other hand, might give the snap judgment often heard in dinner table conversation.—"Students? I have no patience with them. A lot of unbalanced undisciplined youngsters who keep interfering with matters that do not concern them."

That question of what does concern them is mightily exercising the mind and minds of the present generation of students in China. They belong to the Literati, that small minority who alone among all China's masses have the key to knowledge. Improvements on such lines as hygiene, sanitation, child welfare, must be taken by word of mouth to those who cannot read, and unless the students concern themselves with teaching these things there is no possibility of improvement.

Real Problems Indeed.

Indeed, nearly all China's present-day problems are of immediate importance to the student. For instance, the planting of opium: his father may be forced by a tyrannical Tuchun to plant opium. Or the growth of militarism: the family servants may be seized on the streets and carried off for military service. Or the conflict of the old social order with the new: he may be forced by his family into marriage with an illiterate unknown girl. Or political confusion: the government may be bartering away the country for which he has as great a love as any young hothead of the West has for his. These problems are not theoretical to the student, and to live amongst such problems and take no interest and feel no responsibility would argue a degree of stupidity or selfishness which fortunately does not obtain among the majority of Chinese students, either men or women.

Two years ago the World Student Christian Federation met in Peking. That great assembly of young and ardent minds from all over the world made a strong impression upon the student consciousness in this country where the traditional respect accorded to students is calculated to favour a high degree of self-assurance. There has been since that time a closer unity among Christian students in China, a development of responsibility and initiative, and a consciousness of a closer international relationship through this World Federation.

Girls Keenly Interested.

The Young Women's Christian Association, with its 6,000 members banded together in near a hundred schools and colleges in China, is a lively factor in the life of the women students here. One of the most potent features of its programme is the conference which it holds in several sections of the country, at which students come together to consider their relation to the world in which they live. These conferences are sometimes for government school students, sometimes for mission school students, sometimes for both together. Last year there was even one that combined students, home women, and factory workers! In 1923 there were some 1,400 girls who met in 16 conferences, held in cities ranging from Chêngtu to Soochow, from Mukden to Canton. From June to September this year there will be six students' conferences. The topics discussed cover a variety of subjects: the place of religion in life, how Christianity can be worked out for the Chinese to-day; the need for Popular Education; the Women's Movement; what is Democracy; public hygiene; the value of recreation; the modern home—these are but a few of the subjects that provoked hot discussion. Foreign secretaries are little in evidence at these conferences; leadership is coming to be almost entirely Chinese. The students themselves carry a heavy share in the administrative work—they decide on the programme, make the rules for student government during conference days, raise the money for the delegates' expenses and sometimes raise extra money to help toward the expenses of a girl from a distant school. This year the students of the lower Yangtze section have invited a delegate from Japan, and Miss Yuki Kimura, student secretary of the Y.W.C.A. of Kioto, is coming in June to be a guest at the Kiangnan Conference in Hangchow.

There is a promising spirit of unselfishness and an excellent esprit de corps among them as they work at these conferences. Last year at the close of one particularly successful conference, one student was overheard to say, "If the Government could only learn co-operation like this, we wouldn't have so much trouble in China."

A better understanding of what Christianity is and a clearer comprehension of how it can be applied to China's problems to-day—these probably sum up the value of the student conference to those who attend. Most of them are from High Schools and at an age when at home we would expect them to be interested only in their immediate school life, but in China they have to be as old the demands made upon them. They must carry a load which is "greater than that which has been laid on any single class in history."

Coming Meeting in London.

The executive committee of the World Student Christian Federation will meet in August, of this year, at High Leigh, near London. Mr. T. Z. Koo, who is the first Oriental secretary to be appointed on the W. S. C. F. staff, will go to attend that meeting and there is a possibility that China may be represented also by a Y.W.C.A. secretary. There has been a proposal from that committee that in February 1925 a conference of students from all the countries bordering on the Pacific should be held at Honolulu. This would include China, Japan, Philippines, India, Russia, Australia, New Zealand, the United States, Canada, and the western countries of South America.

At the Assembly of U. S. students, now being held in New York in connexion with the National Convention of Y.W.C.A., Miss Ting Shu-ching, formerly national secretary of the Y.W.C.A. in China, represents Chinese students.

DR. W. W. Yen, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, has telegraphed to the provinces announcing that he has accepted his appointment as Chairman of the Red Cross Society of China. Admiral Tsai Ting-kan (chairman of the Tariff Revision Commission) and Mr. Yang Tcheng (former Commissioner of Foreign Affairs in Shanghai), the re-elected Vice-Chairman, have agreed to continue in office.

HERMIONE GOES TO THE RACES

BY ELIZABETH PEPYS.

O yes, my dear, of course I went to the Races. Would I let a little thing like Junior or the weather stop me? I'm often afraid Betty that, long as you've known me, you underestimate my stability of purpose. Junior's quite too young to appreciate Races, though his father may take him on Saturday perhaps, and I'm sure he wouldn't want me to stay home with him when my mind would be on the race course. We are letting him grow up following out all his own impulses you know, and although I was rather sorry to find that he had spent Monday afternoon pulling up the tulips, I suppose that only means he has an eye for colour.

But as I was saying my dear, when you interrupted me, of course I wouldn't stay home for the rain, especially when I'd had the cunningest little outfit made for bad weather that you'd ever hope to see. Certainly, I had some made for pleasant days, too, it doesn't do to put all your money on one horse, even if he is the universal favourite, now does it? But most of the girls only ordered costumes for fair weather, and nobody could blame them for staying home. But I was mad about my little patent leather cloche and my suit strapped with leather and my new strapped walking shoes of tan suede alligator and brown kid. I just know the alligator enjoyed the dampness.

Those Dear Jockeys.

Did you ever think, dear, of the noble self-sacrifice those dear jockeys display? I always try to put myself in the other man's place, and as I saw Mr. Hill riding out in that perfectly darling blue costume with the little touches of white in the collar and sleeves that are all the rage in all the nattiest frocks this year, I couldn't help thinking to myself that I should hate to have to go out and ruin a ducky little suit like that, with the rain and mud and everything. But men do rise above considerations of that sort wonderfully, don't they? I can't quite understand how they do it, but I admire them for it. I backed Roman Merlin just for that and everybody laughed at me when I lost, but I don't care, one has to make some sacrifices for principle.

And speaking of principle, I don't see why some of the combinations of colour are allowed in the jockeys' turnouts—why they fairly hurt your eyes, and none of them seem to have heard of the new soft shades. My artist soul feels these things very deeply, and I simply can't bear to back a horse if I don't sympathize with his rider's colours.

The Beauties of Art

Now you needn't look so superior, Betty. Yes, you were too, for I'll tell you that my feeling for colour won me $71.50, or $66.50 if you will insist on deducting what I paid for the ticket. I simply loved the turquoise blouse Mr. Knoll was wearing when he took Miss Coutts' pony Skyros around, and so I backed him to win. Why didn't I take First Chance instead? Well Skyros has a more romantic sound, don't you think? Anyway, in spite of Knoll's being thrown, he came in ahead, didn't he. It pays to have an artist's soul and to know what colours your ponies and your riders will vibrate to?

What does one mean by vibrating to colours? Why that's one of the important things about New Thought, or is it The Home of the Soul? Anyway, if you vibrate you do, and you're in tune with the Infinite; and if you don't then you are sure to be unlucky, and if you can't understand that, I don't know what I could do to make it plainer to you. Anyway, I certainly do vibrate to rose pink and any time I see an Abbeyfield or a Letchfield, or Engle or any other kind of field coming down the course I positively palpitate!

What's Expense to the Soul?

My husband says my zeal for colour symphonies is pretty expensive and that just because that Holland they miscall "bright" blue is becoming to Mr. Hill's complexion is no reason why I should expect him to win every time he wears it. Sometimes I wonder how it happened that so many of the Great Masters were men. They certainly don't seem to have a feeling for art these days, anyway. Of course I don't always vibrate in tune with the Pari-Mutuel, but there are better things in life, aren't there?

Now Rycecroft's rider looked so perfectly wonderful in his violet and white that the minute I saw Mr. Brand I pushed my way back and took a place on it, just in case "The Bittern" didn't win, you know. I was sure I was doing the right thing because everybody else was, too. I hate to buy a ticket when at an empty counter, don't you?

But wouldn't you think when you were picking out colours you could find something better than crimson and violet—specially if you were going to be loyal enough to wear it for your own tie? My husband says McKenzie doesn't mind the combination at all; but I say he wins in spite of it. Don't you suppose that lots of Dallas's success is because that Royal blue is so becoming to him?

Well, goodbye dear, don't you wish that there were women riders? I have some of the sweetest ideas for costumes.

IMPRESSIONS IN CHINA

Lacquered Chestnuts

BY GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY.

The ancient Chinese scholar rolls lacquered chestnuts in the palms of his hands to keep his fingers nimble perfectly to form the ideographs of his language. The world quarrels onward; battles rage: he wiggles his fingers and writes his characters. His spectacles are amber-coloured crystals through which no man may see things as they are. His world is the small compass of a room in which he sleeps and writes his characters. He knows Confucius, Mencius, Li Ta Po and Tu Fu. But the struggles of to-day, the changed position in the world of the Middle Kingdom, the rise of the proletariat, the import of smoke stacks, are beyond his roseate vision. His manners are perfect according to his rites; but they are the manners of yesterday, just as Pickwick would be a man of yesterday. Tuchuns and politicians employ him to write telegrams and mandates. He does not understand them, for they are not eight-legged essays.

Tsing Hua College.

Education and politics have retarded the progress of Tsing Hua college. They cannot be mixed, as one mixes gin and bitters. When politics enters, education flies out of the window, just as bad coppers drive out good coppers and send the money market to the bottom. Now they are reforming Tsing Hua. Two men are devoting themselves to make it a great institution of learning, to disassociate it from politics, to forget that it was born out of a political agitation. Y. S. Tsao, its president, and C. P. Chang, its dean, are seeking to establish there a great research university where those who teach in Chinese colleges may themselves be taught what is new in method and content and yet remain in China. Educational movements in China have suffered from its men rushing to and fro about the world seeking knowledge but losing contact with China. Here is to be a school where men may find knowledge and continue to know China. Perhaps here is a solution of the Boxer Indemnity problem. Spend it in China where the money may all be used beneficially, where none may go into attuning the Ningpo ear to mellifluous jazz.

A Patriot.

Once there was a returned student who came to China to serve his country. He tried one thing and another and meanwhile the number of mouths to be fed increased. As they increased, the task of being a patriot became more arduous. For patriotism is an unprofitable vocation. He headed a university, entered parliament as a senator, tried to make an old-fashioned political leader a great and progressive man, managed a bank. But all things either made feeding the mouths difficult or placed too great a strain on his patriotism. Then came the thunder of the legations and the chancelleries. China must untangle her finances. China must have a modern accounting system. There must be order in China's administration. So he sat him down in a building where once an Emperor was kept prisoner and there he worked on China's finances, while in his leisure he carned enough to feed the mouths. He stuck to his thankless job, to his unremunerative job, to his unsung, unfamed job. And therefore men say that the reconstructive period has begun in China. For young men are finding constructive things to do, and what is so much more essential, they are doing them quietly, soundly, fundamentally, while parliamentarians and ministers and tuchuns talk of sovereign rights.

God's Own Country.

Which country is not God's Own Country? Filippino, Armenian and Greek, Albanian, Rumanian and Turk, American, Briton and Jew, all believe that their's is God's own Country, that they are the Chosen People, that their ways, their habits, their manners, their literature, their poets and their music, is uber alles. Yet, what comes of all this superiority but more hatred, more wars, more empires lost into the oblivion of Ptolemies' Egypt or Hammurabi's Babylon, the sporting ground of the archæologist, the treasure-field of the historian? The Chinese used to believe that theirs was God's Own Country and that all who came were bearers of tribute to the Celestial Emperor. And when the steamboat and the machine, the electric light and the wireless came, they must have learned that material strength is but the physical proof of a spiritual vigor and an intellectual force which they did not possess. In their land coal lay in the ground under their feet; yet men have done the labour of iron beasts and women have plodded through life imitating parts of steam-driven tools, while in other lands, to the Chinese not God's Own Country, coal was freeing the individual from stupid, useless, physical labour, bringing leisure, education, health, longevity and order. Is not God's Own Country where these things come to be?

The Cow.

There is a tradition against killing the cow. The peasants regard her as the best friend of man in the world of beasts. As dogs in western lands, as horses to the sportsman, so are cows to the Chinese. Milk and butter have disappeared from the cuisine of the country, although in Mongolia and Tibet and perhaps among the nomad tribes whose bolder ancestors pushed forward beyond the steppes into the plains of Chihli and became Chinese, milk is a principal article of food. To the Chinese to drink milk would be to rob the calf of its life; to eat beef, to bring death to a friend. Slaughter-houses are despised, just as murderers of human beings are despised. And the slaughter-houses bring to the farmer another fear: for to them the robber may take the farmer's friend and companion, where he is killed and skinned, that no man may recognize or claim him, and sold in distant markets, a carcass. Many stories for children have been written about the virtues of the cow, but prettiest of all is the story of the "Cow-boy and the Spinning Maid," which every year on the Seventh Day of the Seventh Moon is repeated and its lessons learned.

A motoring accident which might very easily have been attended with the most serious results occurred in Bubbling Well Road opposite the Country Club shortly after midnight on Saturday. A car belonging to the Great Northern Garage, and in which a foreign gentleman was being driven into town, had just passed Love Lane when the driver observed a ricsha, without lights, being trailed along right in his path. Having but a yard or two in which to avoid the ricsha, the chauffeur swerved sharply to the right and then, being within a fraction of crashing into a telephone post, switched round again to the left, the result being that the car skidded violently and toppled over on to its side. The chauffeur, who had done his best to avoid running down the ricsha man, emerged from the car with a bad wound in the forehead, but the foreigner was unhurt. Assistance was quickly sought and the car, a partial wreck lying across the tram lines, was removed.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

Captain Cecil Foster, master of the str. Trevessa, which was lost in the Indian Ocean, is writing the story of the survivors' journey of 1,700 miles in open boats.

∴

A Life of Lenin by Maxim Gorki has just been completed, and will shortly be published in Russia.

Although Earl Buxton's forthcoming book entitled "General Botha" is not described as a biography, it will give an account of the earlier life of General Botha, leading up to the period with which he especially deals. The book will also deal with Botha's characteristics, his surroundings, and his policy, and forms a tribut eto the man as soldier, statesman, leader and counsellor. Lord Buxton's official position as Governor-Gneral of the Union and High Commissioner for South Africa, 1914 to 1918, a period that included the critical years of the war, enables him to write with special knowledge and authority on matters of vital interest to the Union, and the book, which Mr. Murray is to publish, will make a wide appeal to all who are interested in a great personality, and those who are concerned with the welfare of the Empire.

The many thousands of bravely adventurous people who read "The Sheik," probably more than once, will be delighted to hear that Mrs. E. M. Hull is engaged upon a sequel to it, and that she intends to call this sequel "Sons of the Sheik."

∴

There is to be a series of "Bookman" anthologies in connexion with that well-known literary monthly, and the editor, Mr. St. John Adcock, has done the first one. It is "An Anthology of Living Poets," and it seeks to include samples of all that is best in present-day poetry, by living poets of every school in all parts of the British Commonwealth. Someone has said that Britain is again, as in the days of Queen Elizabeth, "a nest of singing birds," and certainly never were more poets writing than now, or with greater variety in theme and style.

We know Mr. Frank Scudamore as one of the war correspondents who marched with Archibald Forbes and Bennett Burleigh, Melton Prior and "Charlie" Williams. He has written his "Remiscences," and they are to be published by Fisher Unwin with just that title. They will be found to epitomize the light and shade of the world wars of the last half-century, and they overflow with stories of people in the public eye during that period. Kings, diplomats, politicians, and illustrious soldiers and sailors have been among Mr. Scudamore's friends, and he has been a wide traveller.

The discovery of a great store of hitherto unpublished letters written by that incomparable letter-witer, Jane Welsh Carlyle, is an event of first-rate literary importance. They make a collection numbering over 200, and, under the editorship of Mr. Leonard, Huxley, LL.D., are to be issued by Mr. Murray under the title "Jane Welsh Carlyle: Letters to her family 1839-1863." The letters are full of lively sketches of the great men and women of the Carlyle circle, including, to name but a few, Dickens and Thackeray, Tennyson, Mazzini and Cavaignac, Erasmus Darwin, Jeffrey, Charles Buller, Miss Jewsbury, the Sterlings and the Ashburtons.

"THE Bolshevik Persecution of Christianity," by Capt. Francis McCullagh, author of that informing book on present-day Russia, "A Prisoner of the Reds," has just been published by John Murray, London. The volume will no doubt be eagerly read by all who wish to learn the truth about Bolshevism. Capt. McCullagh points out that the attitude of the Soviet Government towards the Orthodox Church has changed completely, but not for the better. He divides his book into three parts —Russia, Rome, and the Present Position of the Christian Churches in Russia. The more he studied the details of the great attack which the Soviet Government first launched against the Christian Churches in Russia five years ago, the more complex he says the subject seemed to grow and the more convinced he felt was the necessity to record in a less ephemeral and disconnected form than that of newspaper articles, the great story of Patriarch Tikhon's fall and Archbishop Cieplak's condemnation.

FIGURES

A King's Speech from the Scaffold

"GOSSIP OF THE 17TH AND 18TH CENTURIES." By John Beresford. Cobden-Sanderson. 8s. 6d.

Each of Mr. Beresford's essays has some historical personality for its subject, but Mr. Beresford never allows himself Mr. Strachey's entertaining licence in the imaginative reconstruction of character and incident. He delineates his people with a strict conscience for the limits of the "gossip" (diaries, letters and informal contemporary documents) from which they take shape and loan for recognition: his puppets are all laced tight to their factual backgrounds. So much the worse, one might think, for the convincingness of their make-believe, the realism of their recreated movements. Mr. Beresford, however, more than makes up for the backwardness of his fancy by his intelligence and tact in selection. In the pages of Firth and Gardiner the story of "January 30, 1649" loses its outlines perforce in a wilderness of amplification and professional conjecture about details. Mr. Beresford's forty-page narrative is a little masterpiece of compromise.

His method releases for us a most vivid and moving portrait of Charles I from the theological dust and heat of his last days. In the accounts of eye-witnesses that are quoted by Mr. Beresford, the figure of the King seems to move with a nobility that is almost histrionic:

> His Majesty being taken away by the Guards, as he past down the Stairs the Soldiers scoff'd at him, casting the Smoke of their Tobacco (a thing very distasteful to him) in his Face, and throwing their Pipes in his Way. And as he heard the Rabble of Soldiers crying out (in his passage), "Justice, Justice," he said, "Poor Soldiers, for a piece of Mony they would do so by their Commanders."

The incident is strongly reminiscent of a more famous one, even in the telling of it; and it is notable that Bishop Juxon, during his private ministrations to Charles, chose as his text that chapter in St. Matthew "which relateth to the Passion of our Blessed Saviour."

A Noble End.

On his way to the execution Juxon fell on his knees weeping, and the King "helped the Bishop up, for he was aged," proceeding himself to the scaffold "with a chearful look." Arrived there, he gazed "very earnestly on the Block," meditated a moment, and then began his last speech. He referred with deep humility to his acquiescence in the sentence on Strafford, refused to lay the burden of guilt for the Civil War on Parliament, maintaining that "ill Instruments between them and me have been the chief Cause of all this Bloodshed"; but reminded his hearers, with a considerable colloquial force of argument, that "a Subject and a Sovereign are clean different things." The final conversation between Charles and his chaplain is irresistibly quotable. In its tone and quality of emotion, in the attitude it expresses to metaphysical problems, it is as consummately seventeenth-century as Marvell's Dialogue between the Resolved Soul and Created Pleasure.

> The King; I have a good Cause, and a gracious God on my side.
> Dr. Juxon: There is but one Stage more: This Stage is turbulent and troublesome. It is a short one. But you may consider, it will soon carry you a very great way; it will carry you from Earth to Heaven, and there you shall find to your great joy the Prize; you haste to a Crown of Glory.
>
> The King: I go from a corruptible to an incorruptible Crown, where no disturbance can be.
> Dr. Juxon: You are exchanged from a temporal to an eternal Crown, a good Exchange.

The essay on Anne Hyde, daughter of Clarendon and Duchess of York, is the longest in the volume. Here Mr. Beresford's skill in quotation is more successful with the background than with the main character of his narrative. Anne Hyde, in spite of her eventful life, never comes before us in full personality: on the other hand, we are given an admirable picture of her environment—of London at a time when Oxford-street "ran between hedges," and gentlemen shot woodcock in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly. For the rest, there are informative and consistently readable sketches of Lady Mary Coke, a "country wife" of the reign of Queen Anne; of John Donne the Younger, whom a contemporary describes as "an atheistical buffoon, a banterer, and a person of overfree thoughts"; and, finally, of the poet Herbert, "one of those rare beings who, by the mere fact of their existence on earth, seem to show, men that they can put off their mortality."—"Daily News."

THE GOLDEN RULE

An American Manufacturer who Made it Pay

"THE GOLDEN RULE IN BUSINESS." By Arthur Nash, President of the A. Nash Co., Cincinnati. F. H. Revell Co., New York. 2nd Edition 1923. Pp 160. $1.25 net.

Within the past year or two there have been not infrequent newspaper references to an experiment in the manufacture of clothing by the author of this book. He has now consented to give some account of his life history, and of the steps of the process by which he has come to be nicknamed "Golden Rule Nash." He tells us that he was born 53 years ago in the state of Indiana, the eldest of nine children, and that he was educated in what he now regards as a rigid, stern, and uncompromising faith, from which, after having been promoted to be an "Elder," he revolted on account of what he considered to be its bigotry and intolerance. After this bitter experience he (not unnaturally) tried to reject every form of religion, becoming an avowed "infidel." Yet he was not altogether successful in this. A judicious marriage to a woman of robust faith totally changed his attitude to life. These details are of importance in explaining the gradual evolution of the Golden Rule idea. He began with a small sweat-shop as a clothing maker, where the workers, men and women, were paid starvation wages. A tall dignified old lady, close to 80 years of age, who pulled out bastings and sewed on buttons, and a little hunchback who ran a machine, were each paid $4.00 a week. "Sweat-shops are always made up of inefficient workers who can not get a job in a high grade shop."

Knocked Clean Out.

Mr. Nash's son, just back from the war, saw nothing out of the ordinary in this wage scale. All other shops gave the same, and if a change was made this shop would be "knocked clean out." An inventory at the end of a financial year showed a depreciation from $60,000 to $56,000. The owner called together the few stockholders who agreed to liquidate the company on the promise of having their loss made good. The owner hoped to get enough out of it to make a small payment on a farm for himself. He said to himself: "A farm is the only place where a man can be really a Christian. He certainly can't be one in the clothing business." He then summoned the workers together and explained that he wished to run this business on the principle of the Golden Rule. He had the names of the operatives read aloud. The first was the old lady that pulled threads and sewed on buttons. With a sudden inspiration he informed her that hereafter her wages were to be $12 a week, an increase of 30 per cent. The same to the hunchback. Thus he went through the entire list, increasing the pay of $18 pressers to $27, and the rest in proportion. This was done under conscientious pressure, with a reasoned expectation that the project might, and probably would, fail. While looking around for the farm to which he expected to retire, exercising only a very general oversight of his clothing business, Mr. Nash began to realize that as the soldiers from the war were being demobilized the sales were picking up. Investigation showed that the firm was doing almost three times as much as at the same time the previous year. No work had been done outside, and no new machines had been bought. Still further inquiry elicited the information that the crippled fingers of the old lady had "limbered up," and that she was doing twice as much as ever before. The skilled help that had been merely "loafing on the job," had got busy, and were showing how to get work done, so that the garments were coming through in a rapid and constant stream. Interviewing the bookkeeper and the "forelady" Mr. Nash inquired into the reasons for this improvement.

The Age of Miracles.

He was told that when the first notice of rise in wages had been given to the workers they were literally dumbfounded. Then a little Italian presser blurted out: "Well, I'll be damned! Whatever this Golden Rule thing is I don't know, but Mr. Nash told us that he wanted us to do the work just as we would want him to work if we were up in the office paying wages, and he were back here doing the work. Now I know that if I were the boss and should come in and talk to the workers as he did, and raise wages like he has I'd want every one to work like hell." "There," said the forelady, "that's about all there is to it. Our people just caught the drift of Tony's idea, and went ahead in the spirit of it. That's why we've trebled our output. If I talked a week, I couldn't tell you any more."

"The most hopeful feature of this remarkable experiment," (a special investigator afterwards wrote), is its constant process of development, of growth and expansion, both material and spiritual. Every change in economic policy or in social betterment has come at the suggestion of some worker in the factory, or as the result of thorough discussion between employer and employee."

In speaking before the annual convention of the International Association of Salesmen, Chief Justice Marshall, of the Ohio Supreme Court, said: "The Nash Company is not solving the tragic problem of capital and labour, it is doing away with it altogether. I can not help believing that if this simple application of the Golden Rule could be introduced into our country's business, how it would lessen the burden of taxation, as well as the cumbersome and expensive law-making machinery; and how appalling federal appropriation of 92 cents out of every dollar to pay for past wars and preparing for more wars to come, could be directed into constructive and peaceful channels."

Within recent months an unknown visitor asked to be shown about the factory, and he remarked: "I've never seen people work so fast before. They're piece-workers of course?" No, every one in this room is on a weekly wage. He eyed, me sharply. "You are talking to an experienced factory man, Mr. Nash. Don't try to make me believe that." Ask them, I suggested. He did.

On the third floor where all the clothing is cut, a job which requires the utmost care, he said: "What a contrast we have here. The men at the tables act as if they had oceans of time in which to finish their jobs. They are taking pains. Of course they are paid by the week, too?" No, they are the only piece-workers in the plant. "You mean to tell me that all those men upstairs working at top speed, are wage earners, and that these men are paid by the piece? I have never seen so happy a bunch of workers." After a moment's silence he said: "I want you to know that I would rather have done what you have done than to have all the money in the world." (This man turned out to be a great manufacturer and financier in a southern State.)

The summary of the amount of business done by this form for five years is as follows:

1918	$ 132,190
1919	525,678
1920	1,580,700
1921	2,077,559
1922	3,751,181

There is a tradition that the wonderful lover of all animate Nature, Saint Anthony, once preached to the fishes:

> "The sermon now ended, the fishes descended,
> The eels went on eeling, the pikes went on stealing;
> Much delighted were they, but preferred the old way."

GENUINE ANTIQUES

"THE HARLEIAN MISCELLANY." A Selection. Edited by Henry Savage. (Cecil Palmer. 12s. 6d.)

The first Earl of Oxford may have left an unheroic reputation in politics, but the antiquary, professional and amateur, will always bless him for the collection of tracts, pamphlets and manuscripts which a redeeming eccentricity caused him to bring together. The complete "Miscellany," as selected by Oldys and prefaced by Dr. Johnson, is, as Mr. Savage says, unlikely to be reprinted. It was all the happier thought, therefore, of the present editor to give us this selection of a selection, which will delight everyone blessed with the sense of atmosphere and a love of the past in its naiver intimacies.

The item which carries us furthest back in this volume is the original form of initiation in the Order of the Bath, which has not been fully performed since the coronation of Charles II. "And when the Esquire's governors shall hear the noise of the minstrels, they shall undress the said Esquire, and put him naked into the bath..... and the Esquire's governors shall take the Esquire out of the bath and help him to his bed, there to continue till his body be dry." A series of love-letters between Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn were written variously in English and French. "Myne awne darling" or "Myne awne sweetheart" is the favourite exordium of "him that longeth to be yours, H.R." The Queen's last letter must have made the inconstant wince, with its allusion to "that party for whose sake I am now as I am, whose name I could some good while since have pointed unto: your Grace being not ignorant of my suspicion therein."

Another Tudor figures at her best in the intercepted letter of Richard Leigh, a Catholic priest, upon the failure of the Armada:—

> I do find, and know, that many good and wise men, which of long time have earnest devotion to the Pope's authority, begin now to stagger in their minds, and to conceive that this way of reformation intended by the Pope's Holiness is not allowable in the sight of God.

The foreign menace has so roused and united the community "that for all earnest proceeding for arming, and for contributions of money, and for all other warlike actions, there was no difference to be seen betwixt the Catholick and the Heretick." Of contemporary date is Anthony Monday's account of the beginning of Lent in Rome and the Pope's comminatory exertions:—

> There he curseth the Turke, and her majestie, our most gracious princesse and governesse; affirming her to be farre wurse than the Turke, or the cruellest tirant that is. He curseth likewise all Calvenians, Lutherians, Zwingians, and all that are not according to his disposition. When he hath cursed all he can, saying "Amen," he letteth the candle fall.

From a later century comes an unfriendly sketch of Muggleton, the founder of the Muggletonians. This worthy seems to have pursued a religious Rake's Progress—"first, degenerating from the orthodox tenets of the Church of England to Presbytery; from thence to Independency; thence to Anabaptism; thence to Quakerism; and lastly, to no religion at all." It is not quite clear at which of these stages he is described by a follower as having "put me into the easiest way to Heaven that ever was invented."

A pamphlet purporting to give some account of Alexander Selkirk's experiences indicates that the original Crusoe reacted so far to his environment as to be able to run down goats by superior speed—"for his way of living, and continual exercise of walking and running, cleared him of all gross humours, so that he ran with wonderful swiftness." There is no trace of Man Friday, but the tool-making faculty of Defoe's hero is evidently authentic. "He had no other needle but a nail; and when his knife was wore to the back, he made others, as well as he could, of some iron hoops that were left ashore, which he bent thin, and ground upon stones."—The "Observer."

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

THE MAN WHO WON

A Fable of the Champion Sweeps

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Once there was a man who won the Champions' Sweepstakes. It did not happen the first time he tried with ten dollars. No. Quite the reverse. In fact for a long time this man by the name of Smith had been supporting one of Shanghai's worthiest eleemosynary institutions by his contributions thereto each spring and autumn. But at last, after he had expended much of his salary in riotous ticket-buying he stumbled upon the lucky number.

In the first glad glow of his enthusiasm he shouted the glad tidings far and near, and since the number of his ticket was known to many of his friends who had adjoining numbers, they also spread the glad news around the town. The next time he draws so much as a pony he will never breathe a word to his dearest friend. But this was different.

Envious Friends.

His friends who felt, severally and collectively, that they might as well have had the money, didn't attempt to conceal their dissappointment. Indeed they almost hinted that there might have been some mistake in his title to just this precise slimpsy slip of paper. To help matters out he suggested a party that night. A big party, they added. It was a large party and at the end of it, or rather on the next day he awoke to a sad consciousness that in the brotherhood borne of champagne he had promised a considerable slice of his winnings to those less fortunate friends of his.

But this was only the beginning. In the morning's mail came a letter asking for an endowment for a hospital for stray cats. The next mail brought him a flock of invitations to various social affairs, which would have been flattering, had they been received a day earlier. When he reached his office he found his spiritual adviser waiting to congratulate him and to suggest many worthy avenues for his new found wealth. His clerks expected bonuses at once, his servants were openly resentful of the cumsha he bestowed upon them, his old friends thought he was too grand for them, and his new ones he could not stand. Soon he was obliged to flee Shanghai, but news of his good fortune followed him, and though little remains of his lucky strike, he will never be able to live down its responsibilities. Often he sighs as he recalls the good old days when he couldn't even win a place premium on the Pari-Mutual, he sighs sadly and moans, "Alas, would that I had been the man who lost!"

Moral: Don't be too downhearted. You, too, might have won.

"CHINESE LANTERNS"

Light Cast Upon China and Her Women

Grace Thompson Seton (Mrs. Ernest Thompson Seton) during her visit to China applied herself assiduously to making contacts with Chinese women and her friends among the foreigners were fully aware of her frankly expressed desire to meet Chinese women and see things Chinese rather than to mingle in the usual international gaieties. Her latest book, just issued by Dodd, Mead & Co. is a justification of her policy for it shows that by maintaining this purpose Mrs. Seton was able to assemble an unusual number of facts, make the personal acquantance of many outstanding characters and visit a surprising number of institutions in different parts of the country. Therefore, in spite of the short time actually spent in China, Mrs. Seton has given us a very interesting book, all the more readable because her reactions are admittedly those of a stranger to the country.

In her foreword the author writes: "In putting these lanterns before the public gaze, though of unworthy form and matter and inferior workmanship compared with all the richness showered about me in the flowery Kingdom, my aim has been to throw a little light on what is happening there, especially upon the dark places of the woman's quarters of New China, where the white light of publicity has not yet beaten; and if in doing so I can show some of the beauty of gracious hospitality, of the sympathetic and co-operative kindliness and courtesy extended to me, a woman, travelling alone, then the creation of another book to swell the lists of reviewers and booksellers will have been justified and another grain added to the bulk of human knowledge."

The vivid description of the wedding of the Boy Emperor is an especially interesting part of the book which includes studies in Peking, Shanghai, Canton, and Tai Shan as well as glimpses of the life of women in many smaller towns. There are over 80 excellent illustrations in the well brought out volume which is now for sale at the Chinese American Book Store, 25 Nanking Road.

THE FRENCH GIRL FACES MARRIAGE

Juliette is too much of a realist not to know that feminine stock has fallen, and she sees the reasons for the decline. A young girl of her age has three or four 'classes'—as they say in the military law—of possible husbands which were not decimated and worn out by the war, for the last class mobilized was eighteen years old in 1918; but above that fatal age,—which corresponds to an age of twenty-three in the year 1923,—one class after another of men only a few years older has been decimated or destroyed. Result: there are plenty of marriageable girls of ages corresponding with theirs, who are competing with the eighteen-year-old Juliette on advantageous terms—for our Juliettes know very well that the men who were in the war are not in a hurry to get married.

The line between the two epochs is sharp and clear. It is among the very young men, the young men scarcely older than themselves,—the ones who did not go to war and whose character was formed, like their own, during the progress of the war but at a distance from the front,—that the Juliettes of eighteen are destined to find their husbands—if they are ever to find any. It is a fact that extremely youthful marriages, and with a very slight difference between the ages of the couple, are more frequent to-day than they ever were.

The Important Dot.

So Juliette has to marry in her own generation, and Juliette knows her own generation very well. She knows them and she judges them. She knows that they are by no means feminized—that, unlike the generation before the war, they are about as much concerned with women as so many young Englishmen. She knows that they are quite aware of their own increased value—which gives them an advantage over young girls—and that, regarding money as a prime necessity, they are resolved to go without a wife rather than without money—resolved in consequence to chose only from young girls who have dots. Juliette knows too that if, after they have been talking about a marriageable young girl, somebody says to them. 'Only her dot is rather small,' it is very much like saying, 'Only she's a Negress, you know,' or else 'Only her mother is shut up in Sainte-Anne.' Juliette's pals (copains) are not chary of expressing their opinions. Juliette knows all this, but she does not hold it against them. She even believes that they are right.

She thinks they are right because she knows very well what she looks for in marriage herself. Feeling no very irresistible yearning to be married, she demands a good deal of comfort, plus a degree of liberty equal to that she enjoyed as a young girl. ('Don't you think I'm reasonable, uncle? I don't ask any more.') It is all very well for a young girl to be stone-broke (puree), but for a wife—no. Why? Because a young girl has always in the future the possibility of a big marriage, but a wife's prospects are settled, and it is poverty for good and all.

Starting out from this standpoint, Juliette—who is a clear-thinking and realistic young creature—says to herself: 'If I were a young man, I should have to be very well off for cash (peze) before I would marry Juliette Despeyroux.' Far from holding it against a bachelor who confides to her his resolution not to take the plunge (marcher) except for a good big dowry, she thinks he is perfectly right, and even applauds him. She would not, it must be admitted, reject the man who showed contrary sentiments, but she would think him a poor sort (pauv' type)!

The Not-Impossible He.

Circumstances being thus, a Juliette Despeyroux is naturally led to consider the fact that she will have to yield on certain requirements if she is to achieve in her marriage her irreducible demands—to wit, independence and fortune. On which points is a young girl to make concessions—on the good looks of her future husband, on his education and social class, or his age?

Juliette will not yield on such points as education and social standing. Better be an old maid forever than live with an ill-educated man. As for good looks, it may as well be understood that Juliette talks freely enough and not without admiration of men's appearance — which sometime shocks her mother. I have several times determined that these good looks do not at all rouse in her any desire to get married. 'Good-looking' men seem even to constitute a class apart, not to be considered in marriage.

Then there are the men who are 'all right' (bien)—a huge category. A man may be homely and still be 'all right,' if he has a good presence, or an air of force or decision, or a certain fineness of feature, or intelligence, or extreme care of his person, or easy manners, or if he dresses well.

Last of all, there are the 'hopeless' (mal) men, who have precisely the opposite characteristics. The upshot of it all is that a man's age does not render him ineligible in Juliette's eyes, unless it conflicts with the qualities that make him 'all right.' Suppose age keeps him from walking with an easy swing, or gives him a tired, worn-out air, or makes him obviously ridiculous.

In short Juliette will never compromise on the education of her future husband. Neither will she compromise on his outward appearance to the point of marrying a 'hopeless' man. But, in spite of this, her category of men who are 'all right' is wide open so far as both age and outward appearance are concerned.

One objection occurred to me: 'But suppose, Juliette, you should fall in love with a man who is "all right," and yet has no money.'

She replied: 'I never fall in love with anybody.'

'That is well enough for the past, but what about the future?'

After a second's reflexion she made this reply, which is not without depth: 'When that time comes, I shall not be myself any more, and so I don't know.'

Independence v. Marriage

When Juliette talks of herself, she always uses a tone of badinage. In her ordinary mood she is really persuaded that she will get married, that she will get married soon, and that she will make a suitable marriage. (She is quite right.) On days when she is in a bad humour she vows that nothing is worth so much as independence, and she devises plans for the future in which practical good sense is tempered by an amusing naivete. The indispensable elements of this independent life are a big atelier, with a bathroom; lowbuilt furniture, very comfy; traveling; having visits from her friends, but keeping whole weeks of complete solitude; hear good music; reading; sports.

'And the cash for all this, Juliette?'

'I have my dot. I will get enough extra for what I need by translating English books like (here there was the name of a friend) or going into hospital to nurse like (the name of another friend).'

'And what about love?'

Juliette sent me 'out for a walk' (she really has no respect for me). But she never does consent to talk seriously and sincerely on that subject anyhow. All you can get out of her is 'I should worry' (Je m'en fiche), which is either an admission of failure or else pure bluff. My own opinion is that she is very likely to think seriously of love, that she is rather afraid of it, that she would rather not think of it, because she sees in it a limitation of her independence and a definite defeat in the warfare of the sexes. — Marcel Prevost, in "Figaro."

PROGRESS IN THE EAST

How the Wind Blows.

A straw shows which way the wind blows; and that the custom of separating the sexes by curtains in the public trams in Turkey has just been abolished is worth reflecting on. In Egypt, too, things are moving rapidly. The Egyptian Women's Union has succeeded in its efforts to raise the marriage age for girls, and in future marriages of boys under eighteen and of girls under sixteen years of age will be illegal. Quite recently also the Order of the Nile was conferred for the first time on a woman—Mlle. Nabauia Moussa, director of the "College for the Progress of the Egyptian Girl" and Inspector of Government girls' schools. But, of all the Eastern countries, it is India which continues to lead the way at an amazing rate. In that land of magic, as we all know, it is quite a simple matter to produce a full-grown tree at a moment's notice, or to lay at your feet an object that may be hundreds of miles away before you have hardly expressed a wish for it. And the growth of the women's movement, though in no way occult, has some of the same surprising features about it!

Indian Women at the Poll.

Could the author of Lalla Rookh have paid a visit to India a month or two ago he would surely have rubbed his eyes! The seclusion of the Indian woman so fired his imagination that he painted it in the most poetic imagery, and incidentally produced a picture of a country he had never seen, which, according to the authorities, was correct in every detail. And now—those lovely, shy, mysterious creatures voting! Veils discarded, purdah broken, going openly to the polling booths—the same polling booths for women and men! It may be remembered that the Government of India Act, though it gave the vote only to men, contained a permissive clause allowing the various Legislative Councils to enfranchize their women if they chose to do so. So far Madras Presidency, Bombay Presidency, and the United Provinces—representing altogether a population of over a hundred million people—are the only three Councils which have availed themselves of the right, but doubtless the others will soon come into line. It is only about three years since the Act was passed, and it is notable that the women have been given the vote on the same terms as men: there are no restrictions in regard to age or occupation. At present the Councils cannot give women the right to sit in Parliament.

The Nursing Profession.

And how did the women avail themselves of their privilege? It would not have been surprising if the "veiled woman of the East" had taken some little time to grow accustomed to rubbing shoulders with strange men in a public polling booth. On the contrary, however, they regarded the exercise of their right as a "patriotic duty," and in some places 75 per cent. of the women voted. The Women's Indian Association had naturally not neglected to encourage and stimulate the women's interest in the duties of citizenship, and on voting day were at the various polling stations acting as unofficial helpers. This is the first time the Indian women have voted for Parliament, though they have had the municipal vote for many years. India is indeed forging ahead in all sorts of ways. The nursing profession is now receiving a good deal of attention. A bill which will ensure good status and adequate pay for nurses is being introduced in Madras on the lines of an excellent Act which is already in force in Burma, and high-caste ladies are being trained as nurses at the Dufferin Hospital, Calcutta.

HOME HUMOURS

Not Guilty.

Mrs. Parker: "Have you taken a constitutional, granny?"

Granny (who has a confirmed habit of appropriating other people's property): "You mind your own business. I haven't taken anything belonging to you."

Shocking!

Jean: "Look, I've just smuggled this bottle of eau-de-cologne over from France."

George: "What a shocking sense of duty you seem to have!"

Sold.

Jones (pointing to architectual atrocity): "Look, dear; I bought this little cottage with the money my uncle left me."

His fiancee: "I see. Sold your birthright for a mess of cottage."

Quite Useless.

Jim: "I say, if I kissed you, would you give it away to your father?"

Phoebe: "Why, of course not. What do you think he wants with your kisses?"

Too Wise!

"I say, old chap, lend me your umbrella for a few minutes!"

"Not much! That's how I got it."

No Hope for Her.

Maiden Aunt: "No, I wouldn't marry the best man living, Mollie."

Niece: "Well, auntie, I expect he's married already."

DR. W. W. YEN'S DEMAND FOR THE SURTAX

Further Explanation of Recent Finance Commission's Inquiry: Land Tax a Provincial Perquisite: More Information Promised About Provinces

Peking, May 7.

Seeing that the preliminary report of the Commission for the Readjustment of Finance recently submitted by Dr. W. W. Yen to the President has attracted widespread attention, and received extensive comments from the Press, Reuter's representative called on Dr. Yen with the object of securing some direct expressions of opinion from the head of the important Commission.

Dr. Yen was first asked why, in making out the estimated income of the Central Government, no account was taken of such items such as the Land Tax, which was estimated to yield about $90,000,000, per annum.

To this Dr. Yen replied that according to Article 25 of the new Constitution the Land Tax is expressly reserved to the provinces. Since the line of demarcation between the sources of revenue for the Central Government and the Provinces is now clearly made, the estimated future income of the Central Government cannot very well include the Land Tax.

Provincial Revenues

Touching then upon the question of why the recent report should confine itself to the investigation of the receipts and expenditures of the Central Government only, leaving the problem of provincial finance entirely out of consideration, Dr. Yen explained that the said report was only a preliminary one, not at all intended to be complete or final, and that, in one of his earlier interviews, he had remarked that one of the encouraging features of the work of the Commission was that some of the so-called independent provinces were already responding to the inquiries of the Commission in its efforts to collect statistical information concerning provincial government receipts and expenditure. Fifteen provinces and Administrative Areas have already supplied this Commission with the desired information which will be made public in a later report.

On the question of provincial remittance, Dr. Yen remarked that what is due under the new Constitution to the Central Government must, of course, be remitted to support it. It was astonishing that some people should feel that under present circumstances there appeared to be no reason why the provinces should remit money to Peking. While a strong Central Government might not be the panacea for all the evils now existing in China, yet it was certainly one of the most important stabilizing influences and a fundamental prerequisite to a united prosperous China, which it was to the interest of the foreigners as well as of the Chinese themselves to see established as soon as possible.

The Customs Surtax

Turning to the question of the Customs Tariff Conference, Dr. Yen said that if China's creditors and friends expected China to fulfil the obligations which the Central Government was called upon to undertake, they must see to it that no unnecessary embarrassment was imposed upon the Government and no obstructions placed in the path of her legitimate aspirations. The holding of a special Customs Conference and the granting of the two and a half per cent. surtax in accordance with the Washington Tariff Treaty, was simply the fulfilment of a promise which, in fairness and justice, to say nothing of friendship, should have been carried out long ago. The proceeds so realized would largely be pledged to the service of China's inadequately secured loan obligations. To say that such a grant would be tantamount to a political loan to the present Government was entirely erroneous.

Dr. Yen concluded the interview with the statement that the question of the abolition of likin and that of the budget were also engaging the attention of the Commission and that the work would be pushed forward as rapidly as circumstances permit.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA TO HAVE A MINISTER IN CHILE

Peking, May 10.

The Government have decided to raise the status of their diplomatic representative in Chile from that of Chargé d'Affaires to that of Minister. Mr. Chang Chien, Jr., who was at the head of the Chinese Industrial Mission during its recent tour, has been appointed the first Minister to Chile.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICA AND BOXER INDEMNITY

China's Gratification for Proposed Remission of Further Payments: Previous Suspensions

RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE SENATE

Peking, May 9.

Chinese Government officials express gratification at the action of the American House of Representatives in passing the resolution in favour of relieving China of further payments of the American share of the Boxer Indemnity. It is pointed out, however, that the resolution has yet to go before the Senate. The resolution in question is identical with one brought forward on July, 20, 1921, which passed one House and then died owing to failure to pass the other. The original resolution provided: That the President be hereby authorized in his discretion to remit to the Chinese Government as an act of friendship any or all further payments of the annual instalments of the Chinese Indemnity due under the bond for $24,440,778.81 received from the Chinese Government pursuant to the Protocol of September 7, 1901, as modified by executive order on December 28, 1908, pursuant to the authority of the joint resolution of Congress approved on May 25, 1908, for indemnity against losses and expenses incurred by reason of the so-called Boxer disturbances in China during the year 1900, such remission to begin as from 1917 and to be at such times and in such manner as the President shall deem just. As stated before, this measure failed to pass both Houses and is reintroduced in the present Congress.

The year 1917 was quoted in this resolution as suspension of payments to the Allies began in that year. Thus when the resolution was introduced the five years suspension had not ended. The resolution, therefore, must have been altered in that respect by being brought up to date. Remission such as the resolution calls for would not affect arrangements made in 1908, regarding Tsinghua College for instance. The actual remission would represent about 50 per cent. of the total indebtedness to the United States.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

"Peking need not be so jubilant, after all, and the military leaders should be less happy at the prospect of having the American share of the Boxer indemnity remitted, for a telegram has just come from Dr. Alfred Sze, the Minister to Washington, stating that the money is being remitted on condition that is devoted to educational uses, states the "Eastern Times."—Ed.

BRITAIN AND THE BOXER INDEMNITY

Allocation for Education Purposes

London, May 12.

In the House of Commons at question time to-day, Mr. Arthur Ponsonby, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said that the details in connexion with the allocation of the unpaid balance of the Boxer Indemnity for purposes of education had been settled. A bill would be introduced at an early date to that effect.—Reuter.

PEKING, May 11.—The Chinese Government has received an invitation to participate in the furthcoming Conference on Art to be held in San Francisco. Countries bordering on the Pacific are invited to take part.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA'S DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Peculiar Way in Which Posts Are Filled: Perquisites and Patronage for Whom?

Yo Chao-cheuh, a confidant of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, has just been appointed Minister to Mexico, and Chang Hsiao-jao (Chang Chien, Jr.), upon the recommendation of Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan, has been approved by the Government as Minister-designate to Chile. Thus, both Loyang and Nanking have scored, and nothing could beat this happy and fair apportionment of posts. However, the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" has five doubtful points upon which it would dilate:—

(1) Are the duties of our Minister in Chile light and simple, or are they difficult and strenuous? Dr. Wellington Koo, at the last Cabinet meeting, explained that "Although Mr. Chang has not gained much experience, he will happily find the duties at our Legation in Chile light and simple, etc." If so, why should the post of a Chargé d'Affaires there be raised to the rank of a Minister? Should our Legation in Chile be used as a training depot for diplomats? Is the Sino-Chilean relationship such that its maintenance can safely be entrusted to an inexperienced diplomat for the purpose of experiment?

What about Mexico?

(2) Since a new Minister has been appointed for Mexico, how are we to deal with Mr. Wang Chi-tsen who has just resigned the chief secretaryship of the Cabinet? If Wang has done nothing wrong, he should be sent back to his post in Mexico; and if he has, he should be relieved of his substantive appointment as Minister to Mexico. In the latter case, he would rightly be deprived of both posts. For what earthly reason then is he still being retained by the Government as an "Expectant Minister" at a salary of $500 a month?

(3) No Minister has been stationed in Mexico for a long time. How is it that during the time of a revolution when Chinese emigrants in Mexico were in imminent danger of losing their lives and were hoping to secure some protection from their Government as eagerly as can well be imagined, our Government withheld its compassion? How is it that when Obregon has restored normal order and consolidated his own position in Mexico, a Minister was immediately appointed to that country?

Germany and Japan

(4) We, as people outside the diplomatic circles, may be ignorant of all the circumstances that demand the appointment of ministers to Chile and Mexico; yet we, as persons endowed with a little commonsense, think that Sino-German relations appear to be far more important than Sino-Chilian relations. Why is Mr. Wei Tsen-tsu tarrying in Peking, while he has neither resigned nor obtained leave of absence, without showing any desire to return to his post? Why is he even being offered the Presidentship of a certain university at home?

As a dozen or more outstanding questions are waiting to be settled between China and Japan, and as Chinese students and merchants in Japan need the protection of their Minister, why has Mr. Wang Yung-pao suddenly returned home? Report has it that Mr. Wang wants to persuade the Government to excuse him from performing the duty of controlling students in Japan, which duty, he submits, should be exercised by an independent official, and that Wang would resign if his request were not granted. Be that as it may, the Government should settle the matter by either granting him his request, or by accepting his resignation. These are questions certainly more important than any pertaining to Chile or Mexico.

London Neglected.

(5) The Waichiaopu, whose duty it is to control all officials in China's diplomatic service, should see to it that all vacancies be filled as soon as they occur. Now, we keep only a Chargé d'Affaires in London to look after our interests, in spite of an important change of government having taken place in Great Britain. When will our Minister for Great Britain return to the Court of St. James, nobody can say. If he cannot return to his post in England, either a successor should be appointed, or Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, our Chargé d'Affaires, be promoted full Minister at once. Our Foreign Minister should certainly not appear to pay special attention to matters in America to the neglect of those in Europe.

RENDITION OF MIXED COURT

Chinese Government's Reply to Diplomatic Body: An Urgent Matter

Peking, May 12.

Replying to the Note of the Diplomatic Body regarding the rendition of the Mixed Court at Shanghai, the Chinese Government agrees to three conditions: firstly, that satisfactory arrangement be made to meet the expenses of the Court; secondly, that the decisions of the Court be executed throughout the Republic; thirdly, giving assurance that the arrangements between the Diplomatic Body and the Chinese Government shall be duly executed by the local authorities.

As regards the other questions brought up in the Note of the Diplomatic Body, such as the improvement of the port of Shanghai, extension of the Settlement boundaries, etc., the Chinese reply says that, while these do not have a direct bearing on the subject of the Mixed Court, the Government is willing to prepare for negotiations, provided these questions beneficially affect both foreigners and Chinese. The Chinese Government considers the rendition of the Mixed Court an urgent matter.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING GOVERNMENT AND C. E. RAILWAY

Warning Notes from America and France Regarding Foreign Interests

Peking, May 12.

The American Legation sent a Note to the Waichiaopu on May 3 drawing the attention of the Chinese Government to Resolution 13 of the Washington Treaty, in which the Powers reserve the right to insist on China's responsibility for the performance or non-performance of obligations towards foreign stockholders, bondholders and creditors of the Chinese Eastern Railway, which, the Powers deem, result from the contracts under which the Railway was built. The Note pointed out that the United States stands for the preservation of the legitimate interests in the Chinese Eastern Railway of nationals of all countries, including Russians, and clearly emphasized that there was no intention to interfere in the Sino-Russian negotiations. China is warned against entering into any unilateral agreement which would invalidate foreign interests.

The French Legation sent a similar Note to the Waichiaopu on May 7.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PANCHAN LAMA'S VISIT TO PEKING

Peking, May 10.

It is semi-officially reported that the Panchan Lama is still staying at the Anhai Hsien and has not yet started for Lanchow, the provincial capital of Kansu. The Government has not yet received any definite information as to the date of the Panchan's departure for Lanchow, but, as the distance from the Anhai Hsien is about 800 li, it is estimated that it will take him at least two months to complete the journey from Anhai to Peking. Mr. Ta Shou, the head of the committee recently appointed to make arrangements for the reception of the Panchan Lama, has been in touch with the Department of Mongolian and Tibetan Affairs on the subject, and it is understood that the only outstanding problem now is the question of raising the necessary funds.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, May 12.

Chinese telegrams report that the Panchan Lama has arrived at Suchow, 500 li from Lanchowfu. Gen. Ma Chi, Military Commissioner of Ninghsia and Kokonor, has sent a strong detachment of troops to act as a bodyguard for the Lama during his travels in China.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MARCONI AGENT'S CLAIM

Judgment Against Plaintiff: Case for Commission Not Proved

Judgment was delivered in this case in which plaintiff claimed commission of 5 per cent. on business done by defendants under three contracts with the Chinse Government. Defendants denied that he was entitled to any commission on the loans which, in addition to supplying wireless apparatus, they advanced to the Chinese Government. Plaintiff, Mr. James Aratoon Malcolm, of 47, Victoria-street, Westminster, sued under an agreement dated July 19, 1915, which constituted himself and Mr. E. F. Birchal (now dead) sole agents for the defendant company in China.

Mr. W. Craig Henderson, K.C., and Mr. H. G. Purchase (instructed by Messrs. Faithfull, Owen, and Fraser) represented plaintiff. Mr. W. A. Jowitt, K.C., Mr. D. B. Somervell, and Mr. Dennys Isaacs (instructed by Messrs. Coward and Hawksley, Sons, and Chance) were for defendants.

Mr. Justice Action said the questions for decision were (1) the true construction of the agreement, and (2) its application to three contracts entered into by the defendants with the Chinese Government. In his lordship's view the true construction of the letters which formed the agreement was that defendants were to be liable to pay 5 per cent. commission on all orders obtained by defendants from the Chinese Government during the continuance of the joint agency of the plaintiff and Mr. Birchal, such commission to be payable when the defendants received payment from the Chinese Government. He thought the defendants were right in saying that this commission was limited to orders obtained, as distinguished from loans made by them to the Chinese Government in order to secure those orders. Consequently, plaintiff's claim for £30,000 as 5 per cent. commission on a loan of £600,000 under the first contract could not be sustained. There remained the question of the commission payable on the order obtained, the total purchase price of which, under the first contract, was £300,000. Commission at 5 per cent. had been paid on £220,000—an amount of £11,000—but plaintiff contended that he was entitled to £4,000 more as 5 per cent. on the balance of £80,000. Defendants replied (1) that a rebate was made on the price stated in the contract very largely reducing the net purchase price as between them and the Chinese Government; and (2) that in fact defendants had never been paid more than £220,000 for the goods supplied. It was generally agreed that business of this kind with the Chinese Government was impracticable unless the sellers were prepared to sacrifice considerable sums over and above what would otherwise have been the commercial selling price of their goods. In the present case no less than £80,000 went to Chinese officials on behalf of their Government, as a "rebate." How far the officials benefited personally was not known, and probably could not be known. He thought, however, that defendants were entitled to say that although, prima facie, their liability to pay commission would have extended to the whole of the £300,000 as the expressed contract the price of their goods, inasmuch as the "rebate" proportionately reduced the amount actually paid by the Chinese Government, the plaintiff's claim for 5 per cent. on £80,000 must fail. He thought the result might have been otherwise had the price remained at £300,000 as between the Chinese Government and the defendants.

Under the second contract there was an agreement to erect three wireless stations for £66,000 and an advance in cash of £134,000. From what he had said it followed that plaintiff's claim for commission on the £134,000 could not be sustained. As to the £66,000, it had never been disputed that commission at 5 per cent. was due to plaintiff, and would be paid him when the Chinese Government paid the defendants. The third contract concerned the formation of the Chinese National Company, and under it plaintiff claimed (1) perpetual commission on all business done between the National Company and the Chinese Government; (2) commission on £100,000 advanced to that Government; (3) damages for breach of contract, the alleged breach being the actual formation of the National Company. Plaintiff had abandoned his first claim; the second was disposed of by his lordship's construction of the original agreement; and the third failed, because the evidence did not support it. In the result, subject only to the admitted contingent liability in respect of the £66,000 under the second contract, his lordship gave judgment for the defendant company with costs.

CHINA'S NEGOTIATIONS WITH GERMANY

The Premier's Announcement of Forthcoming Interchange of Obligations.

Peking, May 11.

The House of Representatives summoned the Prime Minister, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, yesterday, asking for a statement regarding the Sino-German negotiations. The Premier informed the house that the results promised to be greatly to the advantage of China, therein differing from the arrangement to pay the French indemnity in gold francs, which Parliament voted in 1923, but the discussions had not reached a stage where they could be submitted to Parliament.

It is understood that the negotiatoins, which were carried on very secretly between German bankers and the Ministry of Finance, provide for the release of the reserve in London against German-drawn bonds and coupons of the Organization Loan amounting to approximately $15,000,000, which will be paid to China in cash by instalments. Germany will be responsible for the payment of outstanding German bonds and coupons of the Reorganization Loan and also the Tientsin-Pukow and Hukuang loans, which will be revaldated, the obligations on which have been piling up since August, 1917. Germany's quid pro quo consists of the rehabilitation of the Deutsche-Asiatische Bank.

There is reason to believe that the arrangement has been submitted to Berlin and that if approved there it will be formally taken up by the German Legation and the Waichiaopu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

POSTHUMOUS HONOURS FOR LATE KIRIN TUCHUN

Peking, May 7.

An order issued last night in honour of the late General Sun Lieh-chun says: General Sun Lieh-chun, Tuchun of Kirin, served as a military officer for many years. As a Provincial Officer he performed meritorious services. The Government felt great regret at the news of his death, and it now orders the National History Bureau to record his official career. The sum of $3,000 is donated to the family of the late Tuchun to cover funeral expenses. Dr. Wang Ching-chun (C. C. Wang) President of the Chinese Eastern Railway, is ordered to make sacrifices before the body. The Ministry of War is instructed to consider and recommend what posthumous honours should be conferred upon General Sun.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE WARFARE IN SZECHUAN

Enrolment of Szechuanese in Northern Forces

Peking, May 11.

Gen. Liu Hsiang, Tupan of Rehabilitation in Szechuan, has sent a delegate to Peking to urge the promulgation of the appointments of Tuli and Civil Governor of Szechuan, which was passed some time ago by the Cabinet but never announced by mandate. Gen. Liu Hsiang recommends that measures should be taken to suppress the followers of Gen. Hsiong Keh-wu and Gen. Tan Mou-hsin. He says that the followers of Gen. Liu Changhsun, who were driven out of Chengtu and have since remained in the vicinity of the Provincial Capital, are willing to be enrolled with the Northern forces and he recommends that this should be done.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRADEMARK LAW AGAIN

British Chamber and China Assn. Unitedly Opposed to Registration

The British Chamber of Commerce Journal, issued [illegible] says:

At a joint meeting of the General and Trademark Committees of the Shanghai Chamber and the Committee of the China Association, held on the 8th instant to discuss the trademark [illegible] it was unanimously decided to continue the policy of non-registration. This decision was taken after a long discussion of the latest information from Peking and was conveyed to members on the following morning, a cable to the same effect being despatched to the Manchester Chamber. The meeting was unanimously of the opinion that our position will ultimately be far stronger if we base it on treaty rights than if we seek to improve it by registering in accordance with a law which has been officially rejected because it conflicts with those rights. In the Diplomatic Body's last Note to the Chinese Government, it is clearly stated that whether marks are registered or not any complaints in regard to trademark rights will have to be dealt with strictly in accordance with the existing treaty procedure. The meeting considered that much the best policy is to rely on this.

Fees for registering marks at the new Bureau are very heavy, some of them four times as high as those chargeable in the United Kingdom or Hongkong, while the administration of the Bureau as at present constituted makes it more than doubtful whether registration will have any eventual value whatever. As shown in the last issue, the Bureau has accepted marks in contravention of its own regulations and without regard to their similarity to other marks. Moreover, as the Diplomatic Body have declared that they do not recognize the new Chinese law and that marks are to be protected whether registered or not, nothing is to be gained by going to all the trouble and expense of registering. If the fact of registration is not to be regarded as strengthening the position of marks that infringe British marks, it follows that the registration of British marks cannot strengthen their position as against marks that are non-British. For all these reasons members of this Association are advised not to register. Each trademark owner must, of course, decide for himself whether to take this advice or not. It is, however, advice which has been very carefully considered, and the hope may be expressed that, in the general interest, it will be followed, the general interest being the preservation of Treaty rights, which as was stated at the beginning of these paragraphs, will ultimately be very much stronger if we rely on them alone than if we act in accordance with a law which has been officially rejected because it conflicts with them.

GEN. Li Yuan-hung, the ex-President, in a statement made after his return to Tientsin from Japan, declared that he will never again enter into public life, and is determined to retire for good.

THE "Shunpao" states that, in view of opposition from the militarists, Mr. Yang Shu-han, Civil Governor of Kuangtung, has tendered his resignation to Dr. Sun Yat-sen, who is again considering the appointment of his right-hand man, Gen. Hu Han-ming, to the post. Should the Cantonese people object as they have done in the past, Dr. Sun will again appoint Gen. Hsu Shao-ching, a former holder of the post, pro tem.

PEKING, May 10.—At to-day's meeting of the Cabinet it was decided to appoint Mr. Yao Chow-yi, formerly First Secretary of the Chinese Legation in Paris, as Chinese Minister to Mexico. The Government has decided to raise the status of its diplomatic representative in Chile from that of Charge d'Affaires to Minister Plenipotentiary. Mr. Chang Chien, Jr., who headed the Chinese Industrial Mission which recently toured Europe, America and Japan, has been appointed as the First Chinese Minister to Chile.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE BIRTHDAY OF BUDDHA

May 12.

SUNDAY was Buddha's birthday and according to decree of General Ho Feng-ling it was to be celebrated by a prohibition of killing animals for food on that day. This is but one of many indications that there is a revival of interest in the Buddhist faith. Even a casual observer may have noticed of late an increasing number of processions of pilgrims wearing a distinctive badge, a yellow sash or some similar decoration, wending their way to one of the more famous temples in the vicinity of Shanghai. Those excursionists who spent their Easter holidays in Hangchow were impressed with the vast crowds of devotees thronging the streets of Marco Polo's Kinsay, that Mecca of Chinese Buddhists. It is not only the common people who are showing renewed interest in the ancient but borrowed religion. Many prominent scholars in China, apparently weary of the ponderous platitudes of Confucianism with their parrot-like iteration, "the Master said," are turning to the teachings of Gautama and, evidently, finding there a satisfaction denied them in the cold materialism of the Classics.

There has recently come to Shanghai the third fascicule of the French savant, Henri Cordier's great work, the Bibliotheca Sinica, and each of the three unoccupied pages of the cover contains a full page advertisement of separate books on Buddhist philosophy to be issued shortly by distinguished French scholars. We have also on our table for review an English translation of a book on the "Mahayana Doctrines of Salvation" by a German doctor. Lastly, we note that even missionary writers show much more tenderness in discussing Buddhism than used to be the case. They, too, seem to have discovered something akin to their own belief in the speculations of the Indian Sage. This is not to be wondered at. The eternal unrest of humanity, the riddle of the sphinx, is the same in all ages and in all climes. Man is a restless, insatiable being. All other animals, having their appetites satisfied, are contented. In the heart of man alone deep cries unto deep and he reaches out towards the infinity that always eludes him. It is this unsatisfied craving that religion seeks to meet and, the need being the same, the proposed remedies necessarily bear a certain resemblance to each other.

To refrain from the slaughter of animals seems a fitting commemoration of the birthday of that teacher whose chief characteristic was gentleness. It would be only good for the least religious amongst us to refrain at certain times from animal food and even a smattering of Buddhist philosophy might make us better than we are. To the downright Briton a thing either is or it is not. He is a person of sharp angles and clear cut corners. Contrariwise, Buddha taught that a thing is and it is not. It is not and it is not is not. The Buddhist, therefore, is not a cantankerous positive individual who knows all there is to know about everything knowable and unknowable. It is true he has only hazy ideas about many things that are crystal clear to us, but is this really worse than having crystal clear ideas about many things that are necessarily hazy? Had the inquisitors of ancient days, who put a man on the rack or broke him on the wheel if he was not able to assent to a metaphysical definition of abstract truth, realized that the thing possibly "is not and is not is not," how much suffering would have been averted from humanity! The "cocksureness of the scientist" has become a term of reproach in our days because we are accustomed to have a new truth proclaimed with absolute certainty to-day and contradicted with more certainty next week. A little while ago it was dulce et decorum to die gloriously on the field of battle. Now it is realized that an exaggerated nationalism is one of the greatest dangers to civilization that can possibly be imagined. Our idea of a sabbath of rest is to go to church and listen to a closely reasoned discourse on a philosophical subject that we do not understand and return to a Sunday dinner that we cannot digest. The Buddhist sits in an attitude of incogitancy before his patron saint and muses of nothing. He has no nerves and no use for nerves. He does not strain after the truth because he is not sure there is any truth. He does not seek salvation because he is not sure that there is any "he" to save. It is all Maya—phantasmagoria. But when famine and pestilence come, though these too are Maya, the unbelieving Briton in the offing with his broom and bottle of disinfectant is a useful adjunct in the scheme of things.

DR. W. W. YEN AND THE SURTAX

May 12.

IT needs no great perspicuity to see that the criticisms to which Dr. W. W. Yen replies, in the interview with Reuter's correspondent printed to-day, are those of the "North-China Daily News," nor is it very unlikely that that interview took place at the invitation, not of Reuter, but of the interviewee. It is interesting to hear that "some of the so-called independent provinces are already responding to the inquiries of the Commission in its efforts to obtain statistical information concerning provincial government receipts and expenditure" and we look forward to reading the promised report. But between getting information of this kind and getting the provinces to disgorge there is a wide difference. As regards our comment that there appears no reason why the provinces should, under existing conditions, remit money to Peking, it is not at all astonishing, with due respect to Dr. Yen, that a good many people feel like this. Let us recall a little recent history. Eleven months ago General Li Yuan-hung was terrorized into resigning office and bolted from Peking. Propter hoc as well as post hoc—though rather longer "post" than had been expected—Marshal Tsao Kun succeeded in buying up the members of Parliament. Quite half China does not recognize his Government and anybody who gives it money to maintain itself in power is going to get himself into no small trouble with that half. Furthermore, what has been done once may be done again. To-morrow somebody else may oust President Tsao Kun, set up a new administration and cry that that is the only legal one and must be supported at all costs. We are all for strong centralized government; but it is paltering with terms to use the phrase in connexion with the succession of pitiful shams that we have seen in Peking in recent years.

Dr. Yen's remarks on these points are, however, secondary to his main purpose, which is to back up the intensive campaign which Peking is inaugurating to secure the two-and-a-half per cent. surtax. All the more strenuous will the effort be because this is the very last source of possibly available supply which Peking can see. The Consortium, very properly, will lend nothing. The bagmen have been frightened off by the experience of Nishihara, Marconi, Vickers, Abbott et al. So Peking sets itself to obtain what Dr. Yen calls "the fulfilment of a promise which, in fairness and justice, to say nothing of friendship, should have been carried out long ago." Observe the subtlety of the phrase. The Powers promised nothing at Washington that was not clearly accompanied by stipulations. The abolition of likin is an essential condition of the granting of the surtax, the levying of which, it is expressly stated, shall be "from such date, for such purposes and subject to such conditions as (the International Conference) may determine." We apologize for the reiteration of this off-repeated clause. But while Peking ingeniously seeks to spread the idea that the Powers made a blank promise and that they are behaving unfairly in not having fulfilled it, it is most important to remember that they surrounded their undertaking with careful conditions and would be behaving most unwisely if they allowed them to be burked. No good can come of giving either money or money's worth to Peking. To do so would be to excite antagonism all through the provinces, to burden trade for no end of any earthly use and to relieve China of the necessity of living on her own ample resources, which she must, but seek by every means to try not to do.

THE CUSTODY OF THE INSANE

May 13.

NERVOUS break-down, as it is called, is not uncommon among foreigners in the Far East. It occurs most often in Japan, next in North China, then in Central China. Cases of unmistakable insanity are fortunately rare. More numerous are the persons among us who are "peculiar." When we speak of them we touch the forehead significantly to indicate that in our judgment they are "queer," "have a screw loose," "are not all there," and so forth. How to get on with them satisfactorily is often a problem. A few may go from bad to worse and when they return home it may be deemed necessary for their good to send them to an institution. The consideration of this weird subject should induce us to take more than a passing interest in the report we published a few days ago of the law-suit, "Harnett v. Bond and Adam," in which the plaintiff, at one time insane, was awarded £25,000 for having been detained in a mental hospital after apparent recovery. An appeal has been taken and probably the case will be carried to the House of Lords. As some of the public comment has been rather sensational and may give false impressions concerning the care of persons of unsound mind in England, and may arouse groundless apprehensions among the nervous, we shall briefly consider two or three of the questions involved.

In the first place, whatever may have been the laxity of procedure in the past, it is extremely doubtful if wholly sane persons are ever certified to be insane nowadays and sent to an asylum. The present procedure is difficult, strict, and hedged about with safeguards. In ordinary cases the petition for a patient's confinement, accompanied by a full statement of all the particulars, must be made to a judicial authority by a relative or friend, who must promise to visit the patient at least once in every six months if the petition is granted. Two physicians, not related to each other or in partnership, must carefully and separately examine the patient and certify to his unsoundness of mind, and any false statement in the certificates is a punishable offence. The judge or magistrate can also examine the patient and usually does so. Of course there is little or no trouble concerning persons who are plainly wrecks. The difficulty lies with those who are very near the border line between sanity and insanity, or who pass to and fro across it. A patient belonging to this class, even when he is on the wrong side of the line, may seem quite sane to the inexperienced; and to the experienced, familiar with his history and therefore inclined to consider seriously speech and conduct which to others may seem of no importance, he may still seem insane even when he is on the right side of the line. Matters are made worse by the inability to frame a satisfactory definition of insanity. During the law-suit we are considering one physician was asked by the judge what made a man a lunatic, and he replied, "Laying undue emphasis on circumstances which in ordinary life would be [illegible] moment." Judged by this standard, how would foreigners with their irritable insistence on order, punctuality, accuracy, scrupulous cleanliness, and similar virtues, stand in the estimation of the Chinese, who care very little for these things and cannot understand the emphasis laid upon them? Would the Chinese not think we are all as mad as March hares? Physicians are compelled to use their independent professional judgment, and if their decision in particular cases leans towards the side of safety it is because of their greater knowledge of the mental and physical infirmities and instability of human nature. When an incorrect judgment is made, it is never intentional. In these days the possibility of committal to unnecessary confinement is extremely unlikely. The plaintiff in the case mentioned was admittedly insane when first placed in confinement.

The next point is even more difficult. A medical certificate is only valid as long as the patient remains in the same condition. If he so improves that it is safe for him to be at large and to return to his friends, he must be allowed to do so. To ascertain his condition during detention, official visitors see him at stated times and his friends also can visit him. The plaintiff, in the trial mentioned, after being detained a few weeks was allowed to leave on probation in the charge of his brother. Two days later he escaped from his brother and obtained an interview with Dr. Bond, one of the Commissioners in Lunacy. These Commissioners exercise supervision over all who have charge of lunatics, visit all asylums and are the guardians of all the insane, and therefore are officials of no small authority. [illegible] patient's past history, his escape from his brother, incoherent speech and such acts as flourishing a bag of money, Dr. Bond came to the conclusion he was still insane, and ordered that he should be forcibly taken back to the hospital. In this the Commissioner was held to have exceeded his powers and to have erred in not making a more thorough examination. The jury decided that the plaintiff was sane at this interview (1912) and during the nine years of his further detention, notwithstanding contrary opinions, and he was awarded £25,000 damages; £5,000 against Dr. Bond personally, and £20,000 against him and Dr. Adam jointly. The latter was the medical superintendent of the hospital and the jury decided that he had failed in his duty to the patient by not discerning when he became sane and taking the necessary measures to liberate him.

It is certain that changes will soon be made in the law so that it will be easier for patients who have regained their sanity to obtain their freedom. In some cases the liberation may be risky and friends who take charge of ex-patients should realize fully their responsibility. Despite the grievous wrong that seems to have been committed, the trial shows that institutions for the insane in England are under constant supervision; that the needless detention of those who are recovering, or have recovered, renders the physicians in charge liable to extremely heavy penalties; and that patients, apart from loss of liberty, are well treated, as the plaintiff made no other complaint than that of improper detention. What a contrast to the pitiable condition of the vast number of insane in China!

BOLSHEVIST AND BRITON

May 14.

IT cannot be thought that the speech by M. Rakowsky at the opening of the Anglo-Soviet conference which we print to-day does much to modify the evil effect of Bolshevist utterances in Russia since the conference began. Judging by the papers now to hand from London, the Soviet delegation was greeted with no enthusiasm on its arrival; its reception was polite but frigid; nor is there any reason to be surprised. Whatever Mr. MacDonald may say in his courteous manner about the Bolshevist Government finding, or believing that it found, certain measures necessary in the wrought-up state of feeling due to revolution—and we would not do Mr. MacDonald the injustice of supposing that he included the wholesale massacres of unoffending bourgeoisie in his tolerance—Britons do not like Bolshevism's ways and ruthless tyranny. Nor do they forget the Bolshevist treachery to Russia's allies during the war and the shameful peace of Brest-Litovsk, which set free all the German eastern front armies and led directly to the death of thousands of British, French and Belgians in the spring of 1918. Furthermore, the British appetite for receiving the Russian delegation would not be improved by the story, published concurrently with their arrival, of the eminent Roman Catholic dignitary, Archbishop Cieplak, one of the victims of the Soviet's blind anti-religious persecution. As "The Times" puts it, "he was liberated from the torturing round of the Lyubianka and Butyrki prisons, he was pitchforked emaciated and penniless over the frontier, and having with difficulty made his way to Riga, he groped painfully for a refuge, until at last he was recognized."

While it is evident that the de jure recognition of the Soviet was not at all generally well received in England, there is a marked disinclination to criticize Mr. Ramsay MacDonald therefor. Nothing indeed is more remarkable than the growing accumulation that one finds on all sides for the purity of his ideals and loftiness of spirit. And certainly nothing could be better than his speech at the opening of the conference. He was perfectly courteous and at the same time absolutely plain-spoken. He told M. Rakowsky that while the de jure recognition was unqualified, if it were to be of any use to either party, something more was necessary and to that end mutual security was indispensable: all credit, which was in the hands of private people, not of Governments, depended on it. In respect of propaganda, he emphasized that Britain had no wish to interfere with Russia's internal affairs and expected the like consideration on Moscow's part: and he reminded M. Rakowsky that the British Government would want more than formal assurances to that effect. His plea for full mutual frankness and confidence is framed in a fine sentence:—

"The ends we profess to serve cannot be attained unless we can get thoroughly to understand each other and unless we can carry with us the bulk of the responsible opinion in the two countries represented by both of us. If we begin by trying to deceive each other we shall go on to deceive the peoples we represent, and end by deceiving ourselves."

If we fail, Mr. MacDonald continued, you will not be able to repeat the attempt with this or any other British Government. And reminding his Russian hearers of the fears and resentment which Bolshevist methods had inspired throughout the world, he warned them that they had now to build up again the confidence which they had shattered and that this was no easy task, calling for very special efforts on the Soviet's part.

M. Rakowsky's answer is vague and unsatisfactory. While Mr. MacDonald looks frankly and resolutely to the future M. Rakowsky wastes time in reminiscence, with much about the Versailles Treaty and the League of Nations, which have really nothing whatever to do with the subject in hand. Nor, so far as one can see, have the self-righteous claims respecting the reduction of Bolshevist armies and readiness to reduce them still farther. What the British public want to know, if they are to have dealings with Russia, is, not that the Soviet is cutting down its army but that it is prepared to recognize its debts, restore what it has stolen, respect the sanctity of contracts, permit free private trading and abstain from trying to breed anarchy in England. M. Rakowsky's assurance that the Delegation has plenipotentiary powers sounds well but does not satisfy all doubts. Anyone can "call spirits from the vasty deep" but "will they come when you do summon them?" It is all very well for M. Rakowsky to take what decisions he pleases on the spot, but will the spirits of Moscow come at his bidding to the ratification thereof? His reference to the national consciousness which war has awakened in the peoples of the Far East is ominous. Great Britain and the Soviet must, he says, as a starting-point adopt the principle of respecting the independence and sovereignty of Oriental States and then they will be free of all difficulties. And what if Great Britain, mindful of her responsibility for the maintenance of peace in India, declines to bind her hands by so insidious an open pledge? Then we suppose the activities of the Moscow Propaganda University in training agents to breed revolution in India will go on unchecked? But we are by no means sure that they will not in any case.

The day after the conference [illegible] "The Times" published a very interesting message from [illegible] regarding the "Komsomolsky Zor[illegible]" comment on the Conference" [illegible] made in March which it thinks is likely to continue. The correspondent continues:—

It is reported that several of the milder Communist "communists" regard the discussions as due chiefly to the economic situation, across private trading, which the Government finds it easy possible way and openly and officially re[illegible] these concessions throughout [illegible] hope to secure as possible without [illegible] which [illegible] Many [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

thing. Many of the insane, even the very dangerous, are allowed to be at large, a constant menace to the safety of the public. Some months ago the following incidents which occurred in Anking, Anhui, were reported in the "North-China Daily News."

"A year ago a lunatic living outside the east gate of the city ran amuk with a butcher's cleaver and killed and wounded 17 people before he was finally overpowered. Later, an apparently harmless fellow struck a foreign woman in the face without any provocaton as she was passing along the street. A policeman standing by took no notice of the matter as he considered it was not his 'pidgin' to look after the insane. Only recently another deranged man, enraged because a missionary refused to give him money with which to buy more wine, got a spade with which he hacked at the compound gate and then struck a child on the head. When the missionary came out to try and get the police to take the matter in hand the madman turned on him with the spade."

This is very serious, but it is to the pitiable condition of the insane who are in confinement that we wish particularly to direct attention. According to the old Chinese laws, relatives are bound to report cases of lunacy and exercise strict supervision over them under the penalty of eighty blows with a heavy bamboo if the lunatic kills himself, and one hundred blows if he kills anyone else and it is directed that lunatics must be manacled. Consequently, the insane, particularly those who are dangerous, are rigidly confined in the home or in a monastery and the disposition to treat them cruelly is enhanced by the fear and dislike arising from the belief that madness is a form of demoniacal possession. The treatment of the insane in monasteries is deplorable, even in Japan, a most progressive country. On investigation of some of the Japanese monasteries where lunatics were confined it was found by Japanese physicians that "the whole aspect is one of misery and desolation, and the circumstances are such as to preclude absolutely the recovery of the persons so confined.....A mentally defective person is considered by his family as lost to them, and as long as he lives he is a burden to all concerned. The treatment is probably not intentionally cruel but is rather that of neglect." In China the condition of the insane confined in homes and monasteries is no better and probably very much worse. Christian missions are doing a little for these unfortunates. In various hospitals one or two wards are set apart for the insane, but there is only one institution, the John G. Kerr Hospital in Canton, which is wholly devoted to the scientific care of the insane. Chinese may appreciate this good work, but they are not inclined to do it themselves or to contribute much towards its support.

This apathetic attitude of the Chinese towards human suffering or deprivation is discouraging to foreigners who by personal service or by monetary contributions are doing all they can to relieve or cure it. For instance, the hospitals in Shanghai, which are doing an enormous amount of good among the Chinese, receive very little support from the wealthy Chinese officials, ex-officials, and merchants, living in the Settlement. With their ways of thinking they probably feel that gratitude is rather due to them as they are giving the foreigners a great opportunity to lay up merit which will stand them in good stead in the world to come by letting them minister to the Chinese sick and unfortunate. It is a pity that wealthy Chinese do not try to lay up more merit on their own account. They can be kind at times to their unfortunates, and "Benevolence" stands at the head of their list of the Five Constant Virtues.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Rowarth Case

It can hardly be doubted that all those who have followed the trial of Mrs. Rowarth and Mrs. Davis will entirely agree with the jury's verdict. The accused, judging from the report, must have made a very bad impression in court. They met every question with such flat denials as could leave but the one impression, namely, that they were not speaking the truth. Their behaviour when confronted with the amah, first refusing to recognize, then admitting that they did know her, was highly suspicious. So too was the sudden departure for Hongkong, on the heels of the police having discovered the amah. The police, by the way, are much to be complimented on this discovery. To pick an unknown girl out of the thousands in Shanghai was no mean accomplishment, and is a further illustration of the really wonderful work that the police do in the maze of Shanghai's streets. The case of Mrs. Rowarth and Mrs. Davis is one of great rarity and a moment's reflexion shows that, when such a crime occurs, it deserves the severest punishment. That punishment has been meted out, and one imagines it will be a long time before anyone else has the temerity again to match themselves in a similar way against the machinery of British justice.

The Use of Money

One of the most important and essential means to the conduct of commerce and the progress of business is the use of other people's money, secured at rates of interest on which the amount borrowed, the period it is required for, the use to which it is to be put, the status (we almost said "nationality") of the borrower and lender, and many kindred conditions have an important bearing. It being axiomatic that those using other people's money have to pay for it, it appears inconsistent with the true precepts of finance and commerce that in Shanghai we have bodies and concerns which hold, without paying interest or offering to pay it, and presumably using it to the best advantage to themselves, money which is the actual and undisputed property of others. We refer to the custom whereby certain public utility concerns, such as the Municipal Electricity Department, the French Electricity and Water Company, the Gas Company, etc., demand and receive from customers a deposit before supply is made of any of the commodity for which the concerns are in the market. These deposits must amount, in the aggregate, to a large sum, on which, so far as we know, not a cent of interest is paid to the actual owners. One cannot help comparing this abstract procedure with the system obtaining at one of the biggest local stores, whose customers, on opening a credit account, are required to make a deposit of $200, on which interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum is allowed. Surely this is a contrast which really should constitute an analogy! If one concern can pay for the use of its customers' money, why not others? The average person or firm paying for water, or gas, or electricity, is not so rich that an annual rebate of even a small sum would be either despised or spurned. Possibly such a course is impracticable; but if so, could not the interest, or a portion of it, which customers are denied, be put to some useful purpose? There is no dearth of deserving charities in Shanghai.

The Flying Regulations

We cannot quite agree with our correspondent "Amused" in the view that he takes of the regulations drawn up by Peking for the arrival of British aviators in China. Farcical they certainly are if considered only in the light of Peking's notorious inability to get any of its orders obeyed outside its own walls. But the more glaring aspect of the regulations is, we think, that they are meant as a deliberate insult, a contemptible way of "gaining face" throughout China and the world by treating the aviators in a humiliating way. What the people of China will think of this manœuvre we do not know. To the outside world it way simply appear that Peking has been gratuitously ill-mannered. Contrast with this the courteous behaviour of Japan, who has done everything in her power to facilitate the world flights even to the extent of allowing supply stations and landing places to be arranged at naval posts where hitherto no foreigner has been admitted.

A Farrago of Nonsense

A few days ago we commented on a report sent by Reuter's Peking correspondent to the effect that Mr. Chow Teh-san, Director of the "Chefoo-Weihsien Railway," was to succeed Mr. Chu Ting-chi as Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan line,—pointing out that there is not, never has been, and is in no prospect of being, a Chefoo-Weihsien line. An authoritative correspondent now informs us that there was not a shadow of truth in the whole paragraph. In the first place Mr. Chu Ting-chi never was the Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway, but was and still is Assistant Director, has not resigned his position, and has no intention of doing so. Secondly, the new Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Administration is Mr. Shao Heng-chün. Thirdly, the Mr. Chow Teh-san referred to is, our correspondent says, without question Mr. Chao Te-san, who was the first Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan line after the rendition of the railway by Japan, but resigned in consequence of the destruction of a bridge more than a year ago. Mr. Chao is now Director-General of the Lung-hai Railway, a higher post than that of Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway. He is probably the best, certainly one of the best qualified Chinese railway engineers. Altogether it would hardly be possible to imagine more mistakes than those in the paragraph on which we first commented. No doubt this paragraph was simply taken from one of the Chinese papers in Peking, and, if so, the amazing rubbish it contains is a further illustration of the necessity of quoting the source of supply instead of sending it down under the authority of a great news agency.

China's Diplomats

The foreigner does not as a rule pay much attention to the Chinese Diplomatic Service abroad, except on the intermittent occasions when it bleats feebly for a little money, or when one of its representatives has been telling some more than usually embroidered fairy-tale for the obfuscation of foreign listeners as to the real state of affairs in China. The article, therefore, that we reproduce on the opposite page from the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" is worth reading. Those who noticed the paragraph about China raising her representative in Chile to the rank of Minister must have wondered why. But when we further learn that a man of no diplomatic experience is to have the post, it becomes stranger still. The truth is probably that Mr. Chang Chien Jr. wants the dignity of the post, that as he is a rich man it will cost China nothing and that, as Dr. Wellington Koo puts it, he will train on there for other posts. More serious is the statement that Germany and Japan are both neglected, that there is an "Expectant Minister" lounging about in Peking at $500 a month, and that China continues to be represented in London only by a Chargé d'Affaires. This sounds rather hard on Mr. Chu Chao-hsien, who has certainly discharged that part of a Minister's duties which consists in the telling of the aforesaid fairy-tales with great ability. But if we are not mistaken, the substantive Minister in London is Dr. Wellington Koo himself, and it has even been unkindly whispered that this is why the Legation remains in the hands of a Chargé, in order to provide a refuge among the mammon of unrighteousness, if and when the Waichiaopu becomes too uncomfortable.

Snakes is Snakes

What amounted almost to a demand that Mr. Sowerby should explain the apparent coincidence between the departure of popular sportsmen and the simultaneous arrival of snakes, frogs and tortoises, was made and he has answered it, but his answer lacks conviction. It matters not that Mr. Sowerby says that snakes and eels are erroneously referred to by those names and that they should be something else beyond pronunciation, and it is of little moment that the tortoises were turtles or terrapins, but it is of vast importance to insist that the snakes were snakes and not eels. They had diamond heads, patterned skins, yellow underbodies and forked tongues, and they undulated through the water and up the banks, instead of going through the water at a smart wriggle, as an eel does. Furthermore, they were up to four, five and nearly six feet in length, and in that dimension they would be conger eels, which, fortunately for the Chinese who went after them, they were not. Mr. Sowerby's explanation of the phenomenon is remarkably interesting and will add a hitherto unknown chapter to the knowledge of Chinese customs possessed by most foreigners. There is no end to the quaint fashions of the Chinese and it seems remarkable that a people with a nation-wide passion for cooping beautiful song-birds in atrociously small cages should on one day in the year give freedom to other living creatures. It would be better if they would liberate the poor birds. In this case the snakes (or eels) and turtles gained little by their release, for most of them met a distinctly cruel death at the hands of the sampan dwellers and longshore loafers. Thanks at least are due to Mr. Sowerby for guaranteeing that the Bund salamanders and the Bubbling Well Road alligator were things with a real existence.

Shanghai—the Wonder City

We print to-day the first of a series of articles that will appear on "Shanghai—the Wonder City of Asia," from the pen of an old resident just returned from leave. That those of us whose noses are perpetually at the grindstone lose the sense of perception of changes round about us, is undeniably true. It does us good, therefore, to read descriptions of this remarkable city by one who is in a position to note certain changes that have taken place within the last two or three years—who, however, was doubtless as blind to these things as the average business man before his trip home. Shanghai has changed very much indeed during the past few years. Some of the changes unquestionably are not for the better. One could grow pessimistic if he contrasts the present year of grace with 10 or 15 years ago. The days of true Oriental magnificence and romance in commercial life have departed. To-day we have the telegraph everywhere, the fractioned farthing, the surfeit of an ingloriously growing competition, and altogether Shanghai is a changed place both socially and commercially. We constantly hear the old resident say that the place is too big. Well, that may be. Others have different views. All things in life have to give way to the march of civilization and what is called progress. That is the reason why we would recommend that the article referred to be read, as it undoubtedly will be, by most of our readers.

Unrest in the Punjab

We reproduce to-day from the "Pioneer," on another page, an extremely interesting article on the unrest in the Punjab and the villainous campaign of mendacity with which it is fomented, the blank, unsupported denial of the Government's statements of the truth and repetition of the old falsehoods. And in this connexion, though Harbak Singh is in gaol, someone else in Shanghai is carrying on his work, for another of the lying and scurrilous leaflets about the supposed ill-treatment of the Sikhs reached us only two days ago. Meanwhile the important announcement that the Punjab Government have decided to appoint a committee to report on the possibility of undertaking further legislation regarding Sikh gurdwaras and on the best means of dealing with the kirpan question is greeted with great satisfaction in India. Commenting on this the "Pioneer" says that the decision is the direct outcome of the speech made by Sir Malcolm Hailey in replying to the motion in the Legislative Assembly on the Sikh difficulty. Whatever opinion may be held of the cause of the serious situation which has arisen in the Punjab and of the responsibility for the development of the Akali movement into a political menace of the first magnitude, there will be general endorsement of the Punjab Government's decision. It once more shows that Sir Edward Maclagan is ready and anxious to find an acceptable solution to the problem, and he has been fortunate in enlisting the services of a president of undeniable distinction and impartiality. Apart from Sir William Birdwood's family traditions and from the fact that he served for nearly 20 years with the 11th Bengal Lancers, which was originally raised in the early days of Sikh comradeship with the British army as the first regiment of Sikh Irregular Cavalry, he was closely associated in Gallipoli with the most heroic chapter of Sikh bravery in the Great War. His knowledge of and sympathy with the Sikhs will, therefore, be of special value in the difficult task set before his committee.

These are thoughts to which all true Sikhs will respond. It is particularly grievous to all Britons that there should be any misunderstanding between themselves and the Sikhs of all Indian races and we are sure that in the long round the true feeling of the Punjab will be too much for the seditionists.

Thou Shalt Not Smoke

We cannot congratulate Dr. Polk on her letter appearing in to-day's correspondence columns insisting on the right of the non-smoker to prohibit the use of tobacco, providing a majority can be induced to enforce such restriction. The argument of "individual right" in the matter may be carried to wearisome length and always brought to the same conclusion (assuming extremists on each side), that a man has as much right to ruin his constitution by excessive use of tobacco as another has to loathe the obnoxious weed and endeavour to prohibit its use. But the matter is less one for extreme action than for courteous and considerate adjustment by reasonable people. However, the prohibitionist mind always seems to run to the "abuse" of this, that and the other, and for ever longing for some Grand Inquisition to save people from themselves. Some one (and may the duty be not ours) might venture to assure Dr. Polk that there are smokers who use tobacco with discretion and courtesy, particularly when at "a dining," and who would not for worlds pollute the immaculate atmosphere of their hostess's drawing-room if aware of the weed being taboo. One sympathizes, therefore, with the young Y. M. C. A. gentleman "with some ideals of life and fellowship," who so far traduced these virtues as to produce a cigar in Dr. Polk's presence and—horrors!—light it. Who knows but what this may have been the poor fellow's unenlightened method of demonstrating his ideals. Certainly, one cannot suppose that his action was designed to incur the suppressed indignation of his hostess and inspire a letter to the Editor exhibiting his bad form to the public gaze. The incident is a warning to hostesses who dislike tobacco. Let them, when next arranging a dinner party, exhibit at their doors a notice "Smoking Strictly Prohibited." The guest arriving with a cigar in his pocket would then have the pleasant alternative of throwing the beastly thing away or returning home.

"Deratization"

Just as shipowners dislike the practice so may all lovers of "the well of English pure and undefiled" devoutly hope that the above monstrosity, signalized to-day by Reuter as a new word, will not find its way into the dictionary. From the context we learn that it means the process of removing rats from a ship, otherwise one might have thought that it had some obscure reference to the Versailles Treaty and the fruitful efforts of Germany to evade its terms. Everybody knows that the richness of the English language consists largely in its readiness at all times to assimilate useful words. "Commandeer" came from the South African War; "camouflage" we all know whence; "movies" is really the best word yet found for the cinema. But there are limits: to "stand for" any course of procedure instead of to "stand" is ugly and unnecessary; and what excuse can possibly be offered for the hideous "nearby" as an adjective, especially as it can invariably be used in the correct form "near by" by a simple transfer of the word qualified. Some words which have an ugly sound, however, have great antiquity to justify them. For instance, "preparedness" frequently heard during the war: the writer came across it in "Eikon Basilike," the reflexions of King Charles I in prison in 1649. But we should certainly look in vain for any such authority for "deratization."

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

LIANG SHIH-YI'S ACCOUNT OF CHINA TO BRITISH READERS

A Federation of Provinces Forecast: Centralized Power Impossible Beyond Limits: Britain's Opportunity in the Far East

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

London, April 16.

Mr. Liang Shih-yi is in England and is giving out to the various papers which visit him interesting interviews. Perhaps I may append a typical one.

The English people should view Chinese politics or rather the Chinese situation as they view affairs in Canada. In Canada you have very much the form of Federal Government which is suited to China. Such an idea is a very old one in my country. Even in the Ching dynasty there was a division between the provinces and it was only in the last 10 years or so of the dynasty and also just after the death of Yuan Shih-kai that the Military Governors wanted concentration of power in the Central Government. It was due to this desire, in fact, that the Ching dynasty fell and that the present internal strife exists. Internal strife has, in fact, developed in proportion to this concentration of power and also to the concentration of revenue which has gone into the pockets of these Military Governors. The Federal system which would suit China would leave power to the Central Government only in respect of foregin affairs, means of communication and the national debt. Everything else should be decentralized.

The Coming Conference.

There is indeed a movement now on foot to form a League of Economic Organizations which will convene a conference to which representatives of the banks, commerce and finance will be invited. Out of this conference should be created a constitution. The English people in the Far East, whether Government officials or merchants, approve the policy of concentrating power in the Central Government because they feel it is better to have one man to deal with instead of a number, and with that idea in their heads they have so far given their backing to some of the Military leaders who wish to unify China by military power. But China is a big country with a big population and you must see it is an impossible task for a handful of men to develop such a big country. That is why I view the position of Canada or the British Empire as a whole as affording an example for China.

There are a number of military leaders—the majority indeed—who approve the conference I have mentioned. Much depends on the people and on the support of the Provincial Assemblies which are now being formed. Progress will be slow and it is impossible to expect immediate success. All we can do is to work and wait. Without question the country expects improvement both on economic and commercial lines. There are two classes of military leaders—one who want to get hold of the entire revenue of the country and for that reason have the whole population up against them, and another class whose idea is to oppose the centralization of Government. They will not molest the people of their own provinces, and they aim at adjusting these differences without recourse to fighting.

China's Feeling for Britain.

If you wish to know the state of feeling of the Chinese people towards Great Britain, I will say this. We consider that in commercial matters there is no country like yours. The connexion is of such long standing that all Chinese hope for [illegible] still closer commercial relations between the two peoples. They are therefore looking forward to a satisfactory settlement of the surtax question in accordance with the Washington Conference and the Mackay Treaty of 23 years ago. The likin issue centralized is impossible of solution, but if decentralized easy. The conference which is to be held at Shanghai to discuss the surtax question should be formed not only of representatives of the Central Government but also of representatives of the Provinces and representatives of the People. Thereby there will be effective. Assuming there were 20 Chinese members two may have one from the Central Government, two from the provinces, and 10 from the people. It would take too much time to enumerate all the reasons for this scheme but I will give one. The yield of likin is 87,000,000 Mexican dollars, and if all power were centralized in the Central Government then it would have all this vast sum and the provinces would be left with nothing. This would only create greater chaos and strife in the country.

Trade Methods Criticized.

As regards your commercial methods, I am bound to say that they are to-day not up to date, and if your traders do not get into touch with the young and progessive elements of the people and modify your system, in about 20 years time England will be ousted from the Chinese market by the Japanese and the Germans. Opinion in China feels that English capitalists in China are trying to monopolize trade even in respect to industries which the Chinese people themselves can well carry on. Still from the long period of transactions between the two peoples the Chinese have learned to respect and admire the morals in trade of the English people, and that in this respect they are better than many, indeed I may say "any" other nations.

There are still many openings for British trade especially in respect of manufactured goods, machinery, railway material and so forth. As a result of the Great War the English can, I imagine, scarcely find a market in Europe, but China is still non-industrialized, still in its infancy in the arts, sciences and manufactures and can therefore offer a good market to England. At the same time, China abounds in raw materials which can be exported to England and thus by an exchange of commodities reduce the cost of drafts and remittances. As regards railway development, I can speak with the experience of 20 years since all the lines were under me as Minister of Communications and I was responsible for contracts for about ten thousand miles of line. Owing to the War, some of these contracts have not been carried out, but even now in selected areas there is plenty of room for the investment of capital. In China indeed railway development is thoroughly remunerative. We, therefore, welcome foreign capital which will find an ample return."

It would appear that this visit is only one of pleasure and study, but not of business. Next week the party will visit Scotland, and soon afterwards leave for the Continent as they hope to inspect several countries.

HENDERSON'S Purchasing Agency, the enterprising firm which recently opened to purchase for outport residents whatever they may require at local shops at most reasonable rates, is now issuing a monthly bulletin for the further convenience of its clients. The bulletin is crammed with information as to prices of anything from new spring frocks to radio sets and should be a boon to those living in the interior.

MR. HSU YUAN, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, is, it is understood, making inquiries regarding possibilities of repatriating the local Russian refugees to their homeland, as he has received intimation that some 300 refuges desire to return as soon as possible, but are unable to do so because of lack of funds and because they are unable to secure free tickets on the Chinese Government Railways.

HARBOUR NEEDS OF TSINGTAO

Businessmen Exercised as to Who Shall Control It for Greatest Efficiency in Working

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, May 5.

The question of harbour facilities continues to be the subject of discussion amongst the business men of this port, but as things stand at present, it does not look as though there is going to be an early solution. Opinion is divided in favour of three measures, control by the Customs, control by the Kiao-Tsi Railway and control by the Administration. The majority of foreign business men are in favour of control by the Customs, the majority of Japanese business men is favouring the second measure, i.e., control by the Railway, while the Chinese are almost without exception backing the third measure, control by the Administration.

When Governor Kao En-hung dissolved the coolie monopoly held by the Kiao-Ao Transportation Company, His Excellency did away with an organization of which the merchants may have never said a good word. Prior to the advent of the new regime, the coolie monopoly was the bone of contention between the foreign merchants and the Administration, it being argued by the former that shipments were improperly tied up on account of the methods arising out of the monopoly, thereby causing heavy financial losses to those directly interested in the trade of this territory, and by the latter that except for certain seasonal occasions and events the monopoly was not as responsible for the tie-up as claimed.

The Old Administration

As the local paper has pointed out, whereas it took Mr. Kao En-hung just five minutes to put the monopoly out of existence, the old Administration's policy was one of dillydally. Fictitious reasons were advanced by the men then in power and repeated protests elicited no satisfaction. It is probably no exaggeration to say that were it not for the advent of the new regime, it is more likely than not that former conditions would still prevail, despite the fact that the protests of the foreign merchants, just prior to the dispersal of the old officials helter-skelter out of action, had passed from the preliminary stage to the consular stage.

It All Depends

But, as stated in the opening paragraph of this communication, the whole question is not near a solution. Over a month has elapsed since the dissolution of the monopoly, but it would seem that nothing definite has been decided upon, as to what should replace it. The Administration, according to Mr. T. C. Kuo, the Director of General Affairs, favours one of the following two methods:—control by the Administration or an arrangement of two stevedoring companies being in charge of the loading and unloading of ships. According to Mr. Kuo—and he gives the impression of knowing his business—it would be unsatisfactory to let the field open to all comers due to the lack of sufficient equipment. He thinks that an arrangement whereby two stevedoring companies are allowed to handle harbour facilities, there would be a sufficient check on possible inefficiency arising out of a monopolistic system. Failing such an arrangement, Mr. Kuo thought the Administration should be given a chance to prove its worthiness.

To the foregoing two propositions, the foreign merchants are in opposition almost unanimously. They claim that control by the Administration would be tantamount to a monopoly whereas an arrangement whereby two stevedoring companies are given the privilege of loading and unloading ships in port would not be much better than a monopoly. Anything savouring of a monopoly is sure to meet with the solid opposition of the business community. "Once beaten, twice shy" would seem to be the stand maintained at the present time.

Control by Railway

Some of those who oppose the control of harbour facilities by the Railway admit that the project in itself has much to speak of favourably. This being its terminal port, and over 80 per cent. of the merchandize brought here being for export, the logical conclusion should be that the Railway is best fitted to handle the loading and unloading problem of the port. It is admitted that the volume of traffic which a line would carry cannot exceed the capacity of the terminal as has been proved by the American practice of railway control of terminal facilities. The amount of merchandise now exported from this port is very great, and in the years to come will increase on a huge scale, especially in the case of coal. It is predicted that by 1930, the annual quantity of coal exported from Tsingtao will exceed 1,250,000 tons. All this tends to point favourably towards the control of harbour facilities by the Railway, which could be made to guarantee a fixed sum annually to the Administration whereas the latter could have the final say in all questions arising between shippers and the Railway as to the efficient handling or otherwise of loading and unloading operations. But they point out that the drawback against this control is the debt of $40,000,000 hanging over the head of the Railway which will have to be met eventually and that failure to meet this debt will undoubtedly cause the Japanese to grab the line back. Consequently, should the Railway be placed in charge of the harbour administration, the Japanese could not be prevented to grab it also, thereby threatening the giving of preferential treatment to Japanese merchants at the expense of the rest.

On the other hand, the Japanese are almost solidly in opposition of the proposition to have the Customs placed in control of the harbour administration. Their fear seems to be that inasmuch as the Customs is largely controlled by the British, control by that body would not be altogether impartial.

In this connexion it is worth while noting that the "Tsingtao Leader," altogether Japanese owned, favours neither the one scheme nor the other. It has suggested two measures, viz., that either the shipping companies each contribute a sum of money towards the establishment of one mutual transportation organization, or that the Administration be allowed to control the whole thing itself, with the assistance of an advisory committee appointed by foreign merchants, composed of one American, one Briton, one German and one Japanese. These two suggestions are meeting with the approval of a number of merchants, but, as already stated, the whole issue does not appear to be any nearer a solution than it was when the new tupan caused the Kiao-Ao Transportation Company's monopoly to be dissolved.

THE FIGHTING IN SZECHUAN

Northern Position Strengthened by Enlistment of Szechuanese

Peking, May 9.

Further light on the withdrawal of Gen. Wang Chen-ping's resignation is given by the report that the Military Council informed Gen. Wang that it could not permit the transfer of a portion of the 23rd Division to Paotingfu, as there were already too many troops there. The Division, therefore, is to remain at Machang.

The Government has telegraphed to Gen. Lu Chin-shan, Commandant of the 8th (Hupeh) Division in Szechuan, asking him to inquire into the relations of Generals Yang Sen and Liu Tsun-hou and furnish a report.

According to recent reports from Szechuan the position of the Northern forces there has been considerably strengthened by several neutral or hostile bodies of Szechuanese coming over to their side, and Liu and Yang are now co-operating satisfactorily.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FALL OF KUEILIN

Peking, May 13.

An official despatch from Changsha, quoting missionary and Chinese press reports, states that Gen. Shen Hung-ying captured Kueilin on April 25. Gen Shen's artillery shelled the city, the inhabitants of which were in danger of starvation when the city fell. The despatch does not mention the fate of Gen. Lu Yung-ting, who formerly controlled Kueilin.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

REPORTED DEATH OF DR. SUN YAT-SEN

Ill for Some Time with Brain Fever: Unconscious for two Days at Headquarters

Hongkong, May 18.

It is reliably reported that Dr. Sun Yat-sen has been unconscious for the past two days, suffering from brain-fever. It is now confirmed that he has died.

Later.

It has been known for some time that Dr. Sun Yat-sen has not been enjoying good health. The vernacular papers now state that he is suffering from brain-fever, possibly cerebro-spinal fever. It is reported that Dr. Sun is lying at headquarters and that he is being attended by foreign and Chinese doctors, while Dr. Sun Yat-sen's son, Mr. Sun Fo, is in constant attendance.

It is generally acknowledged in authoritative quarters in Hongkong that Dr. Sun Yat-sen is seriously ill, but his reported death cannot be verified at present. Naturally, Southerners would do their utmost to maintain secrecy as long as possible, as news of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's death will probably lead to chaos in Canton.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

No Official Corroboration.

After categorical announcement of his death, it appears that Dr. Sun Yat-sen is quite alive. On Tuesday a message was received through Reuter's Agency to the effect that Dr. Sun had been unconscious for two days, suffering from brain fever, and it was rumoured that he had died. On Wednesday morning Reuter's received telegaphic news from Hongkong that Dr. Sun had died at 4.30 a.m., while on the other hand the Eastern News Agency received a telegram from Canton to the effect that his condition was not so serious as rumoured and that he was to attend a military conference on Wednesday at the headquarters of the Kuangtung troops.

In reply to a message sent to our own correspondent at Shameen on Tuesday, at 6 p.m. on Wednesday we received a reply dated Shameen, May 14, 1.30 p.m., which read:—

"Doctor sick not dead."

Our correspondent at Shameen (the Foreign Settlement of Canton) is in close touch with the authorities there and his telegram is therefore most probably based on the latest information supplied by the headquarters of the Canton Government.

Kuomingtang Denial.

Shanghai, May 14.

Mr. T. V. Soong (Dr. Sun Yat-sen's brother-in-law), of the China International Corporation, Shanghai, writes to us under to-day's date as follows:—

"In view of the repeated rumours of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's death, I shall be pleased if you will publish the following:—

"The Kuomingtang here received a cable, sent last night (May 13) from Dr. Sun's Headquarters in Canton, in response to an inquiry after Dr. Sun's health, reporting that, owing to a cold contracted when he addressed a labourers' gathering at the Canton Christian College, Dr. Sun was confined to his room from 4th to 9th. He has now completely recovered, and has attended office since the 10th. There is thus absolutely no foundation to the rumour of his severe illness or demise."

It will be noted that the telegram which the letter states was received from Dr. Sun's Headquarters was dated May 13, while the report of the death from Hongkong says it occurred on Wednesday morning.

Reuter's correspondent at Hongkong, who telegraphed on Wednesday that Dr. Sun Yat-sen had died at 4.30 a.m., now adds in a message dated the 15th instant:—

"The death of Dr. Sun Yat-sen is being strongly denied by official circles in Canton; nevertheless the consensus of well-informed Chinese and foreign opinion in Hongkong inclines to belief in the truth of the report. It is impossible to obtain satisfactory confirmation because no visitors have been permitted in Dr. Sun's headquarters for some days and a very vigorous censorship has been maintained over the Canton press."

MOTORING IN KUANGSI

New Road Financed by French: Some Motor Accidents: Aeroplanes Coming

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Lungchow, Si., Apr. 26.

Work is continued on the Lungchow-Langson motor road. A loan (?) from the French Colonial Government of Tonking has made possible the completion of this work and the metaling of the road is rapidly nearing completion. Regrading of dangerous sections and widening in narrow places as well as better embankment as precaution against slides is also being done. Mr. Cadet, the French Consul of Lungchow and Nanning, has been instrumental in the carrying out of this work and through his untiring efforts the work is being rapidly pushed toward completion.

During the past three years the commerce between Lungchow and Tonking has increased materially due greatly to the efforts of the French Consul and the Commissioner of Chinese Customs, Mr. M. Cupelli.

Great advancement has been made in the Customs of Lungchow and its outstations since Mr. Cupelli has been Commissioner. A better control of the border posts of Shuiko, Pinger and Nankuan has been established and trade has been greatly benefited.

A motor service between Lungchow and Langson has been instituted by M. Delair of Langson. A service fo five cars and one trailer is in operation carrying passengers and freight between the two cities.

The cars being used are of Citroen make with a bus body capable of carrying six passengers. The latest addition to this service has been a Citroen Bus propelled by a tractor tread. This car with trailer attached is used for both passenger and freight service and is capable of attaining the speed of 25 kilometres per hour.

Two Serious Accidents

Two serious accidents have already occurred on the road, one of the cars turning over on its side and causing its occupants to receive bruises and scratches. The other, a previous accident, occurred when a new car in making a sharp turn did not keep to the road but plunged down a steep embankment into a ravine. It dropped a distance of about 30 feet, wrecking completely the hood and shroud of the car as well as the wheels and axles. In a miraculous way the six occupants of the car were unharmed, the heavy roof beams of the bus taking the jolt and thus saving the passengers. Another remarkable feature was the fact that the engine too escaped with little damage. After raising it to the road and making temporary repairs the car was taken to Langson where it is now going through a complete overhauling. Six or seven hundred dollars worth of repairs are necessary before it will be again in condition to make its regular run.

Visit of French Aviators

Preparations are being made and an aviation field prepared for visiting planes from Tonking which will make a friendly call to Lungchow shortly.

The electric plant which has been out of running order for over five months owing to breakage of machinery will soon be in condition again. The burning lights have made the hot nights almost unbearable, and so the repairing of the broken generator will be very welcome.

The hot weather has made an early appearance this year the heat registering 98 in the shade, and nearly 130 in the sun. The wet bulb too has been high running but a few points lower than the dry bulb in the shade.

Ice from Hanoi

Ice is now making a regular appearance in Lungchow, being brought from Hanoi, nearly 200 miles away. The small sum of 30 cents per kilo is charged.

The foreign community has been increased by the arrival of Mr. Urban Newman, who is taking up work in the Christian and Missionary Alliance.

EARTHQUAKE INSURANCE PROBLEMS

Japanese Companies Paying a Percentage on Claims for Loss by Fire

Tokio, May 5.

The long-deferred fire insurance problem, arising out of last September's catastrophe, is from to-day receiving its final settlement, the companies concerned having started paying out a certain percentage of the claims, after coming to an arrangement with the Government.

Claims up to Y.5,000 in value are to be paid to the extent of 10 per cent.; those above Y. 5,000 and below Y. 10,000, 3 per cent.; those above Y. 10,000 and below Y. 15,000, 2 per cent., and those above Y. 15,000, 5 per cent.

The foregoing percentages are standards merely, and will vary according to the financial condition of the insured.

Insurance companies' offices have to-day been crowded with claimants, in some cases so numerous that police had to be sent out to preserve order.

As far as possible the people insured for small sums have had preferential treatment.

Payments will continue for the next three days.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BANKING AFFAIRS IN MANILA

Civil Action Against Ex-Directors of National Bank: Further Claims to Follow

Manila, May 12.

The following ex-Directors of the National Bank were sued civilly this morning to recover the losses incurred during the Harrison Administration: Mrarchibald Harrison, brother of the ex-Governor-General, Senator Fernandez, and Messrs. Delaney, Madrigal, Concepcion, Berry and Encarnacion. The suits have been long delayed, and it was only the strongest pressure by Governor-General Wood that resulted in action being taken. Six other complaints are expected to be laid shortly.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A BEAUTY SPOT OF CHEKIANG

Birthplace of Famous Men and Centre of Learning: Harvest Prospects Good

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Yenchow, Chê., May 6.

I have just returned from a journey in the Shuenan county. A most glorious sight was the countryside for the pulsation of spring had brought forth the wild flowers to every possible phase of splendour. The air and sky belonged to mid-summer rather than that of early spring and the empurpled hills presented a pleasing sight.

For the most part, the oil plant has been gathered and the prospects of the wheat harvest bid fair to be one of the finest for many years. The exceptional mild spring has enabled the farmers to get the rice planting well in hand. The beans have produced in abundance and the tillers of the soil seem to have a happy intuition that all will go well with their crops this year.

Shuenan is a well wooded district and from its secluded valleys some men of historic renown have come forth. A short distance from the town is a small village which goes by the name of the "Lion's Mouth." It is a beautiful spot by the river side and on a lonely knoll, under a camphor tree, is a tablet marking the place where Fang Lah, the rebel leader of renown, during the Sung Dynasty, was buried. The "Lion's Mouth" village was his birthplace and here he returned to die after his exciting escapades in and around the province of Chêkiang. In after years his bones were removed to Hangchow and buried somewhere in the environs of the West Lake.

In scholarship the Shuenan county holds a unique position. In one period alone no fewer than three Senior Wranglers of the Empire brought honour to the countryside. One village boasts of an Emperor's wife while two other villages each sent a Prime Minister to guide the ship of state.

A Great Seat of Learning.

According to the popular legends of the common people Shuenan is famous for its—"Iron well: A small golden hill: A brass bridge: A live dragon mountain." To the north of the town, about two miles distant, is the famous "Stone chasm college." It is situated in a narrow defile and this seat of learning was founded many generations ago. The origin came about through the example of one man who inherited a love for learning. It was his custom to take his books to this quiet spot and sitting upon the rocks pursued his studies. One day he failed to return, and when search was made it was found that in some mysterious way the rock on which he sat cleft asunder and he was buried alive in the chasm. This incident greatly stirred the energies of the aspiring students of the county and the man's own son, after years of serious plodding, became a senior wrangler. The school was founded to keep green the memory of father and son. For many years the buildings have been in decay, leaving not a rack behind. Quite recently, through the enterprise of a local scholar, the whole place has been reconstructed, and has taken on a new lease of life with some 50 students in residence. A special course of study, including English, is being given, and the object of the school is to fit men of average education for the teaching profession—all in the space of two years.

The annual tree planting celebration passed off with high glee to the boys and girls of the various schools of the district. This year, one new feature was added, that of planting trees by the roadside in the city. If this scheme is maintained the town will become very picturesque in the course of a few years. By way of city improvement, several vegetable markets have been erected and special precautions against street litter are being taken.

During a spell of hot dry weather a fire was started on the mountain side. Owing to a high wind prevailing at the time the flames spread with remarkable rapidity and enveloped two firewood cutters whose escape was cut off and were burnt to death.

HUMILIATION DAY

Students Stopped by Police When Preparing Anti-Foreign Demonstration

Peking, May 7.

There was very little observance of National Humiliation Day (May 7, the anniversary of China's acceptance of the 21 Demands) in Peking. The Students' Union resolved to hold a meeting in front of Tianan Mên, and had many pamphlets prepared denouncing the imperialism of the Powers, with special reference to the gold franc case.

A report of these activities came to the knowledge of the police, however, and the Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police sent a message to the students warning them against making any demonstration, adding that they were free to give vent to their feelings inside their schools if they felt inclined.

Twelve aeroplanes flew over Peking this morning and some of them dropped pamphlets containing the words "Don't forget Humiliation Day." It is reported that General Feng Yu-hsiang's men at Nanyuan observed the occasion in a more solemn manner.

The meeting of the Senate was postponed on account of Humiliation Day.

Streets in the vicinity of Chienan Mên were strongly guarded by police this afternoon as a precautionary measure against possible student activities.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE TRANSIT OF MERCURY

A Telescope Presented by Queen Victoria to Li Hung-chang

TIENTSIN NEWS SERVICE.

Tientsin, May 8.

The transit of Mercury was witnessed this morning by several professors in the Peiyang University, who spent most of their spare time during the past few days putting into shape a six-inch objective telescope with which to make the observation. This instrument was presented by Queen Victoria to Viceroy Li Hung-chang more than 40 yars ago, but later came into possession of the Peiyang University.

With a magnification of 200 and toned with a sun filter of blue glass, the planet was plainly visible as a small black speck as it crossed the lower half of the sun. Although no exact times were taken the transit was observed to commence at about 5.30 and end at 1.30 approximate local time.

Long Lines of Carriers: Trade Now Open and Flourishing with Good Profits

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Lungchow, Si., Apr. 26.

Opium no longer is a novelty. Great opium bands make regular trips to Yunnan, where the drug is cheap; and return, with tons of it. The caravan often numbers from a few hundred men to 2,000. Each band is heavily armed and well loaded down with this merchandise. The opium is carried by pack-horse through Yunnan to Kuangsi border cities where it is met by the local caravans. Coolie carriers each with a load of 600 ounces then carry it through to its final destination. Tons of it finds its way through Lungchow or towns near by, to Nanning and cities in Kuangtung. Large profits are made, in that the price per ounce, here, and in cities farther inland, is about one dollar. The tax being paid and a receipt for the same being shown, the merchant is free from further molesting by the authorities. Opium is smoked openly on all river boats and the air reeks with its sweet sickly smell.

THE Ministry of Justice has ordered the officials of the various law-courts and the district procurators to take immediate steps to see that none of their subordinates accept bribes, reports the "Journal of Commerce." It reminds one of Aesop's fable about belling the cat.

NO CANNIBALSM IN HANKOW

Chinese Press Reports of the Killing of Babies to Make Pies Untrue: How the Rumours Originated

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, May 6.

Our Wuchang Correspondent sends a denial of the appalling story of cannibalistic practices in Hankow which appeared in the Shanghai Chinese press on May 2.

A horrible story has been circulating recently in Chinese circles in Hankow. It is too horrible to be true; but, being untrue, it throws a ghastly light upon the kind of rumour that can get about in the popular mind, and can even obtain credence in educated circles. The story is, that certain low class Chinese from Honan, resident in Hankow, have been kidnapping children and killing them and using their flesh to make meat pies which they sell.

So far as one can discover, the rumour had its origin as follows. A number of boys who were playing football in an open space in the native city kicked their ball over a fence, and on climbing over to get it, they discovered the body of a child lying there. The child was alive, and proved to be one which had been stolen from its parents two days before. A number of other cases of kidnapping children happened about the same time in the neighbourhood. Unfortunately, none of the others were found.

Kidnapping Wave.

The kidnapping of children—generally girls—is unfortunately not at all an uncommon thing in the poorer parts of Hankow. Even in the case of fairly old children, who might be expected to make some resistance or struggle, the thing can be easily done. It is said that the kidnapper gives the child a blow in a particular part of the head, which renders the victim, not insensible, but incapable of resistance, and able only to follow where the captor wills.

When a child is lost, it is the custom for the parent to go out in the street ringing a gong in order to make the fact known and call the neighbours to assist. It was owing to this custom that it became known that an extraordinary number of kidnappings were taking place, and public opinion began to be roused in the neighbourhood. A search was made among the mat huts near where the child had been discovered by the footballers, and in some of these huts, occupied by Honanese pie sellers, shoes and other articles of children's clothing were found. It is also said that bones and skulls were found; but this may perhaps be questioned.

Out of these discoveries arose the gruesome story related above. The feelings of the mob were deeply aroused, and one of the huts was set on fire. The excitement grew and began to take on the aspect of a riot, which would have resulted in the lynching of the suspected Honanese, had not the police arrived and arrested them. Seven were arrested and brought over to be placed in the Wuchang gaol. It remains to be seen what development, if any, will follow upon their trial, if it ever comes off.

Peripatetic Education

The developments of modern methods in education in Chinese schools rather take one's breath away. Apparently the travel-method is at present very popular. Some 50 or 60 boys and girls from the graduating class of the Nanchang Girls' Normal School paid a visit to Wuchang last week. They were entertained in one of the Wuchang girls' schools and paid a visit to the Wu Han Athletic Sports. After this, they are to visit Shanghai. Evidently, the modern students education is to be considered incomplete until he (or she) have made a tour of several provinces.

ACCORDING to the "Shunpao" an agreement has been entered into between the Canton Administration and a number of Japanese capitalists for the establishment of a new mint in the "City of Rams." This will begin working at an early date. The "Eastern Times" states in this connexion that the value of the copper coin in Canton is becoming lower and lower daily, and a "mandate" will soon be issued forbidding the import of such coin in future.

THEFTS IN WENCHOW MISSION

Exciting Capture at Methodist College After Many Depredations

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wenchow, Chê., May 5.

A series of thefts extending over a period of six months and aggregating [illegible] value of nearly $800 culminated with the capture [illegible] The thief had the advantage of knowing the College from the inside, having been a student for a few months until he was expelled nearly four years ago. He has since been expelled from two other educational institutions. The time chosen for most of his depredations was service time on Sunday afternoons when all the students were absent from the dormitories. Then entering the students' rooms he would take off his own outer garments and clothe himself in as many robes as he could conveniently carry, reassume his own outer robe and with as much money as he could lay his hand on quickly make good his escape.

His capture was rather dramatic. One of the teachers was making a search for missing articles and went into the assembly hall with [illegible] The thief evidently hearing him enter, stepped out of one of the windows on to the outer ledge and pulled the window after him. This was a very precarious position being only a few inches wide and at least 20 feet from the ground. Unfortunately [illegible] threw his figure into relief and he was seen from another part of the College. After that his apprehension was only the matter of a few minutes. With 30 students who had suffered considerable loss and nearly 200 more of their sympathizers on his trail there was not much hope of escape. The accompaniment of noise might have led the uninitiated to think that a [illegible] themselves immensely in their search for any accomplices, even going on to the roof with lanterns. The thief confessed all and the students finally consented to accept half the value of the stolen property from the father, a man in poor circumstances, and the thief was set free after three days in [illegible].

FRANCO-JAPANESE ENTENTE

Governor of Indo-China on Need of Combination

Tokio, May 9.

M. Merlin, the Governor-General of Indo-China, and Mme. Merlin with their suite were received in audience by the Prince Regent to-day.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

May 10.

The French Indo-China represent- [illegible] Foreign Office. This morning's discussions covered general arrangements for future meetings.

Replying to the toast of his health at a banquet by the French Ambassador, M. Merlin, the Governor-General of Indo-China, stated that Japan and France would seek to co-operate toward their mutual interests in the Far East. The products of Indo-China and Japan, he said, made co-operation very desirable to both "Agricultural Indo-China and Industrial Japan."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

High Order for M. Merlin

May 10.

Mr. Merlin, the Governor-General of Indo-China, has been decorated with the First Class Order of the Rising Sun with Grand Cordon, and M. Kircher, the Director of Customs in Indo-China, with the Second Class of the Order of the Sacred Treasure. The other members of the Mission have received various decorations, the Chairmen of the Chambers of Commerce being decorated with the Fourth Class of the Order of the Rising Sun.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Banquet to M. Merlin

Tokio, May 13.

Viscount Kiyoura, the Prime Minister, gave a banquet to-night in honour of M. Merlin and the other French visitors. Proposing the toast of their health, Viscount Kiyoura expressed the hope that France and Japan would enter into closer commercial relations and thus cement the bonds between the two countries.

M. Merlin's reply was couched in similar terms.

Tokio, May 14.

At a meeting of the Franco-Japanese conference to-day, the Japanese representatives presented their case for alteration of the tariffs to Indo-China. The French representatives will reply to it after consideration.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SHENSI GOVT. CONTRACTS CAPTURED BY GERMANS

Arsenal and Copper Mint only Part of Big Development Scheme

From Our Own Correspondent.

Sianfu, May 1.

Recently Sianfu has seen an unusually large number of foreign visitors, many of whom have been here on business at the Governor's invitation. Great industrial enterprises are contemplated. It is said that an arsenal and a copper mint have already been actually purchased, while a light railway between Sianfu and Tungkuan, a line of small steamers between Shanchou and Linkou, and a cotton mill for Weinan are being quoted for.

The contracts for both the arsenal and mint have been procured by German firms, and at present there is a German in Sianfu negotiating for other contracts, in connexion with the proposed schemes. It seems that other nationals have little chance of competing with German firms as they are unable to give such advantageous terms and such long credits.

Huge City Fire.

Two days ago this city saw a great conflagration, when the premises of a great many merchants were completely gutted. The fire was said to be due to a red cat seen [illegible] about the premises! A more credible reason might easily have been suggested, for at present everything is exceedingly dry owing to the long continued drought.

Farmers are naturally terribly anxious about their crops. Rain is urgently needed to save the wheat, and to make it possible to sow the cotton.

For quite a long time, a very serious disease has been making havoc amongst the cattle of this area and the loss to the farmers has been very considerable.

Flour at Famine Prices.

Flour has now reached an unprecedented price, being nearly twice as high as it was in the famine year, still soaring, and there is no reserve of grain. If, however, flour is scarce, opium is plentiful: the new crop is already in bloom and the provincial treasury will soon be groaning under the weight of an opium tax of $13 per mow.

Aeroplane over Capital.

A few weeks ago we had a visit of an aeroplane—the first one seen here since the days of the Whitewolf. It brought officers from Marshal Wu Pei-fu, who came as guests of the Governor. They were entertained royally, and seemed to be on the very best of terms with Shensi officials, despite the fact that this visit synchronized with the publication in coastal-papers of articles dealing with a probable invasion of Shensi by Wu Pei-fu. Apart from the fact that there has been heavy recruiting from Honan, we here know nothing of the alleged strife.

ORGANIZATION DAY OF U.S. 15TH REGT.

A History of Stirring Times in Far East of Which It May Well Be Proud

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, May 5.

The 15th U. S. Infantry began a [illegible] days' celebration this morning of its "Organization Day," May 4, 1861. The programme to-day included the presentation of Battle Streamers by Brigadier General Wm. D. Conner at a parade on the regimental drill ground at Woodrow Wilson and 13th Streets and an Officers Tea Dance at the Astor House Hotel. To-morrow there will be an inter-Company Field and Track meeting on the Recreation Ground from 8 to noon; Competitive mass athletics and battalion drill from 2 p.m. to 5 and special Company dinners afterwards.

Following talks to each company by their commanders, the entire regiment paraded and marched to the Woodrow Wilson Street drill ground, where the Battle Streamers were tied on the Company Colours by General Connor. Among these streamers were those for engagements fought at Chickamauga, Murphysborough, in the Indian Wars, in Cuba, in the Philippines, and in China during the Boxer troubles.

The streamers represent a fighting history of which the Regiment is justly proud. Organized as a Regular Unit of the Northern Forces on May 4, 1861, at the outbreak of the American Civil War, the Regiment participated in many of the decisive engagements of those four bloody years. From 1865 to 1898 it served at various posts in the Southern States, after which it was sent to Cuba in the Spanish-American War. In 1900 the 15th came to China to aid the allies in the Boxer uprising, and left China the same year for active service in the Philippines, when Aquinalde led an insurrection. In 1902 they returned to America, only to be sent out again in 1905 for further duty in the Islands. It returned again to the United States in 1907 and after four years at Fort Douglas, Utah, the Regiment was sent in 1911 to Tientsin, where it has remained ever since.

The parade this morning was notable for the attendance of four Generals and four Colonels including the Commanding Officer of the 15th. Perhaps the most famous of these was Major-General Omar Bundy, who is passing through on his way to Shanghai. The others were Major-General Yoshioka, Commanding the Japanese Troops here, Major-General Yang I-teh, Police Commissioner of Chihli, General Connor, Colonel Barnes, Chief of Staff to General Connor, Colonel Sautel, Commanding the French Colonial Infantry, and Colonel Greenhill, Officer Commanding British Troops in North China and the Loyal Regiment. North Lancs. They were accompanied by their Staff Officers.

OPERATION ON MR. BESSEL

Result of Assault at Fengtai: Fortunately Successful

Peking, May 7.

On Mr. Bessel's return from the period of rest it was found that the swelling had reappeared and the condition was one of traumatic hernia. He was operated on for this condition by Dr. Taylor at the Peking Union Medical College Hospital and has made an excellent recovery. Without such a radical operation as was undertaken there would have been a very grave risk of the hernia becoming strangulated at any moment, which would involve serious risk to life. He will be able to resume light work in about a week and is likely to be fit for years of service.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Mr. Bessel was badly assaulted at Fengtai some weeks ago by Chinese soldiers on the railway. The man responsible for the outrage has not yet been brought to justice.—Ed.

MURDERED MISSIONARIES OF SZECHUAN

Boys' School Chapel to Be Built by their friends as a Lasting Memorial

From Our Own Correspondent.

Friends who have read of the murder of the Rev. Mr. R. A. Whiteside and the Rev. Mr. F. J. Watt last August, will be glad to learn that a memorial is to be erected at Mienchow (Mienyang) West China, in the shape of a Chapel for the Boys' Boarding Schools there.

Both these missionaries were working in Mienchow up to the time of their death. The Rev. F. J. Watt, B.Sc., London, as principal of the Middle School had the need of a School Chapel much at heart, a site having already been allotted for it. The Memorial will also include all the missionaries who have given their lives for the West-China Mission (C.M.S.) and also those who have retired after many years of service.

A Committe has been formed to forward this scheme, and all information can be obtained from:—

Rev. Sydney Jackson, (Chairman). 86, Greyhound Lane, Streatham, S. W. 16. or Mr. J. H. Mott, (Hon. Treasurer). 34, Westbere Road, West Hampstead, N. W. 2. by whom all subscriptions will be welcomed.

FIRST LAKE STEAMER ON THE TAIHU

New Passenger and Freight Service on the Great Lake: A Beautiful Trip

From Our Own Correspondent.

Soochow, May 12.

We have been hearing quite a good deal of the new lake steamer to be put on the run between Wusih and Huchow across the Taihu. This new lake ship has just been completed in Shanghai and yesterday she had been towed from Shanghai to nine miles south of Soochow, when she had to pass under a high seven arch bridge, the only bridge between Shanghai and the Taihu.

Yesterday morning just beyond this bridge the "Tai Wu" was mounting her rather high funnel, and also her wheel house on her upper deck. Both of these had to be removed in order that she might pass under this bridge. About 6 p.m. yesterday this work was practically complete, and it is hoped that she may sail for Wusih to-day under her own steam.

At a distance she appeared to be a little larger than the Vulcan, and her sister tugs in Shanghai. She has twin screws and a very light draft. She was carrying two life boats, and there appeared to be quite a large search light on her bridge.

It is said she will make a daily round trip from Wusih to Huchow, and back: and that the service will begin in about 10 days. The Huchow people will be in luck, for they may now reach Shanghai across the Great Lake, and then by rail from Wusih. This will also be a most delightful route to Mokanshan. There is no more beautiful scenery in the Far East, the Inland Sea not excepted, than the northern end of the Great Lake. The islands and the mountains are wonderfully beautiful. On this run one will get all the cool breezes of a sea trip, and also in rough weather one will get all the effects of the Yellow Sea and the English Channel.

The Great Lake has been on the map for centuries but this is the first time in her history that she has carried a real steam passenger and freight line. All success to this new venture, that will be watched with interest!

RIVAL GENERALS IN KUANGSI

Lu Yung-ting Candidate for Post of Tuli: Peking's Man against the South

From Our Own Correspondent.

Lungchow, Si., Apr. 26.

Numerous rumours are reaching Lungchow from Nanning and cities lower down the West River, of impending trouble. The main source of uneasiness seems to come from the Kueilin District where Marshal Lu Ying-ting is reported cut off by a body of troops operating on behalf of General Shên Hung-ying, the unsuccessful aspirant for the office of Tuli of Kuangtung.

Marshal Lu Ying-ting, former Inspector General of the two Kuangs, after assuming the office of Provincial Superintendant for Peace and Reconstruction, made a visit across Kuangsi, through the Liuchow, and Kueilin District to Southern Hunan where a conference was held with General Ma Chi. General Ma was reported ready to advance upon Kuangtung, down the Fu River viâ Wuchow. Plans for this campaign have evidently fallen through and General Ma has returned North.

Marshal Lu returned as far as Kueilin en route to Nanning, the capital of Kuangsi. Anxiety for the safety of Marshal Lu is felt in that on his trip only about 2,000 troops were taken along as an escort and the district through which the journey lies is the turbulent Liuchow country which has been infested the past three years by large hostile military bands and former soldiers turned robbers.

A former lieutenant of Marshal Lu, Lu Wan-ko, is reported in command of several thousand troops at present affiliated with Shên Hung-ying, and with this force is attempting to cut off the return [illegible] of Lu Ying-ting. Severe [illegible] is reported.

Marshal Lu has twice refused the offer made by Peking to the office of Tuli of Kuangsi, for which office Shên Hung-ying is now striving. To gain this end General Shên Hung-ying is said to have promised allegiance to Dr. Sun Yat-sen.

This past week Marshall Tan Haoming, former Tuchun of Kuangsi, left Lungchow for Nanning where he will re-establish his offices. General Tan has assumed the "Superintendency of Defence for Kuangsi Province," since the relinquishing of that office by Marshal Lu, nearly a year ago.

All the available troops in Lungchow and Kuaishen Districts have been sent down the West River to Nanning.

Various reports have reached Lungchow and have been current in Nanning regarding General Lin Tsen-ting, Military Governor of Kuangsi. Since Marshal Lu's return from his forced exile of 1921, what little power Gen. Lin had, has been taken away. Marshal Lu has been gradually gaining power in various portions of the province and has the confidence of the people, while General Lin is but a figurehead.

Mr. W. N. Ferguson, F.R.G.S., District Inspector of the Salt Gabelle, has just arrived in Peking from a tour of 3,000 miles along the Mongolian frontier. During this tour he encountered bandits only once—a band of ten who were locked in local police quarters. People were just beginning to sow their spring crops and the roads were in fairly good condition. The hunting is good, there being plenty of geese and duck and some antelope. Mr. Ferguson has spent over 28 years in China, and there are few men as familiar with the remote fastnesses of China and Tibet as he is. He is the author of "Adventure, Sport and Travel on the Tibetan Steppes" and other works.

TEMPER RUNS HIGH IN JAPAN

Opposition Fighting Elections on "Privileged Class" Cry But Sorely Divided

Tokio, May 9.

The election campaign, which is being very hot to-day before [illegible] to-morrow, culminated this morning in a free fight between Seiyukai and Kenseikai canvassers in the city of Fukushima, says the "Kokumin." The local police were unable to control the situation and appealed for the assistance of troops. The excitement continues tense.

May 10.

To-day's election fighting is mainly, if not solely, on the question as to whether the present "privileged class" Government enjoys the confidence of the country and whether the electorate endorses the "illegal dissolution of the Diet" in January last. It is true that even if the Diet had not then been dissolved it would have run its normal course and been dissolved in the spring in accordance with the Constitution, in which case the election would no doubt have become a mere struggle for party suppremacy, whereas now all are united in an effort to overthrow the Ministry, an agreement to that end having been reached by the leaders of the three major groups, the Seiyukai, the Kenseikai and the Kakushin Club, at the time of the formation of the Ministry.

A Purely Domestic Issue

Separate Party programmes, such as are familar in the West, are practically non-existent at this election. If they do exist, the differences are so slight as to be negligible and the popular cries of "universal suffrage," "Constitutional Government" and "Upper House reform" are the features of the appeal to the electorate. The issue is thus seen to be a purely domestic one, with foreign relations not being taken into consideration.

As the campaign has advanced, the apparently united front of the Opposition parties has with difficulty withstood the strain of long-established party differences and the advantage has more recently been conceded to the Government supporters, consisting of that section of the "deserters" from the Seiyukai, entitled the Seiyuhonto. At present the Seiyuhonto are claiming a majority of seat for themselves at to-day's poll.

On the other hand the Kenseikai are confident that they will benefit from the split in the Seiyukai party and materially increases their strength even to the extent of a majority over the others.

Competent observers, however, predict about an equal representation for the Seiyukai, the Kenseikai and the Seiyuhonto, with perhaps a slight advantage in favour of the last-named party, leaving the balance of power in the hands of an unusually large number of Independents, most of whom may be expected to side with the Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Fighting Round the Booths

May 10.

Brilliant sunshine favoured election day, when the candidates and canvassers were early astir. The booths opened at 6 o'clock this morning and closed at six this evening.

In Tokio the voting passed off quietly, but reports from the provinces indicate that the excitement has resulted in many places in clashes between the rivals, sometimes ending in bloodshed.

The greatest interest centres in Morioka, where Mr. Takasashi, the President of the Seiyukai, is facing a very hot struggle.

More than 800 canvassers have been arrested for alleged violation of the election law.

The counting will take place to-morrow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Further Instances of Violence

Tokio, May 11.

Mr. Takahashi, the leader of the Seiyukai party, has been elected for Morioka.

Later.

With the counting of the returns, except in the principal cities, postponed till Monday, the final results of the elections will not be known till Tuesday or even Wednesday.

The most interesting result hitherto announced is that at Morioka, where Mr. Takahashi's majority of 49 is larger than was anticipated.

Reports from the provinces regarding the incidents on polling-day multiply the instances of violence and clashes between canvassers, giving evidence of the keenness of the struggle for votes, while allegations of "Government interference" are prominently featured.

The opinion is generally expressed that the Government must be in a minority against the combination of the Opposition parties.

Later.

The returns until 4 o'clock this afternoon are as follows:—

Kenseikai	37
Seiyukai	21
Kakushin Club	8
Seiyuhonto	16
Business men	6
Independents	16

Among those defeated is Mr. Nakahashi, former Minister of Education and the leader of the Seiyuhonto.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Faction Fights Between Partisans of Rival Candidates

Tokio, May 12.

Though the election is over, the announcement of the poll at Morioka, Numadzu and elsewhere led to a recrudescence of disturbances. Partisans of the defeated candidates stormed their rivals' committee-rooms, doing considerable damage to property. Factional fights at Numadzu necessitated calling up police reinforcements from neighbouring towns before order was restored.

The results up to noon to-day were as follows:—

Kenseikai	63	seats.
Seiyukai	36	„
Seiyuhonto	41	„
Kakushin Club	16	„
Businessmen's Party	9	„
Independents	28	„

Later.

The results of the elections up to five this evening were as follows:—

	seats.
Kenseikai	103
Seiyukai	65
Seiyuhonto	62
Kakushin Club	21
Businessmen's Party	9
Independents	38

—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Osaka, May 12.

The popular election cry, "Down with privileged class Government," appears to have carried the day. The results up to seven to-night conclusively confirm the view expressed by businessmen here on May 9 that the result of the elections would probably be much like the British election in December, namely, that the Government party would fail to secure a majority and that the seats would be divided among the principal parties, none of which would hold a majority. The Government's supporters are far short of the majority, while the Opposition parties have already secured 242 out of 464 seats in the Lower House. The Kenseikai is leading and will probably return 150 members.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Opposition's Large Majority: Demand for Resignation of the Premier

Tokio, May 13.

With an overwhelming defeat of its partisans certain, the Cabinet met this morning to discuss its own fate. It is understood that the debate was intense. The Cabinet was divided into two nearly equal factions, the first, to which, it is understood, Viscount Kiyoura belongs, favouring resignation after the State celebration of the Prince Regent's wedding early in June, and the second, headed by Dr. Mizuno, the Home Minister, urging remaining at least until the Diet convenes and then possibly resorting to another dissolution.

The returns, with only nine seats missing, show that the Government party are barely one-third of the new House, the combined Opposition commanding 282 seats, not counting probably 20 Independents who are likely to join them. The Kenseikai strength is the outstanding feature, and that party is capable of demanding that its President, Viscount Kato, shall be the next Premier.

The latest count is as follows: Kenseikai 153, Seiyukai 101, Kakushin Club 28, Seiyuhonto 110, Businessmen's Party 12, Independents 57.

Official Returns

Later.

The official returns of the elections are as follows:—

Kenseikai	156	seats
Seiyukai	101	„
Kakushin Club	50	„
Seiyuhonto	120	„
Businessmen's Party	8	„
Independents	57	„

The foregoing are complete except for two seats at Hokkaido, where a storm on May 10 necessitated postponement of the election.

The opinion is generally expressed that Viscount Kato, the leader of the Kenseikai, will be asked to form the next Ministry, though it is recognized that agreement with the other groups is necessary in order to hold his own. A coalition party Cabinet which will boldly retrench and plan out a definite economic and financial policy is finding favour in business circles.

Later.

It has practically been decided that the Cabinet will not determine its attitude vis-a-vis its defeat in the elections till after the celebration of the wedding of the Prince Regent, believing that a political change is not desired by the nation during the festivities. The Mizuno faction in the Cabinet is of the opinion that it can win over sufficient independent and other votes to make the majority and insists that this be tried before the final step is taken. It is understood that the Premier and the other Cabinet Ministers have little confidence in Dr. Mizuno's plan and are determined to resign if, after the celebration, the Opposition is still the majority. Therefore, it appears very unlikely that the Cabinet will wait to face the special session of the Diet which is now called for June 25.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Joy in Osaka.

Osaka, May 13.

The people of Osaka are delighted over the defeat of the Government, and the newspapers are demanding the immediate resignation of Viscount Kiyoura. Businessmen here believe that Viscount Kato will be the next Premier because his party is the largest of the three main parties. The Kenseikai's financial policy of retrenchment is generally approved here, but it is feared that it will cause further depression in business.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ARMS FOR CHINA

Somebody Gun-running on Large Scale But Who For?

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, April 11.

Someone is evidently gun-running to China on a very large scale. In the House of Commons this week Mr. Ponsonby, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, said in reply to Mr. J. H. Harris that he was aware that attempts were being made to ship from a European country large consignments of arms and ammunition for war purposes in the East, and that attempts had been made to persuade a British shipping company to transport these munitions. The attention of Lloyd's had been drawn to the China arms embargo.

I understand the Government trying to ship these arms to China is the Czecho-Slovakian Government, that the order is about £2,000,000 in value and that the material is partly—used French and partly also quite new being manufactured in one of the armanent works in that country. The only puzzle is to know who in China is buying this vast volume of war material.

I understand that Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires in this country, has been very busy at the Foreign Office trying to ascertain further guidance as to what is happening in this mysterious matter.

Peking, May 6.—Colonel Chang Yun-chi, who was in captivity with the Japanese officers of the Yihyang Maru in Szechuen, has reached Hankow on his way back to Loyang. Colonel Chang was released in March last on payment of $10,000. He was sent to Szechuen by Marshal Wu Pei-fu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

GOLD COINS FROM YUNNAN

For $5 and $10: Coined by Tuchun Tang Chi-yao with His Impress

Some time ago it was reported that, for the first time, probably, in the history of China, gold coins had been issued, by Gen Tang Chi-yao, former Tuchun of Yunnan, whose post is now known as that of Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Director of Military Affairs of Yunnan and who is ruler virtually of a small kingdom in the far off south-western province.

Two of these coins, which are in different denominations and naturally vary in size, one of $5 and the other of $10, have now fallen into the hands of the "North China Daily News," the former for $8 and the latter for $15. The $5 coin is slightly smaller than half-a-sovereign and a fraction large than a ten-cent piece; the $10 is approximately the size of a sovereign. The shape of the coin and the impression are the same, with the exception of the amount of their value.

On one side is an impression of a bust of Gen. Tang taken evidently from one of his portraits. This shows Gen. Tang in uniform, and bald-headed. Above are seven characters "Chun Wu Yuan Fu Chen Chun Chang Tang" which mean High Viceroy and Director of Military Affairs, Tang. On the reverse are two flags in the centre (one a national emblem and the other a war banner). Above these is a five-cornered star and below two tassels. Outside a ring which encircles these are the characters "Yung Wu Kung Wo Chi Nien Chin Pei (Commemmoration gold coins for the upholding and the protection of democracy), while below are five others, separated from the other characters by two stars, denoting the value of the coin. These being the characters "Tang Pei Yen . . . Yuan" (To be used as $. . . silver currency).

Whether Gen. Tang has minted these coins with or without the approval of the Central Government we are unable to say, but it is possible that the Peking Government, (or even Dr. Sun Yat-sen, from whom Gen. Tang professes to take orders), knew nothing of the coins until they were issued because Tang is "independent" of the Peking Administration.

Illegal Minting

Whilst on the subject of minting without permission from the Central Government, it may be noted that not a little interest is being taken in the proposal made by a number of Chinese financiers to uphold national currency and to put a stop to illegal minting. It has been suggested that the Chambers of Commerce, the Chinese and Foreign Bankers' Associations, the Native Bankers' Guilds and merchant organizations throughout the country should desist from selling silver or copper bars to the different mints; that no coins manufactured by these mints be accepted or sold; that searching investigations should be made into the amount of currency in circulation; and that coins should be selected from time to time and sent to Shanghai for analysis so that the results may be broadcast here by the Chambers of Commerce and the Bankers' Association with the assistance of the newspapers.

The financiers recommend also that banks which do not act in accordance with these suggestions be boycotted.

PEKING'S ROADS TO BE IMPROVED

Peking, May 11.

At yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet Dr. Wellington Koo and Admiral Wu Yu-lin pointed out the deplorable condition of the roads in Peking, which has recently been the subject of unfavourable comment by both foreigners and Chinese, and suggested that part of the proceeds of the new house tax should be devoted to improvements of roads. This was agreed to by the other members of the Cabinet, and it was decided that the matter should immediately be brought to the attention of the proper authorities.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The purchase of 1,000 Browning pistols and 500,000 rounds of ammunition by Gen Ma Lien-cha, Tuli of Anhui, is reported in the Chinese press.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY IN WUSIH

Wife Shot Dead by Husband who then Shoots Himself in The Secret Garden

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wusih, Ku., May 13.

At the foot of Wei San lies an exquisite little garden, surrounded by high walls and entered through a most unpromising white plaster "foreign" gate, which is utterly misleading as to what lies within. Owing to this concealing gate and to the charm of the garden, the foreign residents of Wusih have nicknamed the place The Secret Garden, after Mrs. Burnett's delightful child story of that name.

This idyllic spot was the scene, on the day of China's Humiliatiion, of a sad double tragedy, when a young man took his wife and two children to the garden, and while they were crossing a small stone bridge over an artificial lake, he shot and killed, first his wife and then himself. It is said that he is being considered a martyr to patriotism and that the deed popularly viewed in that light, is being much extolled, and is only too, apt to have imitators when the next anniversary comes round. A more sordid rumour, however, has it that the deed was due to depression over overwhelming losses in unfortunate investments.

Bad Weather for Silk.

The season is particularly unfavourable for silk worms, and unless the weather speedily improves the year will be a very unsuccessful one. Mulberry leaves are very low in price. The wheat crop has also suffered from the rain and cold. The new East water gate is now open to the passage of boats and furnishes a useful short cut between the country and city.

Dame Anderson's Visit.

Dame Adelaide Anderson visited Wusih for two days last week and in the course of her visit inspected a number of cotton mills and silk filatures, and addressed a small meeting of interested Chinese and foreigners. Dame Adelaide impresses one strongly with her fine balance and common sense, and instinct for adapting her ideas to an unusual environment. She was accompanied by Miss Dingman, who also addresed the meeting.

ATTRACTIVE SUMMER RESORT

Large Influx of Vistors Expected in Tsingtao: The Publicity Bureau

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, May 6.

The new Administration is showing in various ways a businesslike attitude, the latest exhibition of energy, in contradistinction to the old let-things-slide policy, being the establishment of a publicity bureau, with foreign pressmen as honorary advisors. Mr. T. C. Kuo, the Director of General Affairs, and Mr. Thomas Tsung-te Gow, the Governor's private secretary, are the men responsible for the efforts, now begun, to boost Tsingtao as a summer resort. This year, the advertising campaign must necessarily be on a limited scale, due to the insufficiency of time available, but be that as it may, several thousands of pamphlets in English, appropriately illustrated, are being printed and will be broadcast within the next few days.

Tsingtao, during the coming summer, bids fair to be the gayest holiday resort in the Far East. With the disruption of tourist facilities in Japan, as a result of the earthquake disaster of last September, a large number of foreign residents in other treaty ports have applied for reservations in local hotels. Mr. Kuo and Mr. Gow are of the opinion that, in view of the forthcoming influx of visitors, life in Tsingtao during this summer will be a very gay one, and are consequently doing all in their power to safeguard the welfare of the foreigner.

During a meeting with foreign pressmen the other day, in reference to the Administration's campaign to boost Tsingtao, Mr. Kuo said:—

"Of the various treaty ports of China, Tsingtao offers a very happy combination of business opportunities and residential attraction. It morever has an excellent climate and all the requisite facilities to render it a highly satisfactory place as a summer resort.

"It is true that the foreign population is not now what it used to be, on account of post-war conditions, but, as time goes on, when commerce is in full swing, there is bound to be an increase in the number of European, American and Japanese residents.

"In the matter of climate—always an important factor to the Westerner—Tsingtao is unsurpassed by any port in the Orient. And the fact that it is connected with Hongkong, Shanghai, Tientsin, Peking, Hankow and Japan by frequent steamship and railway services, makes it accessible to people residing in these places."

Trade Facilities.

Reverting to the inauguration of the publicity bureau, Mr. Gow, the Governor's secretary, said that its purpose was also to furnish information to people interested in the trade of this territory. Any query as to the price of any given commodity, the quantity available at any one time, the possibilities of development, and so forth, will receive the bureau's attention.

"We realize the task before us is fairly great," said Mr. Gow, "but that makes it all the more interesting. No achievement that is at all worth while has ever been made without up-hill work."

Attractions for Holiday-Makers.

Hotel men and pension owners are busily engaged in effecting preparation so as to cope with the predicted influx of visitors. The Strand Hotel has undergone extensive renovations and alterations under the guidance of Mr. T. Herlihy, one of the most experienced hotel men in the Far East. The bathing boxes are being repainted and taken good care of, and the process of allotting them to local residents, after the number required for the guests of the hotel had been set aside, will be effected very shortly.

The Administration has signified its willingness to bear half the cost of putting the band-stand in proper shape, and has undertaken to have the beach and the promenade patrolled in an efficient manner, thereby guaranteeing the maximum of safety and the minimum of inconvenience to visitors. The riesha traffic will be regulated and rules for its efficient control are now being formulated.

ROADBUILDERS BUSY IN HONAN

First Motor-car Makes Its Appearance in Fukow: Popularity of Bicycles

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Fukow, Honan, Apr. 30

I have recently been on a journey to the southwest of the province, where travelling has been very unsafe for the past year or two. Last year barrow-men could hardly get through, and now every one is rejoicing that with the removal of "Old Foreigner," (Lao Yang-jen) the roads are once more open.

Part of the road is the old highway from the southwest of China to Peking which has been used for centuries. Orders have gone forth from Marshal Wu Pei-fu to construct a motor road. I saw wooden posts marking out the road, but all that seemed to have been done was the throwing up earth from the side on to the centre. The road runs over the foothills and will be difficult to construct properly, as the freshets from the hills would make havoc of it during the summer.

Great excitement was caused in this city by the advent of a motor, the first that had ever been seen. But with roads deep in dust and sand, the driver said he would not like to bring the car here again until rain had laid the dust. There is, however, talk of a service between Hsuchow on the railway and Taikang. This is said to be the work of the military, and it is promised that the highway will be ready for traffic in a month's time, but something ought to be done to the roads first. Taikang has a service to Kaifeng. Chowchiakow has cars running weekly to the railway at Yencheng, so the motor seems to have come to stay. It can be imagined what a boon is the motor-car, when a long two day's journey ten or 12 hours in a bumpy springless cart is reduced to a ride in a car to one of three or four hours. Here there quite a demand for the ordinary bicycle. It is amusing to be still accosted by the villagers with the cry "the foreign horse has come."

The Northern Drought.

In common with the rest of the province, this district has been suffering from drought, no snow and hardly any rain having fallen all the winter. The prospect of the wheat harvest was very poor, but a downpour last week saved the situation. For the first time since the revolution, the City God was taken out at the spring festival, and carried round in procession, the official and gentry going in person to burn incense. The official is one of the old school.

Heavy fines are being inflicted on those selling opium, or even smoking it. Fortunately last autumn no opium was planted in this district. I expect the farmers are congratulating the moves that they did not do so, as those who sowed the drug in the neighbouring district of Yenling have been heavily fined and had to uproot the crop as well.

I am sorry to have to report a recrudencence of kidnapping and holding to ransom wealthy farmers. One who has been living in the city for the last year returned to his home, only three or four miles away, and hardly crossed the threshold, when armed men seized him. His not resisting was the means of preserving his life, as another man the same day was shot dead while trying to defend himself. The poor people have no means of redress as they are not allowed to possess arms, and if they call for help, the robbers promptly fire their houses. The bandits are evidently former followers of the "Old Foreigner," who on his death, have scattered all over the province to carry on business on their own account.

GREAT significance is attached, states the "Eastern Times," to the fact that the family of Marshal Wang Cheng-ping, Governor of Chihli and Associate Governor-General of Chihli, Shantung and Honan, has left for Mukden. Although a leading member of the Chihli party who took a prominent part in the Chihli-Fengtien war two years ago, Marshal Wang is a native of Fengtien. It is rumoured that he is about to throw in his lot with Marshal Chang Tso-lin.

JAPAN AND SOVIET

Resumption of Negotiations

Peking, May 14.

Mr. Yoshizawa, Japanese Minister to Peking, called on M. Karakhan this afternoon and, after handing a memorandum to the latter, held a conference lasting three hours and a half. It is understood that M. Karakhan will call on Mr. Yoshizawa at the Japanese Legation to-morrow morning.

Later.

It is learnt on good authority that in the course of to-day's interview between Mr. Yoshizawa and M. Karakhan, the latter expressed his desire that the Russo-Japanese negotiations would make good progress, and that the outstanding feature of the interview was that both parties endeavoured to reach an agreement by making mutual concession.—Eastern News Agency.

Tokio, May 15.

This morning's papers predict the possible re-opening of formal Russo-Japanese negotiations in the near future. It is understood that the Foreign Office has given instructions to Mr. Yoshizawa, Japanese Minister in Peking, with regard to M. Karakhan's recent Note regarding the status and powers of the Russian and Japanese representatives.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking Hankering for Karakhan

Peking, May 15.

During a discussion in the Senate yesterday on the resolution urging M. Karakhan's recall, it was pointed out that the best way was to await an official statement on the Sino-Russian situation. The resolution, therefore, was referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee for further inquiry and report and the Premier and the Minister of Foreign Affairs have been requested to attend the next meeting of the Senate on May 21.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

They wish rather to announce that competitions for women will be conducted under special regulations if entries are received in volleyball, tennis and other events.

"HUMILIATION DAY" IN ICHANG

Large Procession of Scholars with Anti-Japanese Banners But No Boycott

Ichang, May 9.

The Chinese in this town are determined that they will not forget the "National Disgrace," and have apparently organized a society to make arrangements for an annual procession. Most of the scholars at the Government Schools marched in procession through the streets to-day, carrying banners proclaiming their determination never to forget. Each scholar carried a small paper flag, and more than one school had simply adopted the word "Disgrace" as an inscription. Other flags called for a boycott, and also for the return of Port Arthur and Talienwan. The procession marched to a public garden where speeches were made. Bills have been posted broadcast on the walls, calling for a renewal of the boycott. One of the bills says: "Don't buy Japanese goods. Don't travel on Japanese ships: Don't work for Japanese: Don't have any intercourse with Japanese: Don't have a five minutes' enthusiasm."

There was, however, no evidence of any boycott at the Japanese jetty this morning, for coolies were busily discharging a cargo of cotton from a Japanese steamer in the harbour, and bales of cotton yarn were being carried to the godowns of the N.K.K.

A large Japanese cruiser has arrived in port, in addition to the ship on guard.

Arms Smuggler Executed

A gruesome sight of a head exposed to public view was to be seen here the other day. The man had been executed for arms smuggling. He had previously been sentenced to two months' imprisonment on a similar charge, but after release had returned to his evil ways.

There was a heavy thunderstorm here on the night of May 6/7, which, fortunately, stopped the spreading of what might have been a very bad fire. A large bookseller's shop in the heart of the town was burned down, the loss being estimated at about $20,000 but the heavy rain prevented other houses from catching fire.

Junkmen's Appeal for Help

The Wanhsien Chamber of Commerce has taken a bold step. They declare that the Junkmen's Guild has rendered much public service and thereby has incurred some debt. In order to extinguish this debt, the Chamber desires to raise money and has arranged a meeting of Chinese merchants and foreign firms for this purpose. It is proposed that foreign firms should consent to pay a tax of one per cent. on the freight of all cargo carried from Wanhsien, which is to be paid to the Junkmen's Guild to clear the debts. This is regarded as another attempt to "squeeze" on the Upper Yangtze traffic, and it is expected that the foreign firms will resist it. It is said that one or two of the smaller ships have agreed to pay.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE OPIUM MONOPOLY IN KIANGSI

Endeavour to Oust Gen. Tsai

Peking, May 12.

The leading people in Kiangsi are getting together to consider ways and means of ousting Gen. Tsai Cheng-hsun, Tuli of the province, who has recently made himself somewhat unpopular over his opium monopoly. A week or so ago it was reported on good authority that the Chinese Government had decided to recall Gen. Tsai, appointing Gen. Chang Hsi-yuan (Tutung of Chahar) in his place, but nothing appears to have been done. The gentry of Kiangsi are now holding meetings to discuss what steps shall be taken to induce the Government to carry out its chaban against Gen. Tsai and to take drastic measures to remedy the trouble.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FIGHTING AT AMOY

The "Hsing Pao" says that fighting occurred at Amoy between naval men and Gen. Chang Yi's troops.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OPENING OF THE UNION JACK CLUB

Admiral Leveson Expresses the Navy's Appreciation of Shanghai's Hospitality: Navy League and Race Club Enterprise

The Navy was duly established in s new home in Myburgh Road n Monday afternoon, when the ommander-in-chief of the China tation, Admiral Sir Arthur eveson, K.C.B., opened the per- anent Union Jack Club erect- d and equipped by the avy League and the Shanghai ace Club. For many years now he Race Club has made the enter- ainment of Jack ashore its special are, and it is only by reason of the ery handsome support given by he Club that the present enterprise as been made possible. The Union ack Club, some details of which ave already been given in these olumns, should please the sailors mmensely, for in size, appearance nd equipment it provides them ith comfortable and attractive uarters in which to rest and enjoy hemselves, and when everything is n proper shape and the decoration f the building has been completed hey will have a Club worthy of the ervice and a little better than nest. The accommodation includes spacious entertainment hall, dining oom, billiard room with two excel- nt tables, library, writing room, room for Petty Officers, and a owling alley, whilst a bar has also houghtfully been provided. There re several light and airy dormitor- es on the upper floors, with per- anent accommodation for 70 men nd emergency equipment for 00 more. As in the case f the old club, the bar nd kitchen arrangements will e adequate for all needs, enabling he men to get the best of food and efreshment at very moderate harges. The maintenance of the Club is assured, and the best hanks the men can give to its promoters will be by making the fullest possible use of it in prefer- nce to the many less attractive laces clamouring for their esteem- d patronage.

The Opening Ceremony.

With a silver key presented to im by Mr. J. T. W. Brooke (on be- alf of the architects, Messrs. avies & Brooke), Admiral Leve- on opened the main door of the lub promptly at 5.15, and was first o sign the guests' book in the en- rance hall. Visitors, of whom here were many and chiefly repre- entatives of the Navy League and he Race Club, and service men, hen gathered in the entertainment all, where speeches appropriate to he occasion were made.

Mr. Sidney Barton, C.M.G., H.M. Consul-General, began by saying hat the portrait of the late Mr. W. S. Jackson had been given a prominent place in the hall, because it was with Mr. Jackson that the idea of a Union Jack Club for Shanghai originated. That was in 1918, when he was Chairman of the Stewards of the Race Club, and it was in that year that the first Club was opened in Thibet Road. Some 20 years ago, continued Mr. Barton, the Shanghai branch of the Navy League acquired, by subscription amongst its members in Shanghai, a piece of land in the western dis- rict with the idea of providing the men of H. M. Navy with a recrea- ion ground, It was found, how- ever, that the ground was too far away to be of use and so in 1920 it was decided to sell the property, which fortunately had appreciated very much in value since it was bought, and the proceeds of that sale were devoted to the provision of a site for a permanent home for the Club. The sum realized, about Tls. 60,000, was not sufficient to provide for the erection and equip- ment of a building such as they had now, and provision of the greater part of the necessary funds was due to the continued generosity of the Race Club, who decided to continue their support (applause). The Race Club provided some Tls. 80,- 000, on a mortgage on the building, and it was also providing a certain amount for upkeep, while the Navy League had established a guarantee fund which would prevent any pos- sibility of a sudden demise of the Club, should any unforseen emer- gency arise. Control of the Club would be in the hands of a Com- mittee, assisted by representatives of the Navy League and of the Race Club, and they had secured the services of an experienced Naval pensioner to act as resident manager.

Shanghai had owed much to His Majesty's Navy, Mr. Barton went on to say, from the opening of the port up to now, and it was hoped that that building would serve both as a reminder of that debt and an incentive to its continued recognition (applause).

On behalf of the Shanghai Branch of the Navy League and of the Shanghai Race Club, the Consul-General then asked Admiral Leveson to declare the Club open, and accept on behalf of His Majesty's Navy the accommodation and entertainment which the Club aimed to provide (applause).

The Navy Fond of Shanghai.

Admiral Leveson, responding, expressed his own keen pleasure and the thanks of all ranks and ratings for the excellence of the gift of the Union Jack Club and the extraordinarily kind manner in which it had been put forward. To the members of the Navy League and of the Shanghai Race Club he expressed the thanks of the whole British Navy, those present and those who were to come. The generosity of the Shanghai Race Club to the Navy was beyond words, said the Admiral. On every possible occasion the Club had done everything to welcome the sea Service; and not only in Shanghai, for their interest and hospitality had extended as far up the Yangtze as Chungking, where they had started a Union Jack Club (applause). "We know very well indeed," continued Admiral Leveson, "that the Race Club are a grand lot of sportsmen, and among them are two super-sportsmen, Mr. Toeg and Mr. Dallas. Having in a most sportsmanlike manner won the Champions with Columbia, they are going to present the Club with a bust of His Majesty the King, a replica of the one in the Shanghai Club. I congratulate them on their success in the Champions, and on behalf of the Club thank them for this gift.

"Before the war, the Navy was gathered in Home waters ready for events, and now we are pushing out again into the world, and one thing which has struck me very forcibly in coming East again is the kindness and hospitality shown to the Navy by British communities wherever the Navy goes (applause). This has especially been shown in Shanghai. The Navy loves coming here (laughter). Everybody looks forward to coming to Shanghai. The war brought civilians and the fighting services very much side by side. We could not have carried on the war without the civilians, and we cannot carry on the peace without them. They helped us during the war and their help now is clearly shown in this magnificent Club where the sailor ashore will find rest and be assured that everything will be done to make him welcome. I have now pleasure in declaring this Club open for the enjoyment of the sea Service (applause).

Mr. A. W. Burkill, speaking as Chairman on behalf of the Stewards and members of the Race Club, thanked Admiral Leveson for his expression of appreciation, and took the opportunity of thanking the non-British members of the Race Club for the loyal support they had always given to the Union Jack Club (applause). The Race Club membership was composed of many nationalities, and it had always been an intense pleasure to find there were no more loyal supporters taking an interest in the Union Jack Club than his non-British colleagues, and this had been of great assistance when they were running the Club. The Navy League would now carry on, but the Race Club would continue to take an interest in it and, as far as was humanly possibly to promise, the Race Club would see that the necessary financial assistance was forthcoming so that the Club could be conducted as in the past (applause). After paying a tribute to the work of the Secretary of the Race Club (Mr. A. W. Olsen), to whose excellent and energetic work the successful running of the Club has hitherto been due, Mr. Burkill assured Admiral Leveson that what the Club had been able to do for the Navy in Shanghai was in no way commensurate with the debt of gratitude which we owed to the Navy.

Mr. John Prentice also spoke briefly on behalf of the Navy League, impressing upon Admiral Leveson that he must bring his ships oftener to Shanghai so that the Club would be well used.

The company then inspected the Club and afterwards enjoyed its hospitality.

The Building Described.

The new building is six storeys high and presents quite an imposing appearance, marred only by the fact that the front of it has had to be set back from the third floor level upwards owing to the narrowness of Myburgh Road. The ground floor, in addition, of course, to the vestible and entrance hall, will contain a bowling alley. This is not completed as yet, however, for it is thought desirable to wait a few months for the floor to settle, so that the alley may be laid without any danger of uneveness showing itself later. The general clubroom is on the first floor and is some 60 ft. long by 30 wide, containing a bar and dining room 26 ft. by 35 ft. On the same floor are kitchen, pantries, and serving rooms. The Recreation room contains a small platform for concerts, etc., and a cinema chamber. On the second floor are two billiard rooms containing three tables, petty officers' room, writing room and library, also the manager's office, servants' rooms, store rooms and servants' kitchen. The third and fourth floors contain sleeping accommodation normally for 68 men, though in emergency a good many more can be accommodated. A few single and double rooms are provided on the third floor, but the rest is made up of dormitories to accommodate about ten men each. The fifth floor contains a residential flat for the manager, consisting of a living room, two bedrooms bathroom and pantry. There are two flat roofs, one on top of the residence and the other over the front portion at the fifth floor level. The whole building is of fire proof construction faced externally with red brick and Japanese granite plaster. Heating will be by means of hot water radiators. The floors of the principle rooms are of oak, while the hall and the large recreation room have wall panelling of Lauau, nine ft. high. The floor of the entrance hall, stairs landings and corridors are of terrazo.

THE ANXIOUS ARCHITECT

Mr. J. T. W. Brooke in frantic search for the key of the new Union Jack Club.

THE engagement is announced of Miss L. G. Ankoodinoff and Mr. H. J. Walter, assistant manager of Messrs. Rosenberg China Co., both residents of Shanghai.

THE GLENAMOY ASHORE IN A FOG

Passengers Brought to Shanghai: Salvage Tugs at Work

The Glen Line's fine motor vessel, the Glenamoy, is in trouble in the Chusan Archipelago, having gone ashore on Video Island, one of the southernmost of the group, during a fog on Sunday afternoon. She was en route to Shanghai from England at the time and carried a few passengers.

On Monday the stranded vessel was sighted by the China Navigation Co.'s str. Chêkiang, which stood by for a while, but, being unable to do anything else, took off the passengers and brought them to Shanghai on Tuesday. Immediately on receipt of the news of the accident, two of the Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co's. salvage tugs were sent to the aid of the stranded vessel and the last news received was that divers were at work ascertaining the extent of the damage and the possibilities of refloating the vessel.

It is not believed that the Glenamoy has been seriously damaged and there is said to be deep water under her stern.

Rescue Work Hindered.

Heavy seas are delaying rescue work where the Glenamoy went ashore a few days ago in the Chusan Archipelago.

The task of getting her off into deep water was not commenced till high water on Wednesday evening at 5 o'clock. In the meantime cargo was discharged and divers from the Tug & Lighter Co.'s tugs, which went out to the scene, made several attempts to go below and find out what damage has been done. They have been unsuccessful owing to the roughness of the weather, so that it is not known whether or not the vessel is seriously damaged. Those responsible are hopeful for the ultimate success of the venture, but heavy seas are sweeping in over the port side, where the harm has been done. Her stern is in deep water.

Steamer in Dangerous Position

It has been ascertained that considerable damage has been done to the vessel, but hopes are still entertained that the salvage operations will prove successful, though the attempts so far made by the Shanghai Tug & Lighter vessels to draw her off the rocks have failed. The No. 1 and 2 holds are flooded, and there is a danger that when the vessel is refloated pressure of water against the bulkhead may result in the flooding of No. 3 hold, next to the engines. Fortunately, the weather at the moment is fair, and lighters are at work removing cargo, lightening the ship preparatory to further efforts to refloat her.

ENCROACHMENT ON THE FORESHORE

Invasion by Turtles, Snakes and Frogs: Scramble for Turtles by Chinese

Thousands of snakes, bullfrogs and turtles made their appearance at low tide along the Bund on Sunday.

Wave after wave of squirming, greenish brown serpents varying in length from one to, in some cases, six feet attempted to struggle up the bunding. Those which succeeded in getting near the coping were killed by Chinese, who, in defiance of orders not to trespass on that part of the Bund reserved for foreigners, had assembled in crowds during the morning. When sent away by the police they doubled along the sloping bunding, assisting boatmen to kill the snakes which, at the turn of the tide, appeared in still greater numbers and made still more determined efforts to get ashore.

Chinese standing at the edge of the public jetties in the afternoon lowered ropes up each of which a snake immediately coiled and recivel its coup de grace with a bamboo stick.

There was a great scramble at low water for turtles, which were not killed. The Chinese carried them away by the armful, presumably with the intention of killing them for the table or else for "good joss."

An old resident among the onlookers recalled a similar invasion some years ago, but said he did not see such swarms as were landed by the tide yesterday.

"I remember they made their appearance on the Soochow Creek side of the Public Gardens," he went on. "Residents crowded into the garden and the killing of snakes went on for days. One evening I was sitting near the bunding, when a six-footer shot past my shoulder into the Huangpu. After that, I believe, no one ever saw a snake again in the gardens."

THE ANDRE LEBON ARMS SEIZURE

Five Further Arrests: Sampan containing four Pistols and 600 Rounds

Two Chinese members of the Water Police force were on duty in a sampan in the Huangpu off Lay Road on the 8th instant about ten minutes before eight o'clock when they observed three men in another sampan, under suspicious circumstances. They made towards them and as they did so the men threw something over the side. A small box of cartridges was found in the sampan, and the three men, —members of the crew of the M.M.S. André Lebon, on which 50 pictols and several thousand rounds of ammunition were seized last Saturday, were handed over to Superintendent Woodfield, who decided there was insufficient evidence against them, and returned them to their ship on condition they would be handed over to him again if any arms or amunition were found on dredging that portion of thee harbour where the men were seen to throw something over the side. Later that evening a quantity of pistols was found in the spot in question, and the men consequently were re-arrested and handed over to the French Police.

A fourth member of the crew of the André Lebon was arrested in somewhat similar circumstances in the early hours of Friday last, when two Chinese River policemen apprehended him in a sampan and found him to be in possession of four pistols and 600 rounds of ammunition. He also was handed over to the French Police.

Another member of the crew of the str. André Lebon was arrested by Customs Officer Santo on the B. & S. wharf on the 8th instant, and was found to be the possessor of a quantity of pistols and ammunition. He came before the French Courts last Friday morning and the case was remanded.

ART EXHIBITION OPENED

A Fine Display of Local Pictorial Talent in "N.-C. D. N." Building

The Art Exhibition conducted under the auspices of the China Society of Science and Arts which was opened on Tuesday morning was a surprise to most of the visitors both in the extent and quality of the work displayed. A large number, both exhibitors and the public, were present at 11 o'clock when the exhibition was formally opened by Mr. H. E. Gibson, of the exhibition committee, who took the place of Mr. Fessenden who was detained in court and so unable to be present.

Mr. Gibson referred to the unexpected pleasure of being able to open this exhibition of pictures which had been collected by the China Society of Science and Arts to whose officers much credit was due for their efficient work in arranging the details of the exhibition. Mr. Gibson said that this was the first art exhibition since the war, the last having been held in the French Concession to obtain funds for war charities. This marked the start of further art exhibitions for both amateurs and professionals.

The speaker went on to say that he was very much pleased that so many pictures were on view and that he trusted this would be followed by others and that they might always secure so good a place as these rooms lent by the "North-China Daily News." He then declared the exhibition open.

The Committee's Hard Work

Mr. Arthur de C. Sowerby, President of the Society, added that he wished particularly to thank the Committee who had worked so hard and so willingly to bring this Exhibition into being. The service involved, he went on, had been great, as they had been literally inundated with pictures, many more than they had any idea they should receive, over 60 exhibitors being represented with more than 500 pictures. The China Society of Science and Arts, established nearly a year now, had as one of its main objects the fostering and encourgement of the love of art and the production of art.

It was very interesting, the speaker went on, to see how Chinese artists were taking to European art methods. There might be differences of opinion as to whether they were wise to give up their own art forms, but the results as shown here certainly showed their capacity to handle subjects in the Western manner. In thanking the "North-China Daily News" for their courtesy in allowing the use of the rooms for this exhibition, Mr. Sowerby referred to the great difficulty in finding suitable places for such displays and the necessity for some permanent home for future exhibits. After this an opportunity was given for those present to inspect the pictures, meet many of the exhibiting artists, and sample the delicious fruit punch served by the ladies of the committee.

Two Schools of Art.

As may be imagined, it is quite impossible to give an adequate description of the large number of pictures hung. One of the interesting facts brought to the attention of visitors was that there are two schools of art in Shanghai, the Shanghai College of Fine Arts and the Shanghai Teachers' College of Arts, both of them teaching Chinese art according to Western methods. Two extremes were also noted in the work of the Chinese exhibitors, some displaying the painstaking genre of the old Dutch Masters, as in the interiors of Mr. W. L. Yen and others adopting the impressionistic manner as in the sketches of Mr. K. C. Kwan or Mr. Tsoo H. Lee. The latter's study of three Chinese heads, however, was quite different in style.

Entering the hallway, one's attention was focussed upon Mrs. Ronald Macleod's fine oil portrait of Mr. S. Barton, an appropriate reminder of all this artist has done to encourage art expression in Shanghai. The masterly portraits by Mrs. C. J. Ferguson of Dr. J. C. Ferguson and Miss Valerie Honnigsberg were not only excellent in brush work and handling of light values, but suggested the psychology of the sitters. Mr. A. Kets, a Flemish artist, had a group of protraits in bold colouring which attracted much attention.

The Sculpture

The sculpture of Mr. B. Y. Koci showed excellent modelling and an imaginative touch which was very effective. Mr. Chang Yu-Kon's "Labour" epitomized Chinese philosophy in a single head, and Professor Taverelli's study of heads was especially successful.

Mrs. Bertha Lum's Work

Entering the room devoted to water-colours, pastels and drawings the most outstanding exhibit was perhaps that of Mrs. Bertha Lum's prints, with some water colours by her children, Catharine and Peter. Mrs. Lum is an American artist who has studied and sketched for some time in Japan, an experience reflected in the imaginative charm and grace of her exquisitely coloured prints.

Another artist resident in Peking is Mrs. Denham whose collection, although numbering but five pictures, shows unusual versatility of technique. A sense of line and a feeling for colour underlie her work whether it is the arresting reproduction of the Ferry at Western Hills or the decorative treatment of the marble balustrade and Lotus at Pei Hai. From Tientsin Mrs. George Nathan, who is at present completing the mural decorations of the Kailan Mining Administration Building, has brought a few of her paintings, exceptionally lovely in composition and tone. The colouring in her Village Group is particularly happy and the character work in her portrait study shows the wide scope of her talent. The many friends of the Rev. C. E. Darwent will be interested to note that he is exhibiting two groups of Chinese studies.

Among local artists Mrs. E. M. Gull is exhibiting for the first time, although her interest and support of all art movements in China have long been felt. "Where Four Ways Meet" is a delightful picture of the waterways of China, and her other studies show varied technique and interests. Mrs. A. H. Swan has some appealing water-colours, showing sympathy and insight as well as excellent technique. Her "Mending Woman" is a bit of real China. Mrs. Roberts, whose work is so deservedly popular, is represented by a group of ten pictures, none of which have been shown before. Her "Canal" is a strong piece of work but her portrait studies show equal ability in that difficult field. Mr. Peyton-Griffin's water colours deserve special mention, particularly one of mountains at Weihaiwei.

In special fields Mr. Konopleff's arresting crayons show successful accomplishment of by no means simple studies, Mr. Sowerby has given artistic expression to his naturalist's knowledge and Mr. Peimin Peng notably in his charcoal sketches, shows a fine knowledge of anatomy.

Room for Selection

It must be added that, desirable as it is to encourage art production, especially in an initial exhibition, by a generous hospitality, there were some pictures hung which did not deserve wall space. The great majority of the work was of high quality and guided by this first experience the Judges of forthcoming exhibitions will be able to set higher standards for admission.

UNION CHURCH DINNER

Congregational Festivity: Dean Symons on the Spirit of Brotherhood

About 130 members of the Union Church congregation gathered in the gymnasium of the Navy Y.M.C.A. on the 8th instant for the spring social meeting, which, on this occasion, took the form of a congregational dinner. The arrangements for the dinner were in the hands of a committee of ladies, while the members of the newly-formed Young Women's Guild were responsible for the entertainment, providing, under the leadership of Miss Bill, assisted by Mr. Foreshaw, the Choir Secretary, several songs, and, later, leading in parlour games.

The Pastor of the Church, the Rev. A. N. Rowland, presided, and Mr. R. G. Dowie, chairman of the Church Committee, occupied the vicechair. The guests of the evening were the Very Rev. Dean Symons, of Holy Trinity Cathedral, and Mrs. Symons, and the Rev. C. M. Drury, Pastor of the Community Church, and Mrs. Drury.

Our Church.

The first toast of the evening was "Our Church," proposed by the Chairman, who remarked that the secret of a Church's strength and success was the willingness of its members to serve and to stimulate the spirit of helpfulness which would make the Church an asset to each member and to the community. In coupling with the toast the Church officers, and especially the Chairman, the Pastor paid a tribute to the enthusiasm with which Mr. Dowie had taken the lead in Church affairs, and predicted for the Church in the immediate future a period of renewed vigor and usefulness.

Mr. Dowie, in responding, emphasized the necessity of developing two qualities—unity and tenacity. The future of the Church, as of the world generally, was largely in the hands of the young, and in this connexion Mr. Dowie noted with pleasure the recent formation of the Young Women's Guild and Young Men's Guild in Union Church, and expressed the belief that these organizations will prove of great strength to the Church. They had evidence that evening of the enthusiasm shown by the young ladies, and he was sure this was but a prelude to greater service.

Our Neighbours.

The Rev. R. N. Sheppard proposed "Our Neighbours," paying tribute to the spirit of neighbourliness which characterized the community life of Shanghai, and which is particularly noticeable in the religious life of the city. The latest offspring of Union Church was the Community Church, to whom the members of Union Church wished "God-speed" in their scheme to erect a church building to extend the religious life of the community. They also thought of the Free Christian Church, among whose members the Union Church counted many warm friends and devoted workers. Referring to the Anglican Church, Mr. Sheppard spoke of the beautiful liturgy which reminded one of the services in the parish churches of the homeland, and to the breaking down in recent years of the barriers which for so long have divided the Anglicans from other branches of the Christian Church. In Shanghai those barriers had long been removed, and between Union Church and the leaders and members of the congregation at the Cathedral there had existed for many years a spirit of real brotherliness. This was due in no small measure to the personality of the Dean, whom they were glad once again to welcome in their midst. (Applause).

A Common Task.

Dean Symons, in response, remarked that while there was among the various Churches of the Community a diversity of administration—and no one would desire complete uniformity in the expression of religious ideas—there was happily a spirit of real brotherliness because they were all united in the one great bond of service for the one Master.

The Rev. C. M. Drury also responded. The Churches of the community were all engaged in one common task, and the success and welfare of one was the interest of them all. He thanked the members of the Union Church for the evidence of kindly thought and interest in the work of the Community Church, and assured those present that this interest was reciprocated.

The toast of "The Ladies" was proposed by Mr. Pugh, who referring to the work done by the ladies of the Church, complimented the gathering on the inauguration of the Young Women's Guild, whose members had given evidence that evening of interest in the Church, which promised well for the future.

Songs were contributed by Mrs. Beynon and Mrs. Umpleby.

MR. BRODIE A. CLARKE'S 80th BIRTHDAY

Mr. Brodie A. Clarke, one of the really Grand Old Men of the Settlement, last Friday celebrated the 80th anniversary of his birthday. Mr. C. M. Bain remembered the date and when the veteran called at the offices of Messrs. Maitland & Co., he found a party of friends waiting for him. Mr. Bain made a neat little speech, recalling that Mr. Brodie Clarke was the firm's oldest living friend and saying that it would be absolutely impossible for him to enumerate all the acts of kindness for which the firm was indebted to him. The same could be said by almost every one in the Settlement, for Mr. Brodie Clarke was a friend of all.

The company then drank to Mr. Clarke's continued good health and many repetitions of his birthday. In reply, Mr. Brodie Clarke said that he could not wish them better than that they all would attain to 80 years and more, and that when they were his age they would feel as fit as he could assure them he did.

It is pleasing to be able to state that the veteran is looking in the very best health.

EXPLOSION AT JESSFIELD

An explosion in the Jessfield district at 6.53 a.m. on the 8th instant, alarmed the inhabitants of the district, many fearing a repetition of the Riverside Power Plant disaster. Police investigations revealed that it had happened at the factory of the China Edison Co., when a watchman, in filling the hydrogen and oxgen tanks, turned the oxygen into the hydrogen tank and vice versâ, one of the tanks exploding. Most of the windows in the building were shattered, while fragments of the tank and glass were blown over the neighbourhood. One piece, weighing 1,500 lb. hurtled through the roof, travelled some 200 feet and dropped through the roof of the Kung Yih Cotton Mill. Luckily it touched none of the workers, but a piece of wood released by the missile fell on a female worker and injured her slightly. According to the police reports there were no fatalities.

BIG PRICES REALIZED FOR ZIH ESTATE

Messrs. Noel, Murray & Co.'s upper salesroom was crowded on Monday afternoon, when two lots of property belonging to the estate of the late Mr. Zih Chen-foo were offered for sale by public auction on instructions from Mr. S. A. Seth, administrator. The fact that the property was to be sold without any reserve price probably accounted for the large attendance.

For the first lot, land and four houses, Nos. 414-417 Ningpo Road, occupying an area of nearly two mow, bidding started at Tls. 70,000 and rose by thousands until at Tls. 90,000 it fell to the bid of Mr. Zih Dzu-sing.

The second lot was a plot of land at the corner of Burkill and Tatung Roads, together with the buildings thereon, and from an initial offer of Tls. 150,000, bidding rose by fives and tens of thousands until at Tls. 290,000 Mr. Yih Tuck-wei became the owner.

THE Very Rev. Dean Symons, and and Mrs. Symons, were "At Home" on Tuesday afternoon at the Deanery to all members of the congregation, in order to introduce the Rev. Mr. Trivett, the new Sub-Dean, and Mrs. Trivett. There was a very large attendance of friends.

THE PROPOSED FERRY SERVICE

Vessel to Begin Plying in June between Shanghai Pootung and Woosung Anchorage

In connexion with the remarks in our last issue regarding the proposed establishment of a ferry service on the river, we are informed that arrangements have definitely been made for the inauguration of the service by the middle of June.

Only one vessel will be placed in commission at the start, this being the motor vessel Bertha I, built in Vladivostok about four years ago. She is constructed of hardwood and is to have semi-Diesel engines installed before she takes up duty as a ferry boat. The principal services contemplated are the carriage of passengers from and to vessels anchored in mid-stream, at Pootung Wharves, and in the extreme limits of the harbour; the transportation, at night-time, of belated passengers and seamen to vessels lying at Woosung; and the towage of junks, cargo-boats, house-boats, etc. It is the intention eventually to have four vessels, all of a class as high as the Bertha I, engaged in the service.

A limited liability company, registered under the Hongkong ordinances, will, it is stated, be formed as soon as the Bertha I is in service. Meanwhile, shares in the one vessel (64 in all) are being offered at Tls. 93.75 a share, or a total of Tls. 6,000.

Captain W. C. Youngs, who formerly was in command of the well-known Vulcan, has the whole matter in hand at present, though it is stated that one of the biggest local British firms is favourably disposed towards the project, and possibly will have a large interest in the new Company when formed.

LOTTERY TICKETS AGAIN

Chapei Organizations' Protest: Vain Deluding Joys and Swindles Therewith

"They are like peacocks, the feathers of which are most beautiful in adornment, but the meat impossible to eat because of its coarseness." In these terms the Street Unions of Chapei emphasize their point in a petition addressed to the Civil Governor of Kiangsu, Mr. Han Kuo-chun, with reference to the issue and sale of lottery tickets "prize tickets," "lucky tickets" or "fortune tickets." as they are known to the Chinese public. A Chinese equivalent to Aesop's fable of a wolf in sheep's clothing.

In their petition, the Union state that the sale of lottery tickets has been as attractive as a magnet, but in reality it is worse than poison. The Civil Governor has already issued an order for their suppression, but while in some places they have been stopped in others they have continued on a smaller scale. Now, however, (say the writers) the lotteries have been resurrected from the dead, and are being carried on in full swing under such fine names as "savings bonds," "famine or flood bonds," and "charitable bonds," to the harm of the people. "Ignorant and poor people, seeing the lotteries and thinking they will have a chance to win the prizes, sell everything, even their homes and furniture, and buy tickets, hoping thereby to avoid the difficulties of life. What is the result? Every one loses, because they have been cheated and because there are no large prizes. If the practice is allowed to go on and no action taken to stop it, it will grow like a noxious plant and become a danger to the country." We cannot (the writers conclude) look on and refrain from bringing the matter to your notice and from speaking frankly, and we now ask you (the Civil Governor) to order the district officials to suppress the sale and the issue of the lottery tickets and to forbid their issue in future.

THE value of the silver dollar is increasing. On Sunday 192 copper cents or 12 ten-cent pieces could be obtained for a dollar. The Soochow Chamber of Commerce has telegraphed to the Civil Governor requesting him to order the mints to stop manufacturing and selling the coins until a later date, and to take rigourous action in suppressing their illegal importation from abroad.

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN COUNCIL

Second Annual Meeting: Some 80 Missionaries Present Half of Whom Are Chinese

There are about 7,500 missionaries in China living in 713 centres. They belong to over 100 denominations and Christian organizations and work among about 8,000 Chinese congregations. The representatives of this varied group of workers in China are having their second annual meeting at the Young Allen Memorial Church, Quinsan Road. About 80 members are present over half of whom are Chinese.

Dr. David Z. T. Yui, General Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. and President of the N.C.C., is absent on furlough in the United States. In consequence Dr. Harold Balme, Vice-president of the N.C.C. and President of Tsinan University, president at the first meeting and made some introductory remarks. He stated that during the past year there has been most encouraging participation in the work of the Council. There are many, moreover, who are eagerly looking to see the Council justify its existence.

The Council has no authority whatever, it meets as an advisory body simply. Coming from all parts of China its members aim to register common opinion on problems of Christian work and to discover plans whereby they may work together to solve them.

Owing to the absence of many of the members on furlough, etc. quite a large proportion of those in attendance at the second annual meeting are substitutes of some one or other of the original members.

Among the visitors present are the following Dame Adelaide Anderson, Industrial Commissioner from England; Mrs. L. O. Lee, Secretary of the Woman's Board of the Interior American Board Mission; Rev. A. H. Mellen, Agency Secretary of the American Bible Society in Mexico; Mr. Miyazaki, Secretary of the Japan Christian Council; Dr. Witte, Director of the Protestant Evangelical Mission, Berlin; and Dr. D. Willard Lyon, Secretary of the International Committee of the Y.M.C.A.

The speeches of the afternoon which were by Mr. S. P. Chuan and Rev. Murdoch Mackenzie, were on the subject of "The Responsibility of the Council." The speakers dealt with the responsibility of the individual members and the responsibility of the Council to local congregations. Mr. Chuan said that as yet the Chinese Church lacked sufficient national consciousness to enable the Council to secure the full support that it needs. He also pointed out that the general tendency in China is to move something and go somewhere. Sufficient attention, however, is not given to the neeessity of thinking first and particularly that preliminary meditation of the relation of God to the effort put forward. He also feels that there is need for the Council to study how the ideals it puts forth may be fitted to the need of local congregations so that they may be actually worked. He spoke also of an individual Christian experience as a preliminary permanent Christian unity.

Value of "Retreats" for Leaders of the Church: The Time for Active Evangelism

The morning session of the second day of the conference of the National Christian Council was largely occupied with general business and the reports of the secretaries. Emphasis was laid on the great advantage to the secretariat in the return of the Rev. E. C. Lobenstine and much satisfaction was expressed at his promise to accept the position of one of the executive secretaries. The Council received the news of Mr. Lobenstine's consent to take this post with hearty applause. The position of Bishop Roots was referred to and much disappointment was expressed at his approaching retirement from the office of executive secretary.

Bishop Roots gave an address on "The Council's work in the light of one year's experience." The importance of the Council was emphasized as occupying itself with work that could not be accomplished by any Church and it was stated that but for this unique position there would be no place for this National Christian Council.

The matters before the Council for consideration then were enumerated as follows:—The Chinese Church in its relation to the missions and to the needs of China; retreats and evangelism; the country Church; the Christian home; the opium question; higher education; statistics and survey; religious education; a Christian Magazine and other literature. As to which of these questions was the most important at the moment and should be especially emphasized was left to the decision of the meeting.

The afternoon session was opened by a paper on "Retreats and the deepening of the spiritual life of the Church," by Rev. Y. M. Chia. Mr. Chia spoke of the value of "retreats," especially for the leaders of the Church. Experience showed that these retreats, which were not either business or ordinary prayer meetings, were great sources of power. They take their origin from the example of Christ Himself in His own periods of retirement for prayer.

Dr. Hodgkin presented the report of "The Retreats and Evangelistic Committee." He spoke of the importance of these, and of the request of this committee to free him in the coming year as much as possible for this work and to associate with the same effort Dr. C. Y. Cheng, on his return from America. Dr. Hodgkin pointed out that the time had come when the effect of the work carried on in these retreats should show itself in active evangelism.

A number of members spoke very strongly on the value of the retreats.

WEDDINGS

Cooper-White

St. Joseph's Church was beautifully decorated for the marriage of Miss Florence Maude White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Augustus White, to Mr. Thomas Austin Cooper, son of Mrs. A. Cooper, Dulwich, London, the ceremony taking place on Monday afternoon, with the Rev. Father MacDonald officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in an exquisite gown of fine silve lace over white ninon, trimmed with silver ribbon and completed by a bouquet of orange blossoms at the waist, with long strands falling to the hem. The long veil of tulle which formed the train was caught into a becoming cap with a narrow wreath of orange blossom and the bridal bouquet was of pale pink la France roses tied with silver ribbons. The bridesmaids, Miss Beatrice White, sister of the bride, and Miss Monica Cooper, sister of the groom, were picturesquely dressed in pale blue organdie over mauve bouffant style, trimmed with ribbons in pastel shades and narrow ecru lace. They wore large hats of pale blue lace straw and softly tinted flowers and carried bouquets of sweet peas tied with blue and mauve ribbon. Little Miss Joyce Bidwell, the flower girl, wore pale blue organdie, finished with a girdle of blue and lavender forget-me-nots, and a wreath of the same about her head, and carried a silver basket filled with flower petals. The bride's mother wore a handsome gown of grey georgette elaborately trimmed with steel beads and a black cloche trimmed with blue velvet and flowers.

The bridegroom was accompanied by Mr. F. L. Clarke as best man and the ushers were Messrs. N. A. White, C. E. Ollerdessen, A. C. Ellis and J. B. Brown. A reception, attended by a large number of friends and relatives, was held at the home of the bride's parents, "Whitehaven," 21 Avenue du Roi Albert, which was artistically decorated with marguerites and palms. The day also marked the 30th wedding anniversary of the bride's parents, who shared the congratulations of the host of friends assembled to wish the young couple joy. The bride's health was proposed by Mr. J. Ambrose.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Cooper left for their honeymoon, which will be spent at Hangchow. The bride wore a smart costume of white tricotine and a white straw cloche.

Piazza-Taroni

Another wedding was quietly celebrated at St. Joseph's Church on Monday afternoon when Mlle. Lina Taroni, daughter of Mr. G. Taroni of Como, Italy, was married to Chev. Dr. G. Piazza, of the Italian Consulate-General, who is, physician to the Duke di Spoleto. Rev. Father Grech de Cumbo, S.J., performed the ceremony, the witnesses being Chev. E. Denegri and Chev. C. Marmont. The bride wore a chic three-piece costume of brown crêpe marocain, made with a pleated skirt, a blouse of figured crêpe de chine and a short cape. With this she wore a small brown hat, with an effective touch of red, draped with a silk veil of the same shade of brown.

MARCO POLO

The Great Adventurer of Old China and His Romance: Lecture to A. W. C.

"The Great Venetian" was the subject of a lecture given by Mr. Verne Dyson at a meeting of the literary department of the American Woman's Club on Friday last. Mr. Dyson warned his audience at the outset that Marco Polo was first of all an adventurous adventurer, and that the idea of following his travels, or his story, was an impossibility on the whole.

The lecturer said that Marco Polo's visit to China followed on the return of his father and uncle from the Far East, where they had visited Kublai Khan and had been invited to return with Christian missionaries, whose religion had interested the Great Khan; Marco returned with them at the age of 17, and, by adapting himself to the customs and life of the Orient, wearing native clothing and learning no less than four of the principal dialects of China, he became a great favourite at Court.

But the life of the city did not seem to attract such an inborn explorer, so we find Marco travelling all through China, even exploring the islands of the south and the Philippines, whence he brought back to the capital marvellous tales of daring and adventure.

It is not, however, because of these stories that Marco Polo has lived in history; it is because of his detailed descriptions of the Court of China of that day, his accounts of the private life of the Khan's Court, his concubines, wives and the daily routine of that far-off day.

Though it is impossible to follow Marco with any accuracy on his wanderings, a few places with which we are familiar can still be identified—Hangchow is one of them; most, however, bear names that were probably a very rough transliteration of Mongol and Chinese place names, unrecognizable to-day. His great charm lies in his descriptions of the picturesque and unusual: the evil spirits of the Desert which lured travellers to their death, the huge serpent with claws like a lion and a mouth big enough to grasp a man—known to us as an alligator, and the folk tales and superstitions of tent and caravan.

In course of years Kublai Khan grew old and the Polos, not without unexpected difficulties, made once more for their native land on a voyage which lasted for two or three years. But Marco was no prophet in his own country. His tales of travel, of Eastern pomp and Oriental power were discredited and it was not till half-a-century after his death that his writings came into their own.

THE Earl of Cassilis, President of St. Andrew's Society, Glasgow, and Vice-President and Chief respectively of the branches in Edinburgh and London, was entertained by the local society at tiffin at the Shanghad Club on Tuesday. Mr. Colin H. Rutherford was in the chair, and after some interesting speeches, the customary greetings were exchanged between the St. Andrew's Society of Shanghai and those at Home. The Earl is the eldest son of the Marquess of Ailsa, who is Hon. President of the Edinburgh St. Andrew's Society.

AMONG the applications we receive for employment in this office the most frequent come from candidates who claim to be proofreaders. Horace Greeley's remarks in a letter to a similar applicant may prove interesting to them. "A first class proofreader could always find a place in our concern (the "New York Tribune") within a month. It only requires a universal knowledge of facts, names and spelling. My friend, if you are qualified for a proofreader you need never fear. But don't fancy the talent and knowledge required for a mere Secretary of State, President, or any such trust will be sufficient." How many editors could echo Greeley!

OBITUARY

Dr. Louis Pichon

Many old residents in the Far East will learn with very deep regret of the death of Dr. Louis Pichon, which occurred in Paris on Good Friday (April 18) at the age of 84 years, for during a residence of 21 years in Shanghai his untiring devotion to the sick and needy endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. Dr. Pichon arrived in Shanghai in 1871 and remained until 1892, when he retired from practice here. He returned to Shanghai in 1901 for a brief visit, and he was preparing for another visit when the Great War broke out. Until four years ago he had enjoyed perfect health and was as alert as ever, but then he met with an injury to his right leg and became practically an invalid.

He leaves a widow and a daughter, Mme. Baschet, who are both resident in Paris, and a son, M. Albert Pichon, Commissioner of Customs at Hangchow, to whom the deepest sympathy is extended in their bereavement. M. Albert Pichon is leaving for Home this week.

As a result of repeated protests from the Diplomatic Body, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has sent a representative to Nanking, Shanghai and Hangchow to investigate into the illegal taxation of cigars and cigarettes by the Kiangsu and Chêkiang authorities. This official has already arrived here to confer with the local officials.

THE CHINA

Architects and Builders Compendium

CHINA is one of the few countries in the world where no attempt has been made to collect and classify in book form the mass of local information that should be at the elbow of every architect, builder, civil engineer, and prospective or present house or land owner. The demand for such a work has been increasingly felt for a number of years, and the Compendium now published will meet that demand.

Shanghai, in common with many other Treaty Ports of China, is under divided control—International, French and Chinese. In the International Settlement there is a number of Consulates at which land may be registered at varying fees and under numerous regulations. The Compendium classifies these fees and regulations and also contains a mine of information relating to water, gas and electricity rates, costs of local material and labour, etc., that not only every architect must possess, but that is necessary to every prospective landlord and house owner.

Part I.—General Information connected with Land Property and Buildings:—

DIGEST OF MUNICIPAL ASSESSMENT
NOTES ON LAND REGISTRATION AND PURCHASE IN SHANGHAI.
INFORMATION AS TO TAXES AND MUNICIPAL COUNCIL FEES.
CHARGES OF WATERWORKS CO., TELEPHONE CO., AND ELECTRIC LIGHT DEPT.
CONSULAR FEES.
SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL BUILDING RULES.
ARCHITECTS' AND SURVEYORS' CHARGES.
NOTES ON BUILDING CONTRACTS FORMS, LEASE FORMS, MORTGAGE FORMS.

Part II.—Technical Information for Architects, Builders and Civil Engineers:—

MEMORANDA AS TO STRENGTH, WEIGHT AND PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS.
PRICE LIST OF BUILDING MATERIALS AND LABOUR.
INFORMATION AS TO LOCAL CONDITIONS (i.e., SOIL, WATER, ETC.)
REQUIREMENTS AND USEFUL DATA FOR ESTIMATING COST OF BUILDINGS.
NOTES ON ARTESIAN WELLS, ETC.

Part III.—A Directory containing:—

LIST OF ARCHITECTS AND CONSULTING ENGINEERS IN SHANGHAI.
LIST OF ARCHITECTS AND CONSULTING ENGINEERS IN HANKOW
LIST OF BUILDING CONTRACTORS IN SHANGHAI.

Part IV.—Catalogue of Building Material, etc.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX OF ADVERTISERS.
ALPHABETICAL INDEX OF GOODS ADVERTISED.
ADVERTISEMENTS OF BUILDING MATERIALS AND SUPPLIES CLASSIFIED IN SECTIONS.

In addition to the above, the Compendium also contains

Maps of Shanghai and Hankow.

The subscription to the Compendium is TEN DOLLARS MEX. Future editions will be supplied at FIVE DOLLARS per copy provided that the previous edition is returned.

CHINA'S RULES FOR FOREIGN AVIATORS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Of all the [illegible] which have emanated from the [illegible] Peking Government in recent years, [illegible] for Foreign [illegible] fly over China's [illegible] and [illegible] from [illegible] of it. It has the [illegible] story, embarrassing to [illegible] as it may be made extra sure of [illegible] effect of sentiment be found [illegible] Peking and American peoples into the belief that China is a well organized, well governed country and that Peking is still the centre of effective control throughout the land. That of course is part of the insidious campaign which has been on foot ever since the Washington Conference to lead the Treaty Powers into consenting to the readjustment of extraterritoriality, a fair specimen of the type of untruth being dealt with that purpose being its recent statement by a Chinese writer in an overseas magazine to the effect that every day in every way China grows better and better!

It is not worth while going through these flying regulations in detail, it will be enough to ask how the Peking clique proposes to enforce them in any part of the country outside the Peking walls? Nobody knows better than the framers of the regulations that they dare not attempt for a moment to prevent anybody from flying over or walking into any of the ships, dockyards or arsenals in any part of China and that nobody has the power to do so except the particular Tuchun, military governor or bandit who happens to be in control of any particular district for the time being. They already say "Yes" or "No" [illegible] Peking [illegible] as well as [illegible] Peking [illegible] in the [illegible] country.

There are two sides to every question and a law which, in [illegible] necessarily must have the undivided support of the people living in that country and as long as [illegible] remain [illegible] they [illegible] is being [illegible] a law [illegible] to [illegible] this law.

I am, etc.,

OBSERVER.

Fire Brigade Report for March.

The total number of calls received was 44, of which 42 were genuine fires, 36 occurring within the Settlement and 6 outside. The remaining 2 were false alarms.

Excluding the fire at the "Shanghai Times" building, for which the figures are not yet to hand, the damage on assessed property within the Settlement was estimated at Tls. 4,150 (Foreign Tls. 800: Chinese Tls. 3,350), whilst the property at risk was estimated at Tls. 1,676,000 (Foreign Tls. 1,383,000: Chinese Tls. 293,000).

No lives were lost at fires within the Settlement, but 4 persons (including 1 fireman) were injured.

Nine premises were damaged.

In dealing with these calls, Brigade machines travelled approximately 355 miles, 30,905 feet of hose were used, and the time occupied was approximately 663½ hours.

The fires of note attended by the Brigade are as follows:—

March 10th, 11.29 p.m. Ziang King Silk Filature off North Szechuen Road Extension. Outside—This filature, which is in a congested dwelling district in Chapei, to the west of North Szechuen Road Extension, was in flames when the Hongkew Division arrived and a number of the surrounding buildings were already alight. Chapei Brigade were in attendance, but the brunt of the work fell on the Hongkew Division The fire was practically confined to the silk filature; unfortunately there was a heavy loss of life which has already been reported on and which has been published in the Municipal Gazette dated March 20, 1924.
